Mr. Anantakrishna Iyer referred me to Nandubai v. Gan (11). There, Chandavarkar, J., relies on a sentence from Leake on Contracts, 3rd Edition, page 1005. The passage also occurs in the 8th Edition at page 881 and runs thus: "But an order for payment out of a debt accruing due under a contract, as for goods sold, or for work and labour, or the like, is an assignment of a debt which must be stamped as a transfer of property." Buck v. Robson (12) is cited as an authority. On an examination of the case, I find that the letter is not an order of payment but contains express words of assignment. It runs: "I hereby assign to Messrs. R. & Son, etc." It was held that the letter was not an order for payment of money. The point discussed was that the letter related to a debt that may accrue due in future. The Court, following Brice v. Bannister (7) and differing from Ex parte Shellard, In re Adams and Kirby (13), Bacon, V. C., held that it was assignment and it was admitted to evidence on payment of penalty. I do not think that the case supports the statement in Leake or the decision in Nandubai v. Gan (11).

I may point out that there are other difficulties in the way of holding Ex. I to be an assignment. For the letter Ex. I to operate as an equitable assignment, the fund out of which the payment was to be made should be specified and if no fund is specified, the order does not operate as an equitable assignment [Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. IV, s. 801, page 378] citing Percival v. Dunn (14),] where the order was handed to the third party as is the case before me [Ryall v. Rowles (5)] citing Rodick v. Gandell (15).] But a more formidable difficulty is that the assignment of a debt must be of the whole debt. It is true that the word "absolute" in the English Statute does not occur in the Transfer of Property Act. But the effect of the word 'absolute' is that it should not be by way of charge [Durham Brothers v. Robertson (9)] and the omission of the word permits an assignment of the debt by way of security [Mulraj Khatau v. Vishwanath Prabhuram Vaidya (10) see also Vencatachellam Iyer v. Subramanya Iyer (16).] But the distinction between absolute transfers and transfers by way of security has nothing to do with the question whether the assignment should be of the whole or may be of a part. In my opinion the assignment of the debt must be of the whole and cannot be of part. The observations of Chitty, L. J. in Durham Brothers v. Robertson (9) at page 774* are pertinent. "It does not say "or any part of a debt or chose-in-action." It appears to me as at present advised to be questionable whether an assignment of part of an entire debt is within the enactment. If it be, it would seem to leave it in the power of the original creditor to split up the single legal cause of action for the debt into as many separate legal causes of action as he might think fit." The right of assignment is not a Common Law right and is the creation of the Act and I do not think the Act ought to be construed so as to cause such obvious inconvenience to the debtor. Darling, J., expresses a similar doubt in Jones v. Humphreys (17). Lord Alverston, C. J., uses words to the same effect in Brandt Sons & Co. v. Dunlop Rubber Co. (8) and the reversal by the House of Lords in Brandt Sons & Co. v. Dunlop Robber Co. (6) does not affect this portion of the Lord Chief Justice's judgment. The different opinion of Darling, J., in Jones v. Humphreys (17) does not convince me, the decision being reversed by the Court of Appeal (on another point), as the reasons given do not meet the difficulties pointed out by Chitty, L. J., in Durham Brothers v. Robertson (9). He deduces his conclusion from the fact that a future debt may be assigned. In Sabjan Sahib v. Abdul Azeez Sahib (18), Seshagiri Iyer, J., makes an observation that the omission of the word 'absolute' was perhaps intended to settle the conflict in the English decisions. I have already pointed out that the word 'absolute' is used in contrast to 'by way of security' and has nothing to do with the point now raised. An assignment may be of the whole debt by way of security though when the security is worked out, a part only may suffice. There may be a series of assignments each of the whole debt by way of security. The assignees will then be in the position of a number of mortgagees. I am, therefore, of opinion for all these reasons, that Ex. I is not an assignment or a valid assignment.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs of respondents Nos. 1 to 4 (plaintiffs).

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1442 OF 1921.

October 17, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair.

PERIYA KOVIL KELVI APPAN GOVINDA RAMANIYA PERIYA JEEYANGARSWAMI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

MAHOMED ESOOF SAHIB—DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 142, 144—Ejectment suit—"Discontinuance of possession," meaning of—Adverse possession—Article applicable.

The starting point for limitation under Art. 142 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act is the date of dispossession or discontinuance. The words "discontinuance of possession" mean an abandonment of possession by one person, followed by actual possession of another person; for, if no one succeeded to the possession vacated or abandoned, there could be no one in whose favour or for whose protection the Statute could operate. To constitute discontinuance there must both be dereliction by the person who has the right, and actual possession, whether adverse or not, to be protected. The Article has no application to claims which neither in terms nor in substance are claims to possession made necessary by reason of dispossession or discontinuance of possession. [p. 387, col. 2]

Where in a suit in ejectment, the plaint does not show any case of dispossession or discontinuance of possession and the defendant denies the plaintiff's title and sets up a claim by adverse possession, the proper Article applicable is Art. 144 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 389, col. 1.]

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Appeal Suit No. 175 of 1920 (A. S. No. 179 of 1920 on the file of the District Court, Chingleput), preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Poonamallee, in Original Suit No. 149 of 1919.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 11th and 26th of March 1924.

Mr. C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. P. Elayalwar Ayyangar and P. Varadachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant instituted a suit for establishing his right to the suit-land and for recovery of its possession from the defendants. He alleged in the plaint that the land belonged to the devasthanam of which he was the dharmakartha, that it was leased to the father of the defendants and that when possession was demanded of them it was refused. The contesting defendant, viz., the 2nd defendant, claimed the land as his own, as he and his ancestors enjoyed it for more than 50 years as owners without any objection. On these pleadings three issues were raised, namely, (1) Is the plaint lease true? (2) Does the plaintiff possess a valid title to the suit property? and (3) Is the suit barred by limitation under Art. 144 of the Limitation Act? The District Munsif found in favour of the plaintiff on all these issues and gave him a decree. On appeal by the 2nd defendant, the Subordinate Judge held that the property belonged to the plaint devasthanam but that the lease alleged was not proved. As regards the question of possession raised in the case, he set down two points for determination; —Point No. 3:—"Whether the plaintiff was in possession of the land within twelve years before suit?" and Point No. 4:—"Whether he (2nd defendant) and his ancestors have been in adverse possession for over twelve years." On both these points he found against the plaintiff and, in the result, dismissed his suit.

It is argued before me that, in considering the question of limitation, namely, Point No. 3, the Subordinate Judge has erred in applying Art. 142 of the Limitation Act to the facts of this case and that, as regards adverse possession raised in Point No. 4, his conclusion is not based upon the evidence but on pure surmises. I think the contentions of the learned Vakil for the appellant on both these points are well-founded. Article 142 runs as follows:—"For possession of immoveable property, when the plaintiff, while in possession of the property, has been dispossessed or has discontinued the possession twelve years, the date of the dispossession or discontinuance." The starting point for limitation under this Article is the date of dispossession or discontinuance. In M'Donnell v. M'Kinty (1), Blackburn, C. J., states that "the word 'discontinuance of possession' in the Statute means an abandonment of possession by one person, followed by the actual possession of another person; for, if no one succeed to the possession created or abandoned, there could be no one in whose favour or for whose protection the Statute could operate. To constitute discontinuance there must be both dereliction by the person who has the right, and actual possession, whether adverse or not, to be protected." In Smith v. Llyod (2), Baron Parke laid down the law as follows:—"We are clearly of opinion that the Statute applies not to cases of want of actual possession by the plaintiff, but to cases where he has been out of, and another in possession for the prescribed time. There must be both absence of possession by the person who has the right, and actual possession by another, whether adverse or not, to be protected, to bring the case within the Statute. We entirely concur in the judgment of Blackburn, C. J., in M'Donnel v. M'Kinty (1) and the principle on which it is founded." The principle laid down in these decisions was accepted in the well-known case of Trus- tees and Agency Company v. Short (3) which was followed by the Judicial Committee in Secretary of State for India v. Krishnamoni Gupta (4). In the words of Mookerjee, J., in Brojendra Kishore Roy Chowdhury v. Bharat Chandra Roy (5): "Dispossession implies the coming in of a person and the driving out of another from possession. Discontinuance implies the going out of the person in possession and his being followed into possession by another." [See also Charu Chandra Pramanik v. Nabush Chandra Kundu (6)]. Article 142 of the Indian Limitation Act has no application to claims which neither in terms nor in substance are claims to possession made necessary by reason of dispossession or discontinuance of possession [per Heaton, J., in Vasudeo Atmaram Joshi v. Eknath Balkrishna Thite (7)]. The pleadings in this case clearly show that no case of dispossession or discontinuance as above explained was raised by the plaintiff in the plaint, nor was it attempted to be made out by the defendants. The actual issues framed related only to a case of adverse possession and even in the grounds of appeal to the lower Appellate Court the case of the defendants was that they had perfected a title by adverse possession for over twelve years. In these circumstances, I am of opinion that the learned Judge was wrong in having applied Art. 142 to the facts of this case. The true Article to be applied to a case of this kind is, in my view, Art. 144 of the Limitation Act. Though the lease has been found against, it is quite open to the plaintiff to rely on his title for recovery of possession of the suit property. The principle to be applied to the decision of the case is thus stated by Lord Shaw in Secretary of State for India v. Chelikani Rama Rao (8): "Nothing is better settled than that the onus of establishing title to property by reason of possession for a certain requisite period lies upon the person asserting such possession. It is too late in the day to suggest the contrary of this proposition. If it were not correct, it would be open to the possessor for a year or a day to say, 'I am here; be your title to the property ever so good, you cannot turn me out until you have demonstrated that the possession of myself and my predecessors was not long enough to fulfil all the legal conditions.'". This view has been confirmed by the Privy Council in a recent decision in Kuthali Moothavar v. Peringati Kunharankutty (9), where the principle is thus stated at page 890*: "Standing a title in 'A' the alleged adverse possession of 'B' must have all the qualities of adequacy, continuity, and exclusiveness which should qualify such adverse possession. But the onus of establishing these things is upon the adverse possessor." In Jai Chand v. Girwar Singh (10), the facts are thus stated in the judgment:—

"The plaintiff is the zemindar of the village and his title has been established in both Courts. He alleged that the defendant was put in possession for certain purposes unnecessary to mention, by leave and license. The defendant denied the license in his written statement and set up an adverse title. Mr. Baldeo Ram for the defendant says that it is not proved that the license was ever granted or revoked. In our opinion that is now immaterial. The plaintiff based his case upon it, and from the moment that the defendant repudiated the license and set up adverse possession, it was no longer possible for the defendant to rely on the license or to deny its revocation. He was in the position of a trespasser without any defence to the suit unless he succeeded in establishing his title by adverse possession"; he, however, failed to prove that he had been in adverse possession of the land for more than twelve years. It was held by Walsh and Ryves, JJ., that "the plaintiff was entitled to succeed simply on the strength of his prima facie title as zemindar. It was not necessary for him to go further and prove that he had been in actual possession at some period within twelve years previous to the commencement of the suit." The decision in Maddali Venkatarayudu v. Movva Sanka- rayya (11), quoted by the learned Vakil for the respondents, to the effect that Art. 142 of the Limitation Act applies to a case of this kind must be held to have been overruled by the decision of the Privy Council in Secretary of State for India v. Chelikani Rama Rao (8). In the present case as in the Privy Council case, the defendant denied the plaintiff's title and also set up a claim by adverse possession. The fact that the plaintiff has put forward an alternative case of lease also which has been denied by the defendant and found against by the lower Court does not in my view make Art. 142 applicable [See Jai Chand v. Girwar Singh (10) quoted above.] It follows, therefore, that the proper Article applicable to this case is Art. 144. The learned Subordinate Judge has no doubt found that the defendants have succeeded in proving adverse possession for more than twelve years, but in arriving at this finding I am inclined to think the learned Judge seems to have been to a certain extent influenced by his view that the decision in Framji Cursetji v. Goculdas Madhowji (12) seems to be inapplicable to Madras in considering the character of the possession of a temporary nature of a vacant site in view of the conditions prevailing in this Presidency. I may, however, point out that the decision in Framji Cursetji v. Goculdas Madhowji (12) has been followed by this Court in Chokkalinga Naicken v. Muthusami Naicken (13) and Putloor Boyanna v Golusu Asethu (14). I would, therefore, ask the learned Judge to submit a fresh finding on the evidence in the case on the issue: "Whether the 2nd defendant and his ancestors have been in adverse possession of the suit land for over twelve years?" The finding is to be submitted before the 1st August. Time for objection, ten days.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment the Subordinate Judge of Chingleput submitted the following

FINDING.—In this appeal I am directed by the High Court to submit a fresh finding on the issue framed by the High Court, viz., "whether the 2nd defendant and his ancestors have been in adverse possession of the suit land for over 12 years?"

(11) 6 Ind. Cas. 667; 20 M. L. J. 306; (1911) 1 M. W. N. 93.
(12) 16 B. 338; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 703.
(13) 21 M. 53; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 394.
(14) 24 Ind. Cas. 735; 16 M. L. T. 48.

The onus of proof regarding this issue is on the 2nd defendant who has set up this claim of acquiring title by being in adverse possession for over the statutory period. This was not disputed by the learned Vakil for 2nd defendant who at the trial here argued the case first. The question is whether the 2nd defendant had discharged that burden satisfactorily.

The evidence shows that the father of 2nd defendant built a hut some 20 or 25 years ago, that it was destroyed by fire subsequently and that the present tiled house was put up about five or six years before suit (D. W. No. 4). The defence evidence also shows clearly that the hut put up by the father was in the Ilupa tope belonging to the plaint temple. It will be seen from the defence evidence that there was prickly-pear fence all round the tope and that 2nd defendant's father put up the hut at the northern end by removing the prickly-pear fence in that portion. D. W. No. 2 says that there was a thorn fence around on all sides, that Pachamian Sahib removed the fence and built his house in the temple tope lying immediately south of the north veli. No doubt when the house was built a wall was also put up at the northern side. But D. W. No. 3 says that the thorn fence was north of the wall and that 2nd defendant's father put up his shed after removing the thorn fence. It is thus clear that the old hut was put up in the temple tope which was enclosed within prickly-pear fence all round. No doubt the evidence shows that the hut was put up by 2nd defendant's father more than twelve years ago.

The question then is whether on that ground, it should be held that the possession of 2nd defendant's father and 2nd defendant is adverse to the temple. The question whether such possession would be adverse or not may also depend upon the nature of the property. Here the property is a tope belonging to the temple. It is practically a vacant site. It was only a hut that has been put up. That must be with small twigs, etc., to serve a temporary purpose. That being so, I think the cases in Framji Cursetji v. Goculdas Madhawji (12) and Chokkaliga Naicken v. Muthusami Naicken (13) are applicable to the facts of this case.

Moreover the temple has been exercising acts of ownership in the tope. The evidence shows that the temple authorities are now and then cutting Ilupa trees from the tope. D. W. No. 4 says that there are Ilupa trees by the side of the hut and those trees were also cut by the temple authorities. Even the 2nd defendant says that there were trees to the south of his house and the temple might have cut them. It is only in this way that the temple can exercise its rights of ownership over this tope. If a person who has title "has been exercising during the currency of his title various acts of possession, then the quality of these acts even although they may have failed to constitute adverse possession as against another, may be abundantly sufficient to destroy that adequacy and interrupt that exclusiveness and continuity which is demanded from any person challenging by possession the title which he holds Kuthali Moothavar v. Kunharankutty (9).

Even the defence evidence indicates that the temple was exercising rights of ownership. There is also the evidence on the plaintiff's side in support of this fact that the temple was exercising rights of ownership in the tope. That means that the 2nd defendant and his father cannot be considered to have uninterrupted exclusive enjoyment of the house site. There is also the fact that patta stands in the name of the temple and the temple is paying cist. The 2nd defendant or his father was never paying any cist. That only indicates that the temple only wants to assert its title and possession. There is no evidence as to when the hut was burnt down or that immediately after the hut was burnt the new house was built. Some time might have elapsed between the destruction of the hut and the construction of the new house. Having regard to the nature of the property and the rights of ownership exercised by the temple; we must take it that when the hut was burnt, the 2nd defendant abandoned it and it must go to the temple who has got title. Moreover the defence evidence is that the new house was built not on the same site but on a site a few feet south of it (D. W. No 4). So it is clear that the new house was built not on the old site. The new house was built only five or six years ago and 2nd defendant cannot claim to have acquired title by being in possession for over the statutory period. In any view of the case, I do not think that 2nd defendant has made out that he or his father was in uninterrupted exclusive possession of the suit site for over the statutory period. I find the issue against 2nd defendant.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing this day after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The finding of the lower Court has not been objected to by the respondent. He does not appear. I accept the finding and reverse the lower Court's decree and restore the decree of the District Munsif with costs here and in the Court below.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 73—Execution of decree—Realisation of assets—Subsequent application for rateable distribution, maintainability of.

Under s. 73 of the C. P. C. every person who has applied, previous to the realisation of assets, to the Court for execution of the decree obtained by him is entitled to rateable distribution. The section is not rendered inapplicable merely because the application for rateable distribution is presented subsequent to the realisation of assets.

Somasundaram Chetty v. Thirunarayana Pillai, 25 Ind. Cas. 592; (1914) M. W. N. 738 and Muthiah Chetty v. Alagappa Chetty, 47 Ind. Cas. 296; (1918) M. W. N. 520; 24 M. L. T. 179, distinguished.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Coimbatore, in C. M. P. No. 1008 of 1924, in O. S. No. 1257 of 1922.

Mr. S. Nagaraja Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. Markandeyalu, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I think this petition ought to be allowed. The District Munsif in the Court below was apparently under the impression that he had no jurisdiction to order payment out on the application of the petitioner for the reason that his application for rateable distribution was presented subsequent to the realization of the assets. The learned District Munsif obviously overlooked the provisions in s. 73, C. P. C. that evey person that had applied to the Court previous to the realization of assets for execution of the decree obtained by him was entitled to come in under that section and have rateable distribution. The learned Vakil for the respondent has drawn my attention to two decisions of this Court. The first is the one reported in Somasundaram Chetty v. Thirunarayana Pillai (1). In that case this Court refused to interfere because it was of opinion that a regular suit was in the circumstances of that case the more efficacious remedy having regard to the fact that the rights of parties not before this Court might conceivably be affected by any order that may be made behind their backs. There is no such difficulty here because in the present case when the petition was filed, no payments had been ordered to be made, and I do not now propose to make the order finally. The other case cited by the learned Vakil for the respondent is that reported in Muthiah Chetty v. Alagappa Chetty (2). There are certain observations in the course of the judgment in that decision to the effect that if an enquiry should be found necessary for determining the rights of particular judgment-debtors in the fund applied for to be distributed, the appropriate procedure would be not under s. 73 but in a regular suit. No such enquiry is or could at all be necessary in this case, because both the judgment-debtors in the suit in which the property was sold were judgment-debtors also in the suit in which the decree was obtained for which rateable distribution is now applied for. Both of them being liable for the entire decree of the petitioner no enquiry into any share or interest of particular judgment-debtors would be necessary. The lower Court having dismissed the petitioner's application on the misconception that an application must have been made by him before distribution of assets, the order should be set aside; and I hereby set aside the order and remand the application to the lower Court for being heard if necessary after notice to all the parties concerned. The respondent will pay the petitioner's costs of this civil revision petition.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLVII, rr. 1, 4—Review—Discovery of new and important matter—Want of knowledge, strict proof of—"Other sufficient case," whether can be relied on.

On an application for review under O. XLVII, r. 1, C. P. C., on the ground of discovery of new and important matter, the Court has no power to grant a review without calling for strict proof that the new matter was not within the knowledge of the petitioner at the time of the original hearing. Nor can in such a case the Court grant a review "for other sufficient reason" and evade the requirements of r. 4 (2) by adopting as its own reason without any inquiry, the petitioner's reason for seeking review.

Tirbeni Kunwar v. Mohan Lal, 66 Ind. Cas. 558; (1922) A. I. R. (A.) 366, doubted.

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Kistna at Ellore, dated the 24th July 1924, in C. M. P. No. 107 of 1923, in A. S. No. 549 of 1921.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. Venkatarayaliah and L. Venkatanarasiah, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There can be no doubt from 1st respondent's petition that the reason put forward by him for seeking review was the discovery of new and important matter, which was not within his knowledge, when the decree was passed. The lower Appellate Court granted the review, because of its view that this discovered matter was new and important. This it had no power to do without calling for strict proof of the allegation that the new matter was not within the knowledge of 1st respondent when the decree was passed, and the Judge has not called for any proof at all.

The 1st respondent argues that the Judge for himself decided that the most important matter was 'other sufficient reason' within the meaning of r. 1 of O. XLVII of the C. P. C. The Judge does not say so, nor was there before him anything else but the discovery of this new and important matter. To hold that in such a case the Judge can evade the requirements of r. 4 (2) and absolve the applicant from his statutory duty of producing strict proof of his allegation by adopting as his own reason, without any enquiry, the applicant's reason for seeking review, is in our mind tantamount to abolishing r. 4 (2) (b) altogether and we are not prepared to adopt such a view. To allow that any Court may, at any time after the decision of a suit, re-open it by merely stating that an important document has been ignored or since discovered is to render impossible any finality in litigation. If the ruling in Tirbeni Kunwar v. Mohan Lal (1) implies such a view, we are not prepared to follow it.

We must hold that the lower Court's order is a breach of O. XLVII, r. 4 (2) (b) and was, therefore, without jurisdiction. It is, therefore, set aside. In the absence of any record to show whether or not any evidence read by respondent was shut out, we think it proper to direct that the application be re-heard and the provisions of r. 4 (2) (b) strictly observed.

Appellant will get his costs throughout upto date in both Courts.

V. N. V. Appeal accepted.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 55 —Transfer of all available assets by insolvent in favour of creditor, validity of—Good faith—Burden of proof —Principles applicable.

If a trader assigns all his property, except on some substantial contemporaneous payment, or some substantial undertaking to make payment in future, the assignment amounts to an act of bankruptcy and is void against the creditors of the assignor because nothing is left with which to carry on his business, whereas if he had received substantial assistance, something would have been left to carry on the business. When a transaction is challenged under s. 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the onus of proving that the transfer was in good faith and for valuable consideration lies on the transferee. [ibid.]

Per Buckland, J.—In considering the effect of a transaction which is challenged under s. 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the facts must be considered in the light of the law of bankruptcy the object of which is to ensure rateable distribution of an insolvent's property among his creditors. A transaction which may in other circumstances be free from all taint may amount to an offence when it is established that it contravenes the law of bankruptcy. [p. 399, col. 1.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 14th August 1923.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by the Official Assignee from the judgment of my learned brother Greaves, J., delivered on the 14th August 1923, whereby he dismissed an application by the Official Assignee for an order, that a deed, dated the 14th July 1920 executed by or on behalf of a Firm of Mogi & Co., in favour of the Yokohama Specie Bank, Limited, might be declared void and inoperative.

The application further was for an account of the Bank's dealings with the assets of the insolvents under the said deed, for an order for the payment to the Official Assignee of the sum found due, for a declaration that the Bank was not entitled to retain a sum of Rs. 20,000 and for an order for the payment of the said sum to the Official Assignee.

The material facts are as follows:—

Messrs. Mogi & Co., were a Japanese firm with a Head Office in Japan, carrying on business in Calcutta and Bombay, and in other parts of the world.

It appears from the evidence of the Sub-

Manager of the Yokohama Specie Bank in Calcutta that in February and March 1920 there were strong rumours about the financial instability of Messrs. Mogi & Co., and in June 1920 the Calcutta Branch of Mogi & Co., was closed and the Manager of the Branch went to Japan. Mogi & Co., were at that time indebted to the Calcutta Branch of the Yokohama Specie Bank to the extent of about Rs. 1,38,000.

On the 28th June 1920, Messrs. Curlender & Co., instituted a suit against Mogi & Co., in this Court, claiming Rs. 1,84,000 as damages for alleged breaches of certain contracts made by Messrs. Mogi & Co.

An order was made by this Court at the instance of Messrs. Curlender & Co. for the attachment of Mogi & Co.'s assets at Bombay and on the 28th September 1920 certain assets belonging to Messrs. Mogi & Co. at Bombay were attached in accordance with the order.

In October 1920 the Yokohama Specie Bank made an application in the Bombay Small Cause Court to set aside the attachment on the ground that Messrs. Mogi & Co., had executed a deed, dated 14th July 1920, whereby they had hypothecated the assets, which had been attached, in favour of the Bank, in pursuance of which the Bank had entered into possession. The assets consequently were released from attachment.

On the 22nd November 1920 the Bombay Office of Messrs. Mogi & Co., was closed.

On the 10th February 1921, Messrs. Mogi & Co., were adjudicated insolvents upon the petition of Curlender & Co. At the date of the deed, viz., 14th July 1920, Mogi & Co., were indebted to the Bombay Branch of the Yokohama Specie Bank to the extent of about Rs. 3,76,000 and at the date of the insolvency, viz., 10th February 1921, to the extent of about Rs. 2,75,000. Notice of the application, which gave rise to these proceedings, was dated the 28th May 1923. This Court was informed by the Official Assignee that Messrs. Curlender & Co., had made a claim in the insolvency of Mogi & Co., for the amount of the damages claimed in respect of the alleged breaches of the above-mentioned contracts and one or two other creditors had sent in their claims.

The Official Assignee informed the Court that he had not up to the hearing of the appeal admitted any claim—in fact no steps had been taken beyond the above-mentioned application, as the Official Assignee could not ascertain that there were any assets in India except those which are the subject-matter of this application.

He, however, stated that he had examined the claim of Curlender & Co., and was prepared to admit it, and I understand that he in fact signed the claim as being admitted during the hearing of the appeal.

This application, which is now under consideration, was made under s. 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909.

This section provides as follows:—

"Any transfer of property, not being a transfer made before and in consideration of marriage, or made in favour of a purchaser or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration, shall, if the transferor is adjudged insolvent within two years after the date of the transfer, be void against the Official Assignee."

The learned Judge came to the conclusion that the Bank had shown that the transfer of property involved in the deed of 14th July 1920 was made in good faith and for valuable consideration and that it was not void against the Official Assignee. Consequently he dismissed the application.

In this Court it was argued on behalf of the appellant that the transfer of property involved in the deed of 14th July 1920 constituted an act of insolvency and that the Bank were fully aware of the insolvency of Mogi & Co., at the time the deed was executed. Under these circumstances, it was urged that the transfer could not be considered as having been made in good faith and for valuable consideration within the meaning of s. 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act. On the other hand, it was argued on behalf of the respondents that the transaction was for valuable consideration by reason of the advances which had been made by the Bank to Mogi & Co., that it was made honestly inasmuch as the Bombay Branch of the Bank had no reason to think that Mogi & Co., were in financial straits at the time the deed was executed, that even if the transfer amounted to a preference of the Bank over the other creditors, it should not be deemed fraudulent inasmuch as Mogi & Co., were not adjudicated insolvent within three months after the date of the deed: and reference was made to the provisions of s. 56 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

In my judgment the Bank must have known in July 1920 that Messrs. Mogi & Co., were insolvent.

I have already mentioned that there were rumours in Calcutta as to the financial instability of Mogi & Co., in February or March 1920. In June 1920 the Calcutta Office of Mogi & Co., was closed and the Manager went to Japan, leaving a large overdraft at the Bank.

It would be unreasonable to assume that those in control of the Yokohama Specie Bank at Bombay were not made acquainted with this fact. In my opinion they must have known of it. In July 1920 the Bank at Bombay demanded payment of the overdraft which amounted to about Rs. 3,76,000. They were aware, as appears from the affidavit of Elizo Wakabayashi, the Accountant of the Bombay Bank, that Mogi & Co., could not meet this liability.

In my opinion, the evidence shows that the Bank succeeded in obtaining a pledge of all the available assets of Mogi & Co., at Bombay.

Apparently Mogi & Co., had two warehouses and an office at Bombay.

By the deed of the 14th July 1920 Mogi & Co., pledged to the Bank all the goods lying in the two warehouses and the goods which were lying in Port Trust Warehouse.

In addition to this security the Bank obtained a pledge of all the goods, furniture articles and things lying in the office shop and godown at 178 to 182, Jackeria Musjid Road. The Bank on the 14th July 1920 placed its representative in possession of these premises and a notice was put up that the Yokohama Specie Bank as mortgagee was in possession.

It is to be noted that the security was for Rs. 50,000 and for other moneys then due or which might thereafter become due, but there was no contemporaneous advance, nor was there any undertaking to make any advances in the future, with a view to assisting Mogi & Co., in the carrying on of their business.

The deed of 14th July 1920 provided that the Bank's representative should enter into possession and that Mogi & Co., should obtain the previous permission of the Bank before they sold any of the goods and should pay the prices received from the purchasers to the Bank's representative.

What happened in fact after the deed of 14th July 1920 is clear from the account which has been exhibited and from the evidence in the case.

The goods were sold from time to time, the proceeds were paid to the Bank, and the amounts were credited to the account of Mogi & Co. Two sums of Rs. 3,500 and Rs. 3,700 were debited to the account of Mogi & Co., which appeared to have been on account of customs. It was not seriously disputed that these payments were made for the purpose of obtaining delivery of goods from the customs, in order that they might be sold, and the proceeds paid to the Bank.

There was another small sum, viz., Rs. 422-14-0 debited to the account which apparently was a payment to Haridas & Co., as to which no evidence appears, and a further sum of Rs. 3,950 in respect of an unpaid cheque, the amount of which appears on the credit side. It is obvious, therefore, that after 14th July 1920 Mogi & Co. were not carrying on their business in the ordinary way. It appears beyond doubt that after the Bank entered into possession, the goods were sold, and the proceeds were paid to the Bank with a view to paying off the Bank's debt: in effect the business was carried on merely for the purpose of realizing the security, given to the Bank, and re-paying the Bank as far as the proceeds of the sales would provide. In fact the Bank's debt appears to have been reduced by these means from about Rs. 3,76,000 in July 1920 to about Rs. 2,17,000 in June 1921.

It appears that Mogi & Co.'s Bank in Japan had suspended payment and that the firm in Japan was in difficulties, though it was stated in a letter sent to Messrs. Curlender & Co.'s Solicitors in August 1920 by Mogi & Co.'s Solicitors that it was hoped the difficulties were only temporary.

There is no evidence as to the exact position of the firm in Japan, though it appears that in 1922 a body called "The Re-Adjustment Committee of Mogi & Co," consisting of the representatives of certain Banks, had the affairs of Mogi & Co., in hand.

In view of the evidence I am of the opinion that the Bank must have known in July 1920 that Mogi & Co., were in serious financial straits, that they could not pay their debts as they became due, and that they were in fact insolvent.

The Bank, therefore, determined to obtain, and succeeded in obtaining, control over all the available assets in India of Mogi & Co. This was achieved by the deed of the 14th July 1920.

Those in control of Mogi & Co.'s business at Bombay must have known that they were insolvent. They pledged the whole of the assets which were available in India to the Bank; they obtained no further advances to enable them to carry on the business at Bombay; they obtained no undertaking from the Bank, express or implied, to make any further advances to enable them to carry on their business. They had nothing left with which they could carry on their business, and they had no prospect of carrying on their business further.

In point of fact the firm in Bombay was closed in November 1920: the debt due to the Bank at that time had been reduced by means of the realizations to about Rs. 3,13,000. In my opinion the Bank must have known that the assignment of July 1920 would defeat or delay the other creditors in India of Mogi & Co. The Bank by that deed succeeded in obtaining control of substantially all the assets of Mogi & Co., in India; Mogi & Co., in Japan were in difficulties owing to the suspension of their Bank; what possible prospect was there of any creditor in India having his debt or any part thereof paid by Mogi & Co. ?

Judging from the letter of 10th July 1920 from Mogi & Co., Bombay, to Curlender & Co., Calcutta, written only four days before the assignment to the Bank, it appears that a representative of Mogi & Co., had recently seen Messrs. Curlender & Co., with reference to their claim, which Curlender & Co., must have been pressing at that time. Their suit had been instituted on the 28th June 1920 and an order for substituted service was made on the 26th July 1920. The dates are significant and, in my opinion, it is not unreasonable to assume that the Bank at Bombay as well as Mogi & Co., knew of the institution of Curlender & Co.'s suit in Calcutta as alleged by Curlender & Co.

If this be so, they must have realized that if they were going to obtain control of Mogi & Co.'s assets, it was time for them to do so.

There is no doubt that Mogi & Co., were adjudged insolvent within two years of the deed of 14th July 1920; and, the question therefore, arises whether on the facts of the case the Court should hold that the transfer of property, created by the deed of 14th July 1920, was made in good faith and for valuable consideration within the meaning of s. 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act.

It has not been disputed that the onus of proving that the transfer was in good faith and for valuable consideration was on the Bank.

The learned Judge has found that the Bank discharged that onus.

With much respect to the learned Judge I do not hold the same opinion.

This is not a case in which the decision of the learned Judge depended upon oral evidence—the evidence is contained in affidavits, and, therefore, this Court is in as good a position to judge of the facts as the learned Judge was.

Indeed there is little dispute as to the facts: the question really depends upon the inference which should be drawn from the facts of the case.

In Khoo Kwat Siew v. Wooi Taik Hwat (1), Lord Hobhouse stated the well-known rule of law as follows at page 231* :—

"The well-known rule of law is, that if a trader assigns all his property, except on some substantial contemporaneous payment, or some substantial undertaking to make payment in futuro, that is an act of bankruptcy, and is void against the creditors and the assignee, simply because nothing is left with which to carry on his business, whereas if he receives substantial assistance, something is left to carry on the business."

This statement of the law was made before the passing of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act of 1909, but I have no doubt that the rule as stated by Lord Hobhouse prevails at the present time.

In this case Mogi & Co., assigned all the assets, which were available in India, to the Bank. They obtained no contemporaneous payment or any undertaking to make any payment in futuro to enable them to carry on their business, and, as already stated, I can arrive at no other conclusion except that the deed of 14th July 1920 was executed to enable the Bank to realize all the assets of Mogi & Co. which were available, both parties knowing that there was nothing left with which the business of Mogi & Co., could be carried on and that there was no prospect of the other creditors of the firm being paid any part of their debts.

In considering whether the transfer involved in the deed of 14th July 1920 was made in good faith and for valuable consideration within the meaning of s. 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909, it is not possible, in my judgment, to leave out of consideration the insolvency of Messrs. Mogi & Co., and the law which applies in an insolvency, and the question is whether the transaction is one which the law will allow.

If there were no question of insolvency involved, and the law relating to insolvency had not to be considered, it might be possible to hold that the transfer was made in good faith and for valuable consideraiion.

In this case, however, Messrs. Mogi & Co., were adjudicated insolvents in February 1921, about seven months after the deed of 14th July 1920 was executed, and, in my judgment, both the Bank and Messrs. Mogi & Co., must have known in July 1920 that if any creditors were to take proceedings, the adjudication of Mogi & Co., as insolvents would be inevitable.

Having regard to these facts, in my judgment, the transaction is one which the law relating to insolvency does not permit and the Court ought not to hold that the transfer of property, created by the deed of 14th July 1920, was made in good faith and for valuable consideration within the meaning of s. 55.

Consequently, in my opinion, the deed was void as against the Official Assignee.

The result is that, in my judgment, this appeal must be allowed, the decision of the learned Judge must be set aside, and a declaration must be made that the deed is void as against the Official Assignee.

There will be order as prayed in para. (b) of the petition.

This Court expresses no opinion as to the sum of Rs. 20,000 mentioned in para. (c) of the petition as we are not in possession of sufficient materials to deal with it.

This matter should be investigated in the taking of the accounts: liberty to apply to the learned Judge taking insolvency matters.

The respondents must pay the appellant's costs in respect of the appeal and in respect of the proceedings before the learned Judge on the Original Side.

Buckland, J.—The question involved in this appeal concerns the right of the Official Assignee to certain assets in the hands of the respondent Bank as assignee of Mogi & Co., insolvents.

Mogi & Co., were Japanese traders who carried on business among other places at Bombay and in Calcutta.

In the month of June 1920 they closed their business in Calcutta owing the local branch of the respondent Bank the sum of Rs. 1,38,100.

On the 14th July they executed an assignment in favour of the respondent Bank of goods and office furniture in Bombay as security for money due and for future advances and put the Bank in possession.

Subsequently the Bank realized various sums on the goods purporting so to have been hypothecated to them which they placed against the insolvents' overdraft.

On the 22nd November Mogi & Co., closed their office in Bombay owing the local branch of the respondent Bank a sum of about three lakhs of rupees.

On the 10th February 1921 Mogi & Co. were adjudicated insolvents in Calcutta on the petition of Curlender & Co., who claim to be creditors for the sum of Rs. 1,84,000. On that date they owed Rs. 2,75,427-6-6 to the Bank in Bombay.

The Official Assignee now claims that the monies realized by the Bank should be available to the creditors of the insolvents on the ground that the inrtrument of the 14th July 1920 is void under s. 55 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909.

It is alleged that the goods hypothecated comprised in effect the whole of the insolvents' available assets, that there was neither any promise to make further advances nor were any further advances made in fact.

My learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves has held that the burden of showing that the transfer was made in good faith and for valuable consideration lay upon the Bank and that the Bank has discharged it. He observed that there was nothing to show that all the property of the insolvents was hypothecated.

These findings of fact have been challenged on appeal.

It will be convenient first to consider the evidence as to the allegation that all the property of the insolvents was hypothecated, for unless this is established it is conceded that the appeal must fail.

The instrument of the 14th July specifies :—

"The goods lying at this date in our warehouse in Building Nos. 361 to 369 situated in Jackeria Musjid otherwise known as Bhuj Moholla and also Port Trust Warehouse as per list herewith.

The goods lying at this date in our warehouse at Chinch Bunder Road on the ground floor of the house No. 18 as per list herewith.

The goods, furniture, articles and things lying in our office shop and godown at Nos. 178 to 182, Jackeria Musjid Road, as per list herewith."

In order to appreciate how some of the evidence to which I shall refer is to be found on the record, it is necessary to state that Curlender & Co., instituted on the 28th June 1920 a suit in this Court to recover the sum which they allege to be due to them.

On the 27th August 1920 an order was made for attachment before judgment whereupon certain goods were attached by the Court of Small Causes in Bombay. The respondent Bank applied to have the attachment removed on the ground that it was in the position of mortgagee in possession. In the course of such proceedings evidence was taken and has been imported as evidence into these proceedings.

In June 1922 Jumukichi Yamamoto, the Sub-Manager of the Bank in Calcutta, was examined before the Registrar in insolvency. In the course of his deposition he said that in February or March 1920 there were rumours about Mogi & Co., and his Bank became cautious how it dealt with them.

As we know the insolvents left Calcutta in June leaving a considerable overdraft at the local branch of the Bank, it is incredible that the circumstances were not communicated to the Bombay branch.

The Accountant of the Bank in Bombay has made an affidavit in which he says, among other things, that in July Mogi & Co., were not in a position to pay their debt to the Bank and asked for time and offered to pledge the goods covered by the instrument impugned.

That the insolvents had only the goods contained in the warehouses specified appears from the evidence of Toyokachi Hasegawo in the Bombay Small Cause Court where he said that on the 17th July the Bank sent their representative to take possession of goods in their office and shop, and in answer to a question by the Court particularised two godowns about 5 or 10 minutes' walk from the office.

There is no oral evidence that the insolvents had any property other than that comprised in the document, and so far as appears from the record no desire or attempt to produce any such evidence was expressed or made.

Turning to such documentary evidence as is available it appears that on the 20th August 1920 when Curlender & Co., were pressing Mogi & Co., the Manager of Mogi & Co., in Bombay instructed his Solicitors to write to Curlender & Co.'s Solicitors in the hope of inducing the latter to persuade their clients to stay their hands. The letter says that:—

"Mr. Okhura informs us he has had express instructions to carry on the business with a view to effecting a settlement of all claims as soon as finances have been arranged in Japan; the temporary difficulties in which the firm finds themselves being due to the suspension of their Bank in Japan."

This makes it clear that the respondent Bank did not intend further to finance Mogi & Co. The letter adds that all these (silver and other goods) stocks are under lien to Banks, which excludes the existence of unhypothecated goods and there is no suggestion that any Bank other than the respondent Bank was interested, were it material to enquire.

A subsequent letter dated the 23rd August, similarly addressed, emphasises though it does not add to the information. The statement that Mogi & Co., were not in a position to furnish security can only mean that they had no goods which they had not already hypothecated.

After the Bank had entered into possession it made some advances to the insolvents which were debited to the latter's account, but these were only for the purpose of enabling them to clear and realize the goods in the Port Trust Warehouse. This appears from details given in the accounts and from a statement in the affidavit of the Sub-Manager of the Bank in Calcutta. There is no evidence whatever of any advance made for the purpose of enabling the insolvents to carry on their business, nor, indeed, is there any evidence that the Bank promised to make such advances, and the transfer contains no such stipulation.

Upon the evidence I think it is clear that Mogi & Co., purported to and did hypothecate all their available property to the Bank. The learned Judge seems to have been impressed by the subsequent advances, but as I read the evidence those were made solely for the purpose of enabling the Bank to realize so much of their security as without money could not be realized at all, and were not advances upon which the Bank can rely for the purpose of putting a favourable complexion upon the transaction and defeating the claim of the Official Assignee.

Had the learned Judge taken the same view of the facts it is possible that he would have decided in favour of the appellant, for he appreciated that the case must depend upon s. 55 of the Act. His observation that a good deal of confusion has arisen by seeking to import into the provisions of s. 55 considerations which would arise, were the application made under s. 56, indicates that the case was argued before him, as here, that if once it could be shown that the facts established that which would have been a preference within s. 56, it necessarily followed that it was within s. 55.

It may be that facts, which would justify an order under s. 56, were the circumstances otherwise appropriate for such an order to be made, are facts which would bring a case within s. 55, but this appeal must be decided upon the words of s. 55. Over and over again has it been enunciated that all that Courts have to do is to construe or apply the words of the Statute and all that we need do is to decide whether or not the transfer impugned was made in good faith for valuable consideration.

Though a considerable number of authorities were cited in the course of the argument I do not think that I need refer to more than a very limited number.

In Khoo Kwat Siew v. Wooi Taik Hwat (1), Lord Hobhouse stated the rule as follows:—

"The well-known rule of law is, that if a trader assigns all his property, except on some substantial contemporaneous payment, or some substantial undertaking to make payment in futuro, that is an act of bankruptcy and is void against the creditors and the assignee, simply because nothing is left with which to carry on his business, whereas if he receives substantial assistance something is left to carry on the business."

We have not to consider whether Mogi & Co., were guilty of an act of bankruptcy as such, but whether, as observed, the transfer was made in good faith and for valuable consideration. Had other circumstances, e.g., the period which elapsed between the transfer and the order for adjudication, admitted of an application under s. 56, there can be no question that, notwithstanding the proviso to the section, the transaction must have been held to have been within that section. The further question then arises whether such a transaction can be said to have been entered into in good faith and for valuable consideration so as not to offend against s. 55.

In Ex parte Chaplin, In re Sinclair (2), Cotton, L. J. observed:—

"Still, in my opinion, if persons will take from a man who is in difficulties a deed of this description, which has the effect of withdrawing, and is intended to withdraw, all the property of the debtor from the legal process which his creditors have a right to enforce against him, and bankruptcy ensues, the deed is void under the bankruptcy law. It is fraudulent as well as void, whatever may have been the view of those who were engaged in the transaction that it might be the best thing for the debtor, or that it might afford an effectual way of paying the creditors."

This is more general in its application, and it carries the matter a stage further.

In Tomkins v. Saffery (3), Lord Blackburn had occasion to consider the meaning of the words "in good faith and for valuable consideration," used in the proviso to s. 92 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 which deals with fraudulent preferences.

I will pause here to refer again to Lord Hobhouse's judgment in which in the paragraph immediately preceding that which I have already quoted, he deals with the use of the word "fraudulent" in this connection. His Lordship said:—

"It is better not to use the term 'fraudulent' in such a case, though that term has, by rather an unhappy use of language, been applied by Courts of Equity to transactions which are not at all dishonest in their nature, but are only such as the law will not allow. In this case there is no suggestion from beginning to end of there being anything dishonest in the transaction. The sole question is as to its legal validity."

From this and from a passage in Lord Blackburn's speech I infer the principle which is to be found running through all the authorities that in considering the effect of a transaction of this nature the facts must be considered in the light of the law of bankruptcy, the object of which is to ensure rateable distribution of an insolvent's property among his creditors. A transaction, therefore, which may in other circumstances be free from all taint becomes an offence when it is established that it contravenes the law of bankruptcy.

This is what I think Lord Blackburn had in mind when he said :—

"It comes round to this, that I think (I am stating it in my own words, but it is very nearly what the Lord Chancellor has already said) that when they knew that the man was insolvent and unable to pay his debts, when they knew that this money was given them to prefer a particular body of creditors to all the other creditors, if there were others, they were then fixed with the knowledge of an infringement of the Statute, and although they were told by the man who afterwards became a bankrupt that he had no other creditors, they cannot get out of it; they took their chance If he had told them the truth, and there had been in fact no other creditors, this transaction would have stood and been perfectly good; if he had any other creditors it would not stand. They knew all that it was necessary for them to know, and I think they took their chance, and they must take the consequences."

Applying this principle to the facts before us the conclusion at which I have arrived is that the Bank was well aware of the financial difficulties in which Mogi & Co., were involved and that the Bank took the security in order to protect itself in the event of insolvency supervening. There can be no question on the evidence that the Bank desired to protect itself against Curlender & Co., and we have been informed by the Official Assignee that no other claims have been admitted.

I have already stated my reasons for the conclusion that the insolvents' entire property was hypothecated to the Bank. It is a fair inference that the Bank was aware that the insolvents had no other property—otherwise no doubt the Bank would have taken steps to include it in the instrument, seeing that after all the goods in the Port Trust Warehouse had been sold there was still a deficit of over two lakhs of rupees. In this it may also be presumed that Mogi & Co., would have assisted them had it been in their power to do so, for one may at all events credit them with a desire to continue their business if their financial difficulties could be surmounted.

Though the Bank may have acted honestly in the popular sense they cannot be deemed to have acted in good faith within the law of insolvency, however, honestly they may have endeavoured and thought they were justified in endeavouring to secure the property of the insolvents as security for their own debt.

As Lord Blackburn observed with regard to valuable consideration:—"Yes, we must, I suppose, take it that they are so (payees for valuable consideration) but 'in good faith.'" So should I answer the question here as regards valuable consideration, but in my judgment a transaction effected in circumstances surrounding the transaction assailed in these proceedings cannot be deemed to have been effected in good faith and must be declared to be void against the Official Assignee.

I agree that the appeal should be allowed and concur in the order to be made.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXVIII, r. 5—Attachment of immoveable property before judgment—Small Cause Court, power of.

A Court exercising the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court has power to attach immoveable property before judgment under O. XXXVIII, r. 5 of the C. P C. [p. 400, col. 1.]

(Case-law considered.)

Case stated under O. XLVI, r. 1, C. P. C., by the District Munsif, Ariyalur, in Small Cause Suit No. 1258 of 1923.

The Government Pleader, as Amicus Curiæ.

JUDGMENT.—The question referred for the opinion of the High Court by the District Munsif of Ariyalur is whether a Court exercising the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court has power to attach immoveable property before judgment under O. XXXVIII, r. 5 of the C. P. C.

The C. P. C. of 1908 is made applicable to all Courts of Civil Judicature, unless the whole or portions of it are declared not applicable to any Court or the jurisdiction of any Court. Section 7 enacts that certain provisions of the C. P. C. shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Small Cause Courts Act of 1887 or to Courts exercising jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes under that Act. Under O. L. it is provided that certain provisions of the C. P. C. shall not extend to Courts constituted under the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act or to Courts exercising jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes under that Act. Order XXXVIII is not one of the orders mentioned in O. L. Order XXXVIII of the C. P. C. is, therefore, applicable to the Court of Small Causes or Court exercising Small Causes Jurisdiction. Under O. XXXVIII, a Court is empowered to attach before judgment moveable and immoveable property. It has also power to arrest the defendant before judgment, if proper cause is shown. So far as this Presidency is concerned, the jurisdiction of a Small Cause Court or a Court exercising Small Cause Jurisdiction to attach before judgment moveable property and to arrest before judgment the defendant for proper cause shown, has never been questioned.

The question is whether under the present Code, the Court of Small Causes or a Court exercising Small Cause Jurisdiction has power to attach before judgment immoveable property. According to the present C. P. C., O. XXXVIII, is applicable to all Courts, unless the jurisdiction under O. XXXVIII has been specifically taken away by the C. P. C. or any other enactment. There is nothing in the C. P. C of 1908 to show that O. XXXVIII, r. 5 is not applicable to a Court of Small Causes or Court exercising Small Cause Jurisdiction. Under the C. P. C., 1882, the Small Cause Court was not given jurisdiction to attach immoveable property before judgment. Schedule II of that Code specifically took away the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes to attach immoveable property before judgment. It made Ch. XXXIV corresponding to O. XXXVIII applicable to the Court of Small Causes with a reservation that it was not to apply to the attachment of immoveable property. Under s. 5 of the Code of 1882, only certain specified portions were made applicable to Courts of Small Causes constituted under Act XI of 1865 and to all other Courts except the Presidency Towns Small Cause Courts exercising the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. There seems to be a distinct departure in the present C. P. C. from the policy of the Code of 1882. Under the Code only certain specified portions of the C. P. C. were applicable to Small Cause Courts and Courts exercising Small Cause Jurisdiction. The present Code is made applicable to all Courts of Civil Judicature except such portions of the Code as are specifically stated to be not applicable to any Court or to the jurisdiction of any Court.

Where the terms of an enactment are quite clear, it is unnecessary to enquire into the reasons for the change. It cannot be suggested that the Legislature overlooked the provisions of the previous Code as to the jurisdiction of the Court of Small Causes or Courts exercising Small Cause Jurisdiction as regards the attachment before judgment of immoveable property, when it enacted the present Code.

In the present C. P. C. the provision in Sch. II of the previous Code as regards the attachment before judgment of immoveable property by Courts of Small Causes is deliberately omitted. When the terms of an enactment are quite clear; it is not proper for the Courts to consider what the previous law on the subject was in order to interpret the existing law. Where it is doubtful as to what the Legislature meant by a certain provision of a new enactment, the Court could refer to the previous state of the law in order to interpret what is not clear. But where the law is clear, it is not proper for the Court to consider whether there has been a change in the policy of the law or whether there the Legislature overlooked the previous law on the subject; [vide Bank of England v. Vagliano (1).]

This point has been decided quite recently by the Calcutta High Court on a reference similar to the present one. In Kedarnath Paramanik v. Hem Nath Karmakar (2), a Bench of the Calcutta High Court held that the Provincial Small Cause Court had power to attach immoveable property before judgment. The learned Judges referred to a previous case decided by them as regards the power of the Small Cause Court to attach moveable property before judgment. In Kumud Behary Pal v. Hari Charan Sardar (3), the same learned Judges held that the Court of Small Causes had power to attach immoveable property before judgment. In that case, the District Munsif who referred the question was of opinion that a Small Cause Court had no power to pass interlocutory orders under s. 94 of the C. P. C., and that an attachment before judgment was an interlocutory order and, therefore, such an order could not be passed by the Court of Small Causes. Section 7 (b) does not extend ss. 94 and 95 so far as they relate to injunctions and interlocutory orders. If the intention of the Legislature was not to extend ss. 94 and 95, it could have said so. But only certain orders under ss. 94 and 95, i.e., orders coming under s. 94 (c) and (d) are exempted from the Jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court or Court exercising Small Cause Jurisdiction. That is no reason for saying that the powers given by s. 94 (a), (b) or (d) could not be exercised by a Court of Small Causes. So far as our Presidency is concerned, as I have already observed, the Jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court to attach moveable property before judgment and to arrest the defendants before judgment for proper cause shown, was never questioned.

In the case of Ibrahi Rowthen v. Sangaram Chetty (4), the power of the Small Cause Court to award compensation under s. 491 of the old Code corresponding to s. 95 of the present Code was recognized. The Calcutta High Court in this respect has come into line with the Madras High Court.

(4) 26 M. 504.

The District Munsif refers to an old case reported as Marthamma v. Kittu Sheregara (5) in which it was held on a reference by the Principal Sadir Amin of Mangalore that a Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to attach immoveable property before judgment. The reason given by the learned Judges is that "The Court which cannot attach primarily in execution of its decree cannot attach in anticipation of it."

With due respect to the learned Judges, it is not easy to follow the reasoning. The attachment before judgment is only a preventive remedy so as to enable the plaintiff to reap the fruits of his decree if he is able to obtain one, by preventing the defendants from making away with the property and thereby rendering the decree nugatory. It does not follow that a Court which has the power to attach immoveable property before judgment, should necessarily have the power to execute the decree against immoveable property; for the attachment before judgment is not in execution of its decree, but for preventing the defendants from making away with the property before the Court passes its decree. If the suit is dismissed the attachment will ipso facto cease. The decision in Marthamma v. Kitta Sheregara (5) cannot be said to be wrong in the state of the law as it then was. Under s. 5 of Act X of 1877, certain Chapters and sections of the Code specified in the Second Schedule thereto annexed were extended to Courts of Small Causes constituted under Act XI of 1865. It was specially enacted in that section that "nothing herein contained shall be deemed to enlarge the powers which such Courts now possess for the purpose of effecting attachments or executing decrees." By s. 5, the Small Cause Court was not given additional or enlarged powers by reason of the Code of 1877, i.e., the powers which such Court had not, before the Act of 1877 was passed. By the amending Act XII of 1879, the third sentence of s. 5 was repealed. The Second Schedule was amended by the insertion of the words "except as regards immoveable property." This amendment was embodied in the Act of 1872 which put the matter beyond doubt. In 1871 when the decision in Marthamma v. Kittu Sheregara (5) was passed, the Court of Small Causes had no power to execute its decrees against immoveable property. By Act XI of 1865, s. 20, it was provided that for the purpose of executing a Small Cause decree an application had to be made to the Court exercising general jurisdiction in which the immoveable property was situate. There is nothing in Act XI of 1865 to show that a Small Cause Court could attach before judgment immoveable property. Under Act VIII of 1859, a Civil Court had jurisdiction to attach before judgment both immoveable and moveable property (vide s. 83). Section 388 of that Code extended the Act to all Civil Courts but there is nothing in the Act itself to show that the Act was extended to Small Cause Courts or Courts exercising Small Cause Jurisdiction. Under the Small Cause Courts Act of 1865, therefore, the Small Cause Court had no jurisdiction to attach immoveable property. The decision in Marthamma v. Kutti Sheregara (5) is, therefore, correct with regard tothe law as it then stood.

But as the law stands at present, it cannot be said that the Small Cause Court has no jurisdiction to attach before judgment immoveable property. As we have already observed, the present Code is quite clear on the point and, therefere, the decision in Marthamma v. Kutti Sheregara (5) cannot apply to the present state of the law.

We, therefore, answer the question referred to us in the affirmative.

We are very much indebted to the learned Government Pleader for assisting us by arguing the point fully as amicus curiae.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 146, O. XXII, rr. 3, 10—Death of plaintiff—Legal representative not brought on record—Assignee from legal representative, whether entitled to continue suit.

Rule 10 of O. XXII of the C. P. C. contemplates cases of devolution of interest from some original party to the suit, whether plaintiff or defendant, upon some one else, and applies only to cases not covered by r. 3 of the Order. [p. 403, col. 1.]

Where on the death of a plaintiff his legal representative does not bring himself on the record within the time prescribed by law, an assignee from such representative is not entitled to make an application under O. XXII, r. 10, of the C. P. C., to be allowed to continue the suit. Section 146 of the Code cannot be availed of in support of such an application inasmuch as the applicant is not claiming under any one who might himself have put in a valid application under r. 10 of O. XXII. [ibid.]

Petitions, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the orders of the Court of the District Judge, South Malabar, dated the 20th December 1920, in C. M. As. Nos. 7 and 10 of 1920, preferred against those of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar, in M. P. No. 263 of 1919.

JUDGMENT.

CIVIL REVISION PETITIONS NOS. 383 AND 384 OF 1922.

These petitions relate to two suits Original Suits Nos. 17 and 18 of 1919, on the file of the Subordinate Judge, Calicut. They are suits by Stanithamma Mootha Panikkar to redeem property demised on kanom to the 1st defendant. The plaintiff died on 24th February 1919 and the suit would, in the ordinary course, have abated on 24th August 1919, under the law then in force. The plaintiff's successor Vibekerana Mootha Panikkar made no application to be brought on record to continue the suits. He granted melcharths to the present petitioner authorizing him to take such steps as were necessary to recover the property. The petitioner on 19th August 1919 filed petitions, Miscellaneous Petitions Nos. 263 and 264 of 1919, in the lower Court under O. XXII, r. 10, to be brought on record and continue the suits. These were dismissed both in the First Court and in the Appellate Court and the petitioner seeks for revision of that order.

It is clear that petitioner is not claiming under the original plaintiff. She is not, therefore, his legal representative within the present definition of that term in the present C. P. C. She is not also a person intermeddling with the estate of the deceased, but one who derives wholly from the deceased's heir and is not qua the estate in a position of opposition to the legal heir. Now this legal heir under whom she claims is not a party to the suit. She contends that this does not prevent the operation of r. 10, but I think this contention cannot be supported. She can only claim to be subrogated to the existing rights of her assignor and if that right does not include the right to continue the suit, I do not see how she can be subrogated to such right which does not exist at present in her assignor. The assignor, who has as yet not been brought on in the suits, has no locus standi therein and a fortiori, his assignee can have none.

I am not referred to any authority in support of the petitioner's contention. The language used in Lakshmi Achi v. Subbarama Aiyar (1): "The words 'assignment' and 'creation' indicate that it is the person suing that assigns and creates the interest which enables the assignee to continue the suit" and in Manindra Chandra Nandi v. Ram Kumar Lal Bhagat (2): "The order contemplates cases of devolution of interest from some original party to the suit, whether plaintiff or defendant upon someone else", are opposed to this contention.

The petitioner calls in aid s. 146 of the C. P. C., but that does not seem to me to apply. Her assignor could not have put in an application under O. XXII, r. 10 to continue the suit, since he was clearly the legal representative of the deceased, a person who, in law represented his estate and, therefore, he could apply only under r. 3. Rule 10 only applies to cases not covered by r. 3. Section 146 will not avail to validate an application by the petitioner, because the petitioner is not claiming under any one who might himself have put in a valid application under r. 10. The ruling in Sundaram Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandarasannadhi (3) does not affect this view, since there the application was by a person entitled to put in an application under O. XXII, r. 10. It is not necessary to consider here whether under s. 146, the petitioner might in law have put in an application under r. 3 to be herself brought on as legal representative since no such application was put in by her.

There is no suggestion in this case of collusion between the petitioner's assignor and the defendants in the suits. There is no reason, therefore, why the assignor should not have himself applied within time to be brought on record. He did apply after the dismissal of the petitioner's applications, but his petitions were, after he had died and his legal representative had applied to be brought on in these petitions, dismissed in an order which held inter alia that the petitions were out of time and no valid excuse for the delay had been shown. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the lower Court's decision in these civil revision petitions is correct.

Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 594 and 595 of 1920 are against the refusal of the First Court, to grant the petitions by the petitioner on 21st August 1919 to bring on the stranger Vikkarava Panikkar as a party defendant in the suits. They purport to have been put in under O. XXII, r. 3. That does not say that an application of this sort cannot be put in by a stranger, but it is obvious that such applications in the present case are futile, since even if granted they would leave the suits without a plaintiff and would not stop the running of time within which the plaintiff must be brought on, if abatement is to be avoided. The suits have now abated and any order in revision will not have the effect of setting aside that abatement. It is, therefore, no use considering whether there is any case for revision of these petitions.

Civil Revision Petisions Nos. 590 and 591 of 1920 are to revise the orders of the First Court declaring that the suits have abated. On my findings on Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 383 and 384 of 1922 those orders are correct, and in any case the proper procedure was an application under O. XXII, r. 9, in the First Court itself.

Civil Revision Petitions Nos. 592 and 593 of 1920, are to implead the legal representative of the 1st defendant in the suits. As the suits have abated, the order

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM ORIGINAL DECREE No. 85 OF 1923.

July 3, 1924.

Present:—Sir Lancelot Sanderson, KT., Chief Justice, and Justice Sir Hugh Walmsley, KT.,

INDUBALA DEBI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

MANMATHA NATH ROY AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 173, 174, 175, 176—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Will—Statement that certain property belonged to testator, admissibility of—Election by legatee—Estoppel.

A Will made by a Hindu testator contained the following caluse:—"I do hereby direct that all properties moveable and immoveable standing in the name of my wife including the house No. 45, G. P. C. Lane Calcutta, and all household furniture and articles of domestic use shall remain in the possession of my said wife who shall during her life enjoy all the income and profits arising therefrom. But my said wife shall have no power to sell, mortgage or dispose of any such property. After the death of my said wife the same shall form a part of the residue and remainder of my estate and shall be divided equally amongst my sons." After the death of the testator his widow sold one of the houses standing in her name and the executors of the Will of her husband joined in the sale. With the sale-proceeds and certain moneys paid to the widow by the executors which represented the share of the widow in the income of a certain business which was being carried on in the name of the testator, the widow purchased another house in her own name. Subsequently she sold this house also representing herself to be its real owner stating that she had purchased it with her stridhan money and that it was not included in her husband's estate. The executors of her husband's Will and her sons joined in this sale-deed also. Disputes subsequently arose as to whether the house mentioned specifically in the testator's Will and certain other houses were the property of the widow or of the testator:

Held, (1) that the statement in the Will that the house mentioned in the Will and certain other property standing in the name of the widow belonged to the testator was not admissible in evidence as a statement with regard to the title to the houses, but that the fact that the testator had treated the house specifically as being his to dispose of by Will was admissible as conduct on his part in regard to the ownership of the houses which showed what his attitude was shortly before his death, and that the Court was entitled to draw an inference from it as to his intention when he supplied the purchase-money; [p 410, col. 2.]

(2) that the widow and her representatives were not estopped from setting up their ownership of the houses by virtue of any declaration or act of the widow, unless she had done or said anything which had caused the executors to believe something to be true and to act on such belief, which would operate as an estoppel under s. 115 of the Evidence Act; [p. 408. col. 2.]

(3) that the widow being a pardanashin lady of slight education and there being no evidence that the Will was ever explained to her, and the executors never having called upon her as they were required to do under s. 176 of the Succession Act to make her election under the Will, no case of an election had been made out. [p. 413, col. 1.]

Under s. 173 of the Succession Act acceptance of a benefit given by a Will constitutes an election by the legatee to take under the Will if he has knowledge of his right to elect and of those circumstances which would influence the judgment of a reasonable man in making an election, or if he waives enquiry into the circumstances. Under s. 174 of the Act such knowledge or waiver of enquiry shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be presumed if the legatee has enjoyed for two years the benefits provided for him by the Will without doing any act to express dissent. [p. 412, col. 2.]

Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Greaves, dated the 20th March 1923.

Mr. N. Sircar, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an appeal by Sm. Indubala Debi, the wife of Mohendra Nath Roy, one of the defendants in the suit against the judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves dated the 20th of March 1923. The suit was brought by Manmatha Nath Roy.

The plaintiff and Mohendra are sons of G. B. Roy and Girijamoni Debi. The pedigree of the family of G. B. Roy is set out in the plaint. Kuntala Debi, the defendant No. 6, is the daughter of Bimalabala. The 2nd defendant Mohendra is an insolvent, and the Official Assignee was joined as a defendant.

In the suit the plaintiff claimed that the shares and rights of the parties in the estate of the testator and in particular in the properties set out in Ex. B annexed to the plaint be ascertained and declared.

A further prayer was for a declaration that the defendants Nos. 3, 4 and 5 have no interest or right in the estate of the testator and in particular in the properties set out in Ex. B annexed to the plaint.

There were other reliefs asked for, such as partition, etc.

The question in this appeal relates to 3 houses: viz., 45, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane, 1, Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street and 46, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane.

The issues were as follows:—

"(1) Did the premises No. 45, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane No. 1, Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street belong to Ganga Bishnu or to his wife Girijamoni?

"(2) Is the plaintiff estopped from questioning the title of Girijamoni to No. 45, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane.

"(3) Were premises No. 46, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane purchased by the executors of Ganga Bishnu on the 1st October, 1894, out of funds of Ganga Bishnu's estate in their hands?

"(4) Did Girijamoni elect to take under her husband's Will?"

—Strictly speaking the 3rd issue should be confined to a portion of 46, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane.

The learned Judge held that No. 45, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane, and 1, Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street, belonged to G. B. Roy: that on the 2nd issue no case of estoppel was made out. The 3rd issue was answered in the affirmative: and, the learned Judge said that if it were necessary to deal with the 4th issue he should answer that in the affirmative.

Indubala has appealed against this decision. Her interest in the premises arises under the Will of Girijamoni, which was dated 18th May 1919. By this Will Girijamoni devised the two houses mentioned in paras. 1 and 3 of the schedule of the Will to Indubala.

These two houses are Nos. 45 and 46, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane. Girijamoni devised No. 1 Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street to Sukritibala for her life and after her death to Mohendra's sons, who are the defendants Nos. 4 and 5. Sukritibala is dead.

The plaintiff's case was that though No. 45, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane and No. 1, Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street stood in the name of Girijamoni at the time of G. B. Roy's death, these premises were the property of his father G. B. Roy, and consequently neither Indubala nor the sons of Mohendra have any interest in the premises.

As to No. 46, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane the plaintiff's case was that the premises were purchased by the executors of G. B. Roy on 1st October 1894.

The appellant's case was that these premises were purchased by Girijamoni and that under Girijamoni's Will she was entitled to Nos. 45 and 46, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane and the sons of Mohendra were entitled to 1, Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street. G. B. Roy died on the 27th April, 1890 having executed a Will dated the 2nd April 1890.

The material paragraphs of the Will are:

1. "I do hereby nominate, constitute and appoint my eldest brother Babu Nritto Gopal Roy my cousin Babu Radha Nath Bagchi son of Srikristo Bagchi of Santipore in District of Nadia but at present of No. 44, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane in Calcutta and my father-in-law Babu Bhuban Mohan Dhole of Serampore executors of this my Will.

3. I do hereby direct that all properties moveable and immoveable standing in the name of my wife Girijamoni Devi including the house No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane in Calcutta and all house-hold furniture and articles of domestic use shall remain in the possession of my said wife who shall during her natural life enjoy all the income and profits arising therefrom. But my said wife shall have no power to sell, mortgage or dispose of any such property. After the death of the said Sm. Girijamoni Devi the same shall form a part of the residue and remainder of my estate and shall be divided equally amongst my sons.

6. "I do hereby declare that my said executors will have full discretion, power and authority to sell let mortgage or otherwise dispose of all or any portion of my properties moveable and immoveable for the benefit of my estate.

7. "I further dictate that my wife Sm. Girijamoni Devi shall during her natural life receive a share equal to the share of a son and in all the income and profits of the residue of my estate."

It was argued by learned Counsel on behalf of the plaintiff-respondent that it was not necessary for the Court to investigate the question whether the two properties 45, Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane, and 1, Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street belonged to G. B. Roy or to Girijamoni, because even assuming that they were the property of Girijamoni, she had elected to confirm the disposition of these premises in the Will of G. B. Roy by the acceptance of benefits which had been provided for her by G. B. Roy's Will. Reliance was placed upon ss. 167, 173, 174, 175 and 176 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865.

It was urged that the executors had made certain payments for Girijamoni: Among other payments reference was made to sums amounting to Rs. 1,300 or Rs. 1,500 which were paid for the purchase of certain premises called 6, Brindaban Mullick Lane on the 12th January 1891.

In the first place it is to be noticed that the payments were made out of the profits of the business, in which G. B. Roy had a share, and which the executors were carrying on, and that they were debited to G. B. Roy's estate.

This house was purchased in Girijamoni's name for Rs. 6,000.

Part of the purchase-money was provided by the sale of 218, Cornwallis Street on the 7th January, 1891, as is proved by the number and amounts of the Government Currency Notes. 218, Cornwallis Street had been purchased on the 5th April, 1889, i. e., before the death of G. B. Roy. But the deed shows that Girijamoni was the purchaser.

The deed of the 7th January, 1891 by which Girijamoni sold 218, Cornwallis Street was the subject of much comment during the course of the argument.

The learned Counsel for the respondent contended that the recitals were consistent with Girijamoni being merely the benamidar of the property.

On the other hand, the learned Counsel for the appellant contended that they were inconsistent with that position, and that by this sale Girijamoni was asserting her own title to the property, and she was thereby dissenting from the disposition of the property by the Will of G. B. Roy.

The executors of G. B. Roy's Will were parties to the deed, and they thereby made themselves responsible for the statement contained therein that the property was purchased by Girijamoni.

If in fact this property was held by Girijamoni as benamidar, I see no reason why it should not have been so stated in the deed; instead of this being done the executors of G B. Roy's Will agreed that the property belonged to Girijamoni herself.

The joinder of the executors as parties, may be explained by the fact that Girijamoni was a pardanashin widow and the purchaser's advisers would not unreasonably insist upon the executors of G. B. Roy's Will being added as parties so as to avoid any question in the future as to Girijamoni's title.

No. 6 Brindaban Mullick Lane was sold by Girijamoni on the 1st April, 1903.

The deed recited that she was the real owner of the property having purchased it with her stridhan money, that she had no co-sharers and that the property was not included in her husband's estate.

The executors of G. B. Roy's estate, the plaintiff in this suit, and Girijamoni's other sons were witnesses to the deed.

In my judgment these deeds and the explicit statements made therein shew that 218, Cornwallis Street, and No. 6, Brindaban Mullick Lane were purchased by and were the property of Girijamoni herself and the evidence obtained from these formal deeds, should not be displaced by the verbal evidence given in this case so many years after the event.

No. 218, Cornwallis Street was one of the properties standing in the name of Girijamoni at the time of G. B. Roy's death, and by selling the property, by asserting her right as the owner of the property, by using the proceeds for the purchase of No. 6. Brindaban Mullick Lane, and by subsequently selling No. 6 Brindaban Mullick Lane as her own property with the consent of the executors and the plaintiff, in my judgment, Girijamoni dissented from the disposition of 218, Cornwallis Street by the Will of G. B. Roy.

The executors of G. B. Roy's estate had no power under the Will to purchase property; the Rs. 1,300 or Rs. 1,500 alleged to have been advanced for the purchase of 6 Brindaban Mullick Lane could not have been made by the executors in pursuance of the provisions of the Will.

One entry in the book shows the payment as having been made out of the funds of the business to the estate of G. B. Roy as earnest money for purchasing a house belonging to R. C. Roy.

In my judgment it has not been proved that by reason of the advance of the Rs. 1,300 or Rs. 1,500, Girijamoni accepted a benefit under the Will of G. B. Roy.

In my judgment the other matters on which the respondent relied as shewing an election by Girijamoni to confirm the dispositions under G. B. Roy's Will are in the same position. It has not been shown that any of the payments prior to 1901, when some profits of the business were divided, was made in pursuance of the Will of G. B. Roy.

Further, even if they were, it has not been shown that Girijamoni was aware of the provisions of the Will: She was a purdanashin lady and no evidence has been given that the Will of her husband was explained to her; and, in my judgment, it has not been proved that she knew that she was accepting any benefit under the Will.

In my opinion, therefore, the point that Girijamoni elected to confirm the disposition of the properties made by G. B. Roy's Will has not been made out.

On the contrary, as I have already said, by her sale of 218 Cornwallis Street, if she knew of the provisions of the Will, she shewed her dissent from them.

I have had an opportunity of reading the judgment about to be delivered by my learned brother; and I agree with his conclusion that the premises No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane belonged to G. B. Roy; the facts relating to the purchase of this property seem to me, for the reasons given by my learned brother, to be sufficient to support the plaintiff's case in respect of this property.

The position as regards No. 1 Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street is different.

All the documents go to show that Girijamoni was the purchaser.

The receipt for the earnest money dated 4th July 1888, and the conveyance were in the name of Girijamoni.

That of course is not conclusive when the question is whether the transaction was benami. But it appears that the bill of costs in respect of this purchase was made out to Girijamoni as the debtor.

The Attorney's letter of the 10th September, 1888, returning the title deeds and the conveyance was sent to Girijamoni.

The notice under the Land Registration Act recites that Girijamoni had applied for registration of her name as owner of the premises, and notice was given that all persons who disputed the character and extent of the interest claimed by Girijamoni must state their objections by the date specified therein.

It is to be noted that the date of the notice is December 12th, 1906, long after the death of G. B. Roy.

Further, the plaintiff took no objection to this application for registration by Girijamoni, on the contrary it appears from the evidence that he concurred in it.

I am by no means satisfied that the plaintiff has discharged the onus of shewing that Girijamoni was not the real owner: and with much respect to the learned Judge who tried the case I am unable to agree with his conclusion in respect of this property, viz., No. 1, Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street.

No. 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane was purchased on the 1st October, 1894.

At this time G. B. Roy was dead. The agreement for purchase dated the 4th July, 1894, was in the name of Girijamoni.

The conveyance dated the 1st of October 1894 also was in the name of Girijamoni, the purchase price was Rs. 2,550 which the deed recited was paid by Girijamoni.

It was alleged by the plaintiff that this property was purchased by the executors of G. B. Roy's Will.

The first question which naturally arises is, why should the executors enter into the transaction in the name of Girjiamoni? In my opinion, no satisfactory answer was given to this question.

It is further to be noted that the executors had no power under the Will to purchase immoveable property; and it ought not to be assumed that they would commit a breach of trust.

It was alleged, however, that the entries in the cash-book and the ledger F. 1 and E. 1 showed that the purchase price was paid out of the estate.

The entry in the cash-book shows that the Rs. 2,500 was paid "to the estate of G B. Roy."

It was agreed that the entry meant that the money came from the business which was still being carried on and the money was debited to the estate of G. B. Roy. The accounts seemed to have been kept on the principle that the business was regarded as a kind of banker for the estate of G. B. Roy, and any money which was paid out of the business to any member of the family seems to have been debited to the estate of G. B. Roy.

Therefore, although it may be that the Rs. 2,500 came out of the business, it does not show that the property bought with the money, belonged to the estate of G. B. Roy.

These entries are, in my opinion, consistent with the case of both sides.

As far as the evidence shewn by the entries goes,—it may be that the money was advanced to Girijamoni to enable her to purchase the property; or it may be that the money was used by the executors for the purchase of the property—these entries at any rate, in my opinion, are not enough to displace the evidence contained in the agreement and the conveyance, especially when it is the fact that no sufficient reason has been given why the executors of G. B. Roy's estate should make the purchase of the property in the name of Girijamoni.

I have already said that in my judgment it has been established that it was Girijamoni who purchased with her own stridhan money No. 6 Brindaban Mulliok's Lane. The deed of sale, when that property was sold on the 1st April, 1903, recites that fact: Yet the entries in the book show that the estate of G. B. Roy was debited on the 2nd December, 1890, with Rs. 1,000 as earnest money for purchasing the house, which must have been an advance to Girijamoni for the purpose of the purchase.

It seems to me that the Rs. 2,500 may well have been on the same footing as the Rs. 1,000 to which I have referred.

The document Ex. K which Girijamoni was induced to sign, seems to have treated the Rs. 29,100 as if Girijamoni had merely a life interest therein, which was of, course, not correct:—that sum belonged to her.—Yet Girijamoni is made to declare that the plaintiff was entitled to $\frac{1}{4}$th share of that sum after Girijamoni's death.

In the same way in the document Ex. L the plaintiff stated that his interest in this property was $\frac{1}{4}$th and that this share remained.

I am by no means satisfied that Girijamoni appreciated what she was doing by these documents. These documents show that plaintiff in 1915 was anxious to make it clear that he would claim one quarter's interest in the properties. The Will of Girijamoni is inconsistent with the allegation that she recognized the plaintiff's right in this respect.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff in this Court based his case as regards the property No. 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane on estoppel. He argued that Girijamoni and her representatives were estopped from denying that the property belonged to G. B. Roy's estate, by reason of the fact that Girijamoni had accepted the sum of Rs. 2,500 from the executors of G. B. Roy's estate for the purchase of the property.

I am unable to accept this argument. In the first place, as already stated, it has not been proved that the payment was anything more than an advance to Girijamoni in order that she might purchase the property.

In the second place, I find no evidence of any declaration or act of Girijamoni which can be said to have caused the executors to believe something to be true and to act on such belief which would prevent her and her representatives from denying the truth of that thing so as to bring the case within s. 115 of the Evidence Act.

In my opinion, therefore, the appeal should be allowed so far as it concerns the two properties No. 1, Raghu Nath Chatterji Street and 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane and the decree of the Trial Court should be varied accordingly.

The result will be that as regards the immoveable properties the decree will stand in respect of No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane, and the suit will be dismissed as regards No. 1 Raghu Nath Chatterji Street and 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane.

No question in the appeal has been raised as regards the moveables, the shares of the respective parties or the decree for partition.

The decree, therefore, with regard to these matters will stand.

As regards costs the result of our judgment is that the plaintiff has succeeded as regards one property, namely, No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane, and the defendant has succeeded as regards two of the properties, mentioned in the plaint. It is desirable that this Court should make an order as to costs which will not give rise to any further enquiry. Both the parties agree to that: and, the only question is what would be the proper order to make with regard to the costs of the suit and of the appeal. It is true that the plaintiff has succeeded as regards one property only, out of the three. On the other hand, the plaintiff had to bring his suit in order to establish his case in respect of that property. In the ordinary course, I should have thought that he would have been entitled to the general costs of the suit and the costs as regards the issue with reference to that property. But in this case it would be impossible for the Taxing Officer to ascertain the costs which should be allocated to the different issues.

As regards the costs of the suit my learned brother and I have come to the conclusion that the fair and proper order to make is that each party should pay his or her own costs of the suit. As regards the costs of the appeal we are of opinion that the appellant is entitled to 4/5ths of her taxed costs.

The sum of Rs. 750 deposited with the Registrar as security for the costs of the appeal under order dated the 23rd of July 1923, will be paid to the appellant's Attorney.

Walmsely, J.—This appeal is directed against a judgment of my learned brother Mr. Justice Greaves by which he decreed the plaintiff's suit. The appellant is the 3rd defendant, Indubala Debi sister-in-law of the plaintiff.

The suit relates to a family dispute. One Ganga Bishnu Roy died in April 1890, and his widow Girijamoni outlived by him by more than thirty years and died in October 1921. They had six sons; the eldest is Manmatha the plaintiff: the third is Mohendra himself the 2nd defendant, and husband of the appellant. Two other sons Jogendra and Rajendra were alive when their father died, but they died some years ago without issue. The other two sons Surendra and Jitendra died before their mother, leaving daughters, defendants Nos. 7 and 6. Ganga Bishnu was a successful contractor, and at the time of his death he was carrying on a profitable brick-making business with his cousin Radha Nath Bagchi. He made a Will, appointing this Radha Nath Bagchi and his brother Nritya Gopal as executors; and they obtained Probate. They continued to carry on the brick-making business and their administration did not end until 1907.

Mohendra the appellant's husband, was adjudicated insolvent in 1916, and that accounts for the presence of the Official Assignee as the 1st defendant. Manmatha bought the insolvent's interest in the immoveable property said to belong to the deceased Ganga Bishnu's estate in 1917, and in March 1921 at a Sheriff's sale he bought the interest that had devolved on his brother Surendra.

Manmatha thus claims to have acquired one-half of the immoveable property during his mother's lifetime and to have succeeded to another sixth on her death. The other one-third is divided between Mohendra, on his mother's death, and Jitendra's daughter.

The plaint set out also the manner in which the moveable property descended but we are not directly concerned with that.

The immoveable property mentioned in the plaint consists of three items (1) 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane, (2) 1 Raghunath Chatterjee Street and (3) 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane. The reason for the suit is contained in the seventeenth paragraph of the plaint, and is that Mohendra and his wife assert that this property was the property of Girijamoni the widow, and not of her husband Ganga Bishnu, and that Girijamoni has bequeathed them by Will to Mohendra's sons.

The plaint contained numerous prayers. So far as the immoveable property is concerned they were for a declaration that plaintiff's share was two-thirds, that Indubala the appellant and her sons have no share in it, and for partition.

The appellant in her written statement asserted that the three items of immoveable property belonged to Girijamoni, and that she made a Will bequeathing them to Indubala and her sons. The executors named in this Will were afterwards added as defendants, and I may say here that they have proved the Will although they have not actually taken out Probate.

The issues raised in the trial were (1) Did the premises No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane and No. 1 Raghunath Chatterji's Street belong to Ganga Bishnu or to his wife Girijamoni?

(2) Is the plaintiff estopped from questioning the title of Girijamoni to No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane?

(3) Were premises No. 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane purchased by the executors of Ganga Bishnu on October 1, 1894, out of funds belonging to Ganga Bishnu's estate in their hands?

(4) Did Girijamoni elect to take under her husband's Will?

The learned Judge answered the first and third issues in the affirmative, and said that if it were necessary to deal with the fourth he would answer that also in the affirmative. Of the second issue he said that no case of estoppel had been made out. That finding is also in plaintiff's favour, for the plea of estoppel raised in the Trial Court was that the plaintiff was estopped in regard to the house, No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane.

It is to be regretted that the learned Judge has framed his judgment in such a way that we cannot ascertain the reasons for his findings.

I shall deal first with the plaintiff's contention that the properties No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhry Lane and No. 1 Raghu-Nath Chatterjee Street really belonged to Ganga Bishnu and not to his wife, although the documents of title are in the name of the wife.

The facts about the purchase of No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane need a few details about the family. Ganga Bishnu had three brothers, and they all lived in their family dwelling house at No. 44. Ganga Bishnu was an enterprising young man, and by 1875, he was well-to-do. In that year the adjoining piece of land, premises No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane was bought for the sum of Rs. 1,200 The document is in favour of Girijamoni. In 1882 Ganga Bishnu and his brothers came to an agreement, which was embodied in reciprocal deeds, by which Ganga Bishnu gave up all claim to his inherited share in No. 44 while the brothers in return gave up all claim to any interest in No. 45, and also to all claims in regard to Ganga Bishnu's business. Both these documents allude to the purchase of No. 45 as made from money given by Ganga Bishnu to Girijamoni out of his own earnings. The premises remained vacant for a few years longer, and then a house was built on it. Ganga Bishnu lived in that house until his death and his family after him, and in the Will which he made a few weeks before his death he mentioned the house specifically.

This is the evidence bearing on No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane and the learned Judge has held that it is enough to discharge the burden that lay upon the plaintiff of showing that Girijamoni was not the real owner. I thihk we should agree with him and the reasons which weigh with me are these. In the first place when the purchase was made Ganga Bishnu was a very young man; he had not inherited wealth so far as we know; he was prospering, but in a business involving great risks; he wanted to be free to carry on his business without interference from his brothers: he had no house of his own. t was unlikely, therefore, that so early in his career he would make an unusually large gift to his wife: and on the other hand it was likely that he should buy land close to his home, and likely too that he should try to place it beyond the reach of possible disaster.

Secondly the statements in the deeds of release seem to me to point to a desire to accumulate evidence of Girijamoni's title. As between the brothers there was no need to say that the purchase was by Girijamoni and not by Ganga Bishnu, but having at the outset put the property in his wife's name it was natural enough that he should have these statements introduced.

Thirdly there is the disposition in the Will. There was some discussion about the admissibility of this piece of evidence. The words are in the third paragraph "I do hereby direct that all properties moveable and immoveable standing in the name of my wife Girijamoni Devi including the house No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane in Calcutta and all household furniture and articles of domestic use shall remain in the possession of my said wife, who shall during her natural life enjoy all the income and profits arising therefrom. But my said wife shall have no power to sell, mortgage or dispose of any such property. After the death of the said Sm. Girijamoni Devi the same shall form a part of the residue and remainder of my estate and shall be divided equally amongst my sons." As a statement these words are not admissible, but the fact that Ganga Bishnu treated this property specifically as being his to dispose by Will, is admissible as conduct on his part in regard to the ownership of the house. Viewed as conduct, it shows what his attitude was shortly before his death, and we may draw an inference as to his intention when he supplied the purchase-money.

For these reasons I accept the Judge's finding in regard to the first item of property.

The facts with regard to No. 1 Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street are different. It was bought in 1888. The receipt for the earnest money dated July 4, is granted to Girijamoni: the conveyance is in her name: the Solicitor's bill for costs is made out against her; and his letter forwarding the conveyance and the original title deeds is addressed to her, and it was she who applied for registration of her name as owner under the provisions of Act VII B. C. of 1876. This application it may be noted was not made until 1906, long after Ganga Bishnu's death, and while the executors were in possession of the estate, Manmatha, the plaintiff, himself went to the Collector's office to support the application, not to oppose it, and I do not think it matters whether he went before or after the executor had been released. In the case of this property it seems that there is no evidence at all to show that Girijamoni was not the real owner, except the words that I have already quoted from the Will. The inference drawn from Ganga Bishnu's claim to dispose of property standing in his wife's name must be weaker in the case of property not described specifically. It was the duty of the plaintiff to show that Girijamoni was not the real owner, and in this state of the evidence I think it must be held that he has failed to discharge the onus.

As the issues show, the plea of benami did not include the third property. The plaintiff did assert in the eighth paragraph of his plaint that this property was bought by the executor in lieu of.....No. 218 Cornwallis Street and that, as the latter was really the property of Ganga Bishnu, although the document of title was in the name of Girijamoni, No. 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane succeeded to the same benami character. That argument, however, was not pressed before us, and I may mention one very good reason. A benamidar implies a real owner, and if Girijamoni was only the benamidar when the property was bought in 1894 who was the real owner? That is a question to which the plaintiff could not give an answer.

The plaintiff's second argument was that Girijamoni had elected to take under her husband's Will, and, therefore, she was debarred from setting up claims in opposition to the provisions of the Will. Here it is necessary to give the main features of the Will, and a brief account of the executor's proceedings.

The third paragraph of the Will directed that all properties moveable and immoveable standing in the name of GirijamoniDebi including the house No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane and all household the furniture and articles of domestic use should remain in possession of his wife who should during her natural life enjoy all the profits and income arising therefrom. The fifth paragraph gave the executors' power to carry on the brick-making business or to wind up the partnership. The seventh directed that Girijamoni should during her lifetime receive a share equal to the share of a son in all the income and profits of the residue of the estate.

The executors lost no time in taking out Probate of the Will, and in their application they mentioned the three houses in suit. They then carried on the brick-making business, first on the terms of the existing partnership and then on rather different terms. Accounts were kept at the brick-field and in them appear frequent entries to the debit of G. B. Roy's estate; some are of payments for some specific purpose, others are of large sums for maintaining the family. In 1901 the first distribution of profits was made, and the widow received Rs. 18,000, and each of the five surviving sons Rs. 9,000, and in 1907 the surviving executor Radha Nath handed over to the widow and her sons the sum of Rs. 15,851, as the balance due to them and they in turn executed a deed of release in his favour. The account attached to this document contains a reference to a transaction by the executors, which lay outside the directions of the Will and outside the duties of executors. It appears that they bought a house and sold it at a profit, and credited the profit in the account. The document does not speak of any division of the Rs. 15,851 or say into whose hands it was given. All we know is that in the documents exchanged by Girijamoni and the plaintiff in 1915, she said that she had received Rs. 29,100 from the executors.

The transactions in regard to No. 218 Cornwallis Street and No. 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane are as follows. It was bought in 1889 for Rs 3,200 and the purchaser is Girijamoni. That was shortly before Ganga Bishnu's death, when he was well off. Apart from the implication in the Will there is nothing to show that it was he, and not his wife, the ostensible purchaser who bought it. Girijamoni sold it on January 5, 1891—shortly after her husband's death, and for the better security of the purchaser, the executors joined in the sale. The identical notes received from the purchaser were paid on January 12 to the owner of No. 6 Brindaban Mullick Lane which was sold to Girijamoni alone for Rs. 6,000. This house in turn was sold in April 1903, for Rs. 6,600. The conveyance recited that Girijamoni had bought the property with her stridhan money, that it was her own property that she was selling and not part of her husband's estate, and that her sons and the executors were signing the document as witnesses in recognition of her assertions. Meanwhile in October 1894, Girijamoni bought No. 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane in her own name for Rs. 2,550.

Reference has been made to some entries in the accounts in regard to these transactions. The earnest money of Rs. 51 paid by the purchaser of 218 Cornwallis Street is entered on December 1890 as "received from the estate of G. B. Roy (from Lakshmimani Bewa, bania for a piece of land) as per bill," and on the same day there is an entry of payment of Rs. 1,000 as earnest money for purchasing a house belonging to R. C. Roy (husband of the vendor of 6 Brindaban Mullick Lane). On the 8th January there is an entry of Rs. 60 for buying a stamp for the purchase of a house and on the 16th of Rs. 300 through R. C. Roy for purchase of a house, on the 30th of some minor charge possibly connected with the purchase, and on June 4th of Rs. 250 paid to the estate of G. B. Roy—(To R. C. Roy for value of a house purchased from him).

Then in October, 1894 there are entries in the cash-book and Ledger of Rs 2,500 paid to the estate of G. B. Roy for the purchase of a part of house No. 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane, and there is an earlier entry in August of Rs. 2,290 "Received back from N. B. Roy as per sheet No. 11," regarding which it is suggested that the money was taken out to complete the purchase arranged, but returned as the transaction could not be completed until later.

Here it is convenient to refer to four other entries in the accounts: three are of payments of Rs. 15 as Baidya Nath's mother's allowance (i. e., Girijamoni) for September and October 1890, and an earlier month, and the other is of Rs. 32-6-0 for house tax. Assuming that the consolidated rate was 19½ per centum in 1890, as it is now, this sum represents what would be a quarter's rate on No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane and No. 1 Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street. I must add, however, that these charges do not re-appear.

I have already said that we are not asked to hold on these entries that in respect of No. 46 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane Girijamoni became only a benamidar. Learned Counsel for the only plaintiff puts his case regarding this property on the ground that Girijamoni allowed the executors to invest money belonging to her husband's estate in real property and she and her successors are precluded by the principle of estoppel from saying that the property thus bought belongs to her and not to her husband's estate. To this argument the obvious answer is that Girijamoni did not in the words of section 115 of the Evidence Act cause or permit the executors to believe something to be true and to act on such belief, and, therefore, there is no question of allowing or forbidding her and her successors to deny the truth of that thing.

There remains the question whether Girijamoni can be said to have 'elected' to take under the Will. The rules relating to election are contained in Ch. XXVII of the Succession Act (Act X of 1865). The argument is that by the Will Ganga Bishnu gave his widow a life-estate in his immoveable properties standing in his name, and a share equal to son's share in the income of his business, and that as Girijamoni has received her share in the income in accordance with the Will, she cannot claim the immoveable property in opposition to the Will.

According to s. 173 acceptance of a benefit given by the Will constitutes an election by the legatee to take under the Will, if he has knowledge of his right to elect and of those circumstances which would influence the judgment of a reasonable man in making an election, or if he waives enquiry into the circumstances, and in the following section it is said "such knowledge or waiver of enquiry, shall, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be presumed if the legatee has enjoyed for two years the benefits provided for him by the Will without doing any act to express dissent." Now Girijamoni undoubtedly knew that there was a Will, but there is no evidence that she knew anything about its contents beyond the fact that it appointed certain executors. But it is argued that she took the benefits for two years, and, therefore, under s. 174 we must presume that she had the necessary knowledge or waived enquiry. It is true that Girijamoni received benefits at the hands of the executors, but I feel very doubtful as to whether they can be referred to the Will, as benefits provided by the Will. The executors treated the widow very generously, but the distribution of 1901 seems to be the only act which can be said to be dictated by the Will. Further I think we can say that the presumption is rebutted by the circumstances. Girijamoni was a pardanashin lady of slight education. There is no evidence that the Will was ever explained to her, and the executors never called upon her as they are required to do under s. 176 to make her election. I think, therefore, that Girijamoni did not have the knowledge that is essential to election.

Counsel for respondent, however, relies on the provisions of s. 175 which runs, "Such knowledge or waiver of enquiry may be inferred from any act of the legatee which renders it impossible to place the persons interested in the subject-matter of the bequest in the same condition as if such act had not been done." This section differs from s. 174 in that it only permits an inference. Apart from that, I do not think that the receipt of money at any time rendered it impossible to place the parties in the same condition as if the money had not been taken. Further there is the fact that in 1915 the surviving sons made effective arrangements for depriving her of all power to deal with anything more than the interest arising from her investments.

My conclusion, therefore, is that the principle of election is of no avail to the plaintiff.

To sum up, my findings are (1) that the property No. 45 Guru Prosad Chowdhury Lane really belonged to Ganga Bishnu Roy at the time of his death although the title deed was in the name of Girijamoni; (2) that it has not been proved that Girijamoni was not the real owner of No. 1 Raghu Nath Chatterjee Street, and that she and her successors are not precluded from claiming it as her property by the principle of election; (3) that so far as No. 46 Guru Grosad Chowdhury Lane is concerned no question of benami arises, and that neither election nor estoppel debars the defendants from resisting the plaintiff's claim to it.

I would, therefore, agree with the learned Chief Justice in the modification of the decree which he proposes.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47, O. XXI, rr. 66, 90—Execution of decree—Sale, application to set aside—Notice of sale proclamation—Under-valuation—Appeal, second, whether lies.

An application by a judgment-debtor to set aside a Court sale on the ground that he had no notice of the proclamation of sale and that there was an under-valuation of the property falls under O. XXI, r. 66, C. P. C., and a second appeal lies against an order therein, although the application purported to have been filed under r. 90 of O. XXI.

Appeal against an order, dated the 15th November 1922, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Narasapur, in Mis. A. S. No. 20 of 1922, preferred against that of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Narasapur, in C. M. P. No. 752 of 1921 in E. P. No. 148 of 1921 in O. S. No. 480 of 1919.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Bapirazu, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The 2nd defendant is the petitioner. This Civil Miscellaneous Second Appeal arises in connection with an application made by him to set aside a sale under O. XXI, r. 90, C. P. C. A preliminary objection is taken that no second appeal lies in such a case. In reply, it is pointed out by Mr. Somasundaram for the appellant that though the petition is filed as one under O. XXI, r. 90, in substance the objections which he intends to press here are really objections which come under O. XXI, r. 66 and, therefore, there is a right of second appeal as the application is really one under s. 47, C. P. C. The objections put forward are two in number, namely, that the petitioner had no notice of the proclamation of sale and that there is an undervaluation of the property. Both these objections fall under O. XXI, r. 66 and according to the decision in Thekkedath Neelu Neithiar v. Subramania Moothan (1), the petitioner has got the right of preferring a second appeal. I, therefore, overrule the preliminary objection.

On the merits, I find that no question of law arises in this second appeal. The lower Appellate Court has found that, though the petitioner was not personally served, he has been served in the manner provided by the C. P. C. The Court ordered substituted services on the petitioner and the finding of the Court amounts to this, namely, that in the circumstances of the case, such service was sufficient. The petitioner is one of the members of an undivided joint Hindu family. His father and mother were also parties to the suit. The father was personally served and the others were served by the notices affixed to the outer door of their house. Apart from the fact that the petitioner was properly served, I think that the family interests in the property would have been properly looked after by the judgment-debtors.

Then it is argued that the property has been undervalued. This, like the other point, is also purely a question of fact. The lower Court has recorded a finding against the appellant and I am bound by it. I must, therefore, dismiss the second appeal with costs.

Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922), ss. 14, 15—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 115—Pre-emption—Notice to person entitled to pre-empt—Refusal to pre-empt—Estoppel.

It is not compulsory for a vendor to give a notice under s. 14 of the Agra Pre-emption Act. He may, by word of mouth, or in any other way, inform a person having a right of pre-emption of his intention to sell. If the person to whom that communication is made states there and then that he refuses to purchase the property, he is disqualified from subsequently maintaining a suit for pre-emption. The case is really one of estoppel under s. 115 of the Evidence Act. A person to whom a notice has been given having intimated his refusal and the sale having been made after that refusal, he cannot be allowed to turn round and seek to enforce his right of pre-emption through the Court. Section 15 of the Agra Pre-emption Act has nothing to do with such a case.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarnagar, dated the 10th October 1924.

Mr. K. C. Mital, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—We think the decision of the lower Appellate Court in this case is correct. The case is a case under the Agra Pre-emption Act (XI of 1922). One of the pleas which was raised by the defendant-purchaser was that the plaintiff pre-emptor had been told about the proposed sale and had intimated that he did not desire to purchase the property.

It was argued in the Court below and it is argued here that the terms of ss. 14 and 15 of the Agra Pre-emption Act ought to be applied to this case and that it ought to be held that a notice under s. 14 should have issued to the plaintiff as being a person who was entitled to a right of pre-emption. As regards this argument it is sufficient to say that s. 14 does not make it obligatory on the vendor to give a notice to a person who has a right of pre-emption.

Reference is also made to s. 15 which deals with the extinction of the right of pre-emption of any person to whom a notice has been given under s. 14. It is argued before us that when a notice is issued under s. 14 the person who receives the notice is allowed a month to make up his mind as to whether he will or will not take the property, and so it is said that if this period is given to a person with a right of pre-emption in order to determine whether he will purchase the property, similarly a right should be given to a person in the position of the present plaintiff to whom no registered notice was given under s. 14. We cannot agree with this contention either. Section 15, as we have said, merely lays down that when a notice has been issued to any person under s. 14 his right of pre-emption is extinguished unless he communicates his intention to purchase the property within one month.

We think the learned Judge of the Court below was right in saying that it is not compulsory for a vendor to give a notice under s. 14. He may, by word of mouth or in any other way, inform a person having a right of pre-emption of his intention to sell. If, as is found in the present case, the person to whom that communication is made states there and then that he refuses to purchase the property, then we think he is disqualified from maintaining a suit for pre-emption. There is no need to refer to any special procedure laid down in Ch. III of the Agra Pre-emption Act. As the learned Judge of the Court below observes the case is really a case of estoppel under s. 115 of the Evidence Act. The person to whom a notice has been given having intimated his refusal and the sale having been made after that refusal, he cannot be allowed to turn round and seek to enforce his right of pre-emption through the Court. The doctrine of estoppel applies to all sorts of cases including pre-emption cases and we think it was properly applied in the Court below. We uphold the judgment of the Court below and dismiss the appeal under O. XLI, r. 11.

Custom—Partition, effect of—Wajib-ul-arz prepared in partition proceedings—Minor co-sharer, whether bound.

A custom of pre-emption recorded in a wajib-ul-arz is not necessarily abrogated by the partition of the village. It is open to the co-sharers to adopt that custom in its entirety or to modify it in order to adapt it to the altered constitution of the village. [p. 415, col. 2.]

It must be presumed that a minor co-sharer was duly represented during partition proceedings by some lawful guardian, who looked after his interests, and a wajib-ul-arz prepared in the partition proceedings must, therefore, be held to be binding on all the parties to the partition proceedings. [p. 416, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Distract Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 24th July 1923.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. S. N. Verma, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is without force. The plaintiff sued to pre-empt certain property situated in certain mahals in which he was a co-sharer. The plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to preference by reason of his being a near kinsman of the vendor. The defendant-vendee was also a co-sharer in the mahal, and his defence was that he was also related to the vendor. The plaintiff relied on an alleged custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1882 and that prepared after the partition of the village in question in 1911. Both these wajib-ul-arzes gave a preferential right to a near kinsman of the vendor who was also a co-sharer in the mahal or patti in which the property sold was situated. The Court of first instance found that the custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz of 1882 ceased to be enforceable after the partition and that the plaintiff could only succeed on the ground that there was a contract of pre-emption entered in the new wajib-ul-arz which was prepared at the time of partition. The lower Appellate Court upheld that view.

We have examined the wajib-ul-arzes produced in the case, and have no doubt that the view taken by the Courts below in regard to the effect of the partition on the custom recorded in the previous wajib-ul-arz is erroneous. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Digambar Singh v. Ahmed Sayeed Khan (1), a custom recorded in the wajib-ul-arz is not necessarily abrogated by the partition of the village. It is open to the co-sharers to adopt that custom in its entirety or to modify it in order to adapt it to the altered constitution of the village. The co-sharers in the present instance appear to have adopted the former course, for the wajib-ul-arz recorded at the time of the partition of the village in question stated that the right of pre-emption shall continue to belong, in spite of the partition of the village, to the co-sharers who were near kinsmen of the vendor and that it would extend, subject to the limitations therein recorded, to co-sharers of one mahal as against co-sharers of the other mahals. The plaintiff, being a nearer kinsman of the vendor, was, therefore, rightly granted a decree for pre-emption.

It is urged on behalf of the defendant-vendee that the vendor was a minor at the time of the partition and that he was not bound by any contract entered into by the co-sharers at the time. Even assuming that he was a minor co-sharer at the time it must be presumed that he must have been duly represented in the partition proceedings by some lawful guardian who looked after his interests, and the wajib-ul-arz prepared in partition proceeding must, therefore, be held to be binding on all the parties to the partition proceedings. It is not open to the vendor, if he was a co-sharer at the time, to go behind the partition proceeding and raise pleas inconsistent with what was then recorded as one of the conditions on which the partition was effected. That being so, this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Partition—Allotment of lands, whether can be questioned in Civil Courts.

Where in a partition the directions given in the tarz taqsim are not complied with in the actual carrying out of the partition, the party aggrieved has a right of appeal. Subject to that, however, the final proceedings of the partition Court in the matter of the allotment of lands are conclusive and cannot be challenged in a Civil Court.

Second appeal against a decree of the Suborbinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 18th July 1923, preferred against that of the Munsif, Amethi at Sultanpur, dated the 29th March 1923.

Mr. Moti Lal Saksena, for the Appellant.

Mr. Khaliquzzaman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is the defendant's appeal. It arose out of a suit by the plaintiffs-respondents for possession of 2 bighas 1 biswa 1 biswansi land in village Raipur in the District of Fyzabad. The title on which the claim was laid was stated to be that the land was allotted to the plaintiff No. 1 in the partition of the village in the year 1912 affected under the provisions of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. The defendant-appellant was a party to that partition proceeding. The Courts below have concurrently found that the land in suit was allotted to the plaintiff No. 1 in the partition mentioned above. They have further shown that if the land in suit were thrown into the defendant's share the share would exceed the proportion to which he is entitled. The argument at the hearing of this appeal was that the defendant held the land in suit under a sale-deed from the plaintiff No. 1 and according to the directions in the tarz taqsim this land should have been thrown into the chitti of the vendor. But it has been thrown into the chitti of the vendor, that is, the plaintiff No. 1, and as his own property. If the directions given in the tarz taqsim were not in any manner complied with in the actual carrying out of the partition the defendant had a right of appeal. As it is, the final proceedings of the partition Court in the matter of the allotment of lands are conclusive and cannot be challenged in a Civil Court.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12, Sch. I, Art. 154 —Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476— Application for order directing prosecution, dismissal of—Appeal—Limitation—Time spent in obtaining copy of order appealed against, whether can be excluded.

Petitioner was plaintiff in a civil suit which was decreed. He subsequently made an application under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. for an order to prosecute the defendants. The Trial Court rejected the application. Petitioner filed an appeal under s. 476 (B) of the Code, and attached a copy of the order of the Trial Court rejecting his application to the appeal. His appeal was dismissed on the ground that it was barred by time and that he was not entitled to deduct from the period of limitation prescribed, the time spent by him in obtaining a copy of the order appealed against:

Held, that under the rules of the Court the petitioner was bound to file along with his appeal a copy of the order appealed against and that, therefore, under s. 12 of the Limitation Act he was entitled to deduct the period spent by him in obtaining a copy of that order from the period of limitation prescribed for the appeal and that consequently his appeal was within time and must be decided on the merits.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Meerut, dated the 1st August 1924.

Messrs. Panna Lal and K. C. Mital, for the Applicant.

Messrs. Nehal Chand and Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—These applications in criminal revision arise under the following circumstances :—

The plaintiff in a suit in the Munsif's Court at Meerut applied to that Court under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. to prosecute the two defendants. The learned Munsif rejected the application. The plaintiff thereupon filed an appeal in the Court of the Sessions Judge of Meerut under s. 476 (B) of the Cr. P. C. The order of the Munsif was passed on the 21st of May 1924. The appeal was filed in the Court of the Sessions Judge on the 24th of July 1924. The learned Sessions Judge held that the appeal was time-barred and declined to hear it. He says: "In a case of this nature I hold that limitation begins to run from the date of the order appealed against. There was no need to file a copy of the final order in this matter. I, therefore, hold that the appeal is time-barred."

Article 154 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act applies to an appeal of this kind and under that Art. 30 days are allowed from the date of the sentence or order appealed from.

The application by the plaintiff under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. was treated as a separate miscellaneous civil case, and given a separate number and was quite distinct from the civil suit which had been decided. When the Court passed its order, according to the practice approved of by this Court, a formal order was drawn up on the printed form which is provided for such formal orders in miscellaneous cases, embodying the result of the judgment passed in the case.

The plaintiff before presenting his appeal in the Court of the Sessions Judge applied for and obtained a copy of this formal order and filed it along with his memorandum of appeal.

According to the rules of this Court an appeal filed from a miscellaneous order of this kind on the civil side, at any rate, must be accompanied by a copy of the formal order which the Courts are directed to draw up.

If the time taken for obtaining a copy of this formal order can be deducted under the provisions of s. 12 of the Indian Limitation Act, then admittedly the appeal was within time.

The question is whether the learned Judge was right in holding that in this case limitation began to run from the date of the order and that there was no necessity to file a copy of the formal order.

Section 12, cl. (2) of the Indian Limitation Act provides: "The time requisite for obtaining a copy of the. . . . . order appealed from shall be excluded."

I think, therefore, that the Court below should have held that the appeal was filed within time.

It is argued that it was unnecessary to make a final order in such a case and, therefore, it was unnecessary to file a copy of such an order, if made, in a case reported as Mahesh Kant Choudhury v. Ram Prasad Rai (1) it was held that in a case in which it was not necessary to prepare a decree but where one is actually prepared the time for obtaining a copy of the decree should under s. 12 of the Limitation Act be excluded in computing the period of limitation for appeal. In principle I agree with that ruling. Here under the rules a formal order was drawn up embodying the decision of the Munsif. A copy of that formal order was promptly applied for and when obtained, an appeal was promptly lodged. I think the plaintiff was quite justified in thinking that it was necessary for him to file a certified copy of the formal order against which in fact, he was appealing. I think, therefore, that the lower Court should have heard the appeal.

The learned Sessions Judge has gone on leave and his successor is as ignorant of the merits of the case as I am. As the record is here, instead of sending the case back I propose to decide the matter myself.

16*th January* 1925.

I have heard the learned Counsel on behalf of the applicant and have examined the record and the order of the Munsif.

The plaintiff sued for the removal of a tin shed which it was alleged had been partly inserted into the western wall of the plaintiff's house.

The two defendants verified a written statement in which it was in the first place denied that the shed penetrated into the wall of the plaintiff at all and secondly it was stated that the wall did not belong to the plaintiff alone but was the joint property of the plaintiff and the defendants. Neither of the two defendants gave evidence in the case.

The suit was heard and decreed and on appeal that decree was upheld.

Thereafter the plaintiff applied to the Munsif for an order under s. 476, Cr. P. C., to prosecute the two defendants for having falsely verified their written statement with reference to the two matters above mentioned.

The learned Munsif issued notice to the defendants and examined them. He also inspected the locality and he found that from external appearances it was impossible to say that the shed in any way penetrated into the wall. On removal of the plaster, however, it was found that in some places the tin penetrated into the wall for about two inches. This was only here and there. On that ground he held that nobody could say what really was the position of affairs until the plaster had been removed as nothing was visible from the outside.

On the second point I am told that there is strong evidence to prove that the statement in the written statement that the wall was a party wall was false and must have been false to the knowledge of the defendants. It is stated that they did not produce when called upon the sale-deed of their house and if they had done so this would have shown conclusively that the western boundary of their house was the plaintiff's house and that this proves conclusively that no part of that wall belonged to the defendants. This may be so but after all the written statement is drawn up by legal practitioners on instructions received and it may be really that the mistake was made by them and possibly the defendants were not careful enough to verify the accuracy of the statement before signing it. But the learned Munsif has found that this was not done deliberately in order to deceive the Court. Had this been the case I would have expected the defendants to have come into the witness-box and sworn in support of their statements. I am not prepared to hold to that the Munsif was wrong in his opinion. I think that under the circumstances if the defendants have been guilty of carelessness and I do not think it can be said that it is proved that they have been guilty of much more, they have already been sufficiently punished by having to defend this case in three Courts. I, therefore, reject the applications.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 630 OF 1924.
CASE REFERRED No. 62 OF 1924.
November 3, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair.

In re MUTHU GOUNDAN—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (1)—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 182, 211—Charge under s. 211—Alteration into one under s. 182—Complaint, absence of—Conviction, legality of.

The essence of an offence under s. 182 of the Penal Code is not the falseness of the information, as it is the essence of an offence under s. 211 of the Code, but the contempt of the lawful authority of the public servant, and unless and until the public servant concerned chooses to move in the matter, the Court has no authority to do so suo motu, by whatever process it reaches that result.

A Court taking cognisance of an offence under s. 211 of the Penal Code, does not ipso facto take cognisance of one under s. 182 of the Code.

Where, therefore, a charge against an accused person is altered from one under s. 211, Penal Code, into one under s. 182 a conviction under the latter section is bad in the absence of a complaint by the public servant concerned.

Case referred for the orders of the High Court, under s. 438 of the Cr. P. C., by the Sessions Judge, Salem, in his letter, dated the 1st September 1924.

Mr. N. Rajagopalan, for the Accused.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—Without going into the question of whether this Court in revision can go into the question of the bona fides of the accused's plea of guilty, we prefer to base our order on the legal point taken by Mr. Rajagopalan for the accused, viz., that the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had no jurisdiction to convict accused for an offence under s. 182, Indian Penal Code, as he had not a complaint under that section of the public servant concerned, vide s. 195 (1) (a) of the Cr. P. C. We do not think that the difficulty of the absence of such a complaint is got over by arguing that an offence under s. 182, Indian Penal Code, is contained in an offence under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, and that, therefore, the Court taking cognisance of an offence under the latter section ipso facto takes cognisance of an offence under the former.

The essence of an offence under s. 182 is not the falseness of the information, as it is the essence of an offence under s. 211 but the contempt of the lawful authority of the public servant and unless and until the public servant concerned chooses to move in the matter, the Court has no authority to do so suo motu, whatever process it reaches that result. We must, therefore, hold that the conviction of accused under s. 182, Indian Penal Code, is bad and set it aside. The result in our opinion is that the proceedings from the time of alteration of the charge are without jurisdiction and that the Magistrate must start again from the original charge sheet under s. 211, Indian Penal Code, if the Police are still prepared to proceed with the prosecution of that charge. We order accordingly.

Procedure—Hearing of case concluded—Delivery of judgment, date fixed for—Accused, absence of—Complainant, whether can be required to deposit process fees—Acquittal of accused, legality of.

After the hearing of a summons case was concluded a date was fixed for delivery of judgment. On that date the complainant appeared but the accused did not appear and the Court made an order directing the complainant to deposit process fees to secure the attendance of the accused and the case was adjourned to another date. On the next date it appeared that the complainant had failed to deposit process fees as directed and the Court made an order that the case may be dismissed for default of prosecution and that the accused be acquitted:

Held, (1) that the order of the Court directing the complainant to deposit process fees for securing the attendance of the accused was entirely illegal and without jurisdiction;

(2) that the accused having failed to appear on the date fixed for the delivery of the judgment the Court should have cancelled his bond and should have issued a warrant for his arrest;

(3) that the order dismissing the complaint and directing the acquittal of the accused was consequently also illegal and without jurisdiction;

(4) that the case must, therefore, be remanded to the Trial Court with the direction that it should fix a fresh date for delivery of judgment and should deliver a judgment on that date on the evidence already before it.

Criminal reference by the Additional Sessions Judge, Bareilly, dated the 6th January 1925.

REFERRING ORDER.—This is an application for revision of an order of the Bench Magistrates of Aonla, dated the 3rd October 1924.

The facts of the case are as follows:—On the 31st June 1924 Bhimmi, the applicant, in this case filed a complaint against Pershadi under s. 352 and s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code. The complaint was instituted in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Aonla. The Magistrate recorded the evidence of some witnesses under s. 202 of the Cr. P. C. He then transferred the case to the Court of the Bench Magistrates of Aonla for disposal. The Bench Magistrates examined the accused and then asked the parties to adduce all their evidence. The complainant examined a certain number of witnesses and the accused also examined a certain number of witnesses. The hearing of the case was concluded on the 24th September 1924. On that date they passed an order that judgment would be delivered on the 30th September 1924. They directed the accused to be present on that date. On that date it was discovered that the complainant was present but the accused was absent. Then the Bench Magistrates ordered the complainant to file a process fee to secure the attendance of the accused on the 3rd October. The complainant did not file the process fee required. The case came on for hearing on the 3rd October 1924. The following order was recorded on the order sheet on that date:—

"The case came up for hearing. The complainant has not filed the process fee in spite of an order to this effect. It is hereby directed that the case be dismissed for default of prosecution, and Pershadi accused be acquitted, and the papers be consigned to records."

Against this order Bhimmi, the complainant, has filed this application for revision. This application has been sent to this Court for disposal.

Pershadi has entered appearance in this Court in response to the notice issued to him. It is contended on behalf of the applicant that the order of the Court below was absolutely illegal. It is contended that the Magistrates ought to have recorded a judgment in this case and if, as they found, the accused was absent on the date fixed for delivery of judgment they ought to have secured the attendance of the accused in the manner laid down in the Cr. P. C. On behalf of Pershadi it is contended in reply that the order of the Court below was not illegal.

The question is if the order of the Court below was illegal. Now there can be no doubt that the 30th September 1924 was fixed for pronouncing the judgment in this case. The Magistrates ought to have recorded a judgment and if as they found the accused was absent they should have enforced his attendance in a manner laid down in Cr. P. C. They should have cancelled his bonds and should have issued a warrant for his arrest. But the Magistrates did not do this. They did not record any judgment. In my opinion they were not justified in ordering the complainant to file a process fee to enforce the attendance of the accused. Such an order was absolutely illegal. The complainant is generally ordered to file process fee when he wishes that a process should issue to the accused to attend the Court and answer the charge in a summons case as this particular case happened to be. But it is nowhere laid down in the Code that the complainant must file a process fee to enforce the attendance of the accused not on the date of trial nor on the date of arguments, but on the date fixed for delivery of judgment. It is thus clear that the order directing the complainant to pay process fee is absolutely unwarranted by law.

It follows then that the order dismissing the complaint for default of prosecution of the complainant is equally unwarranted by law. And the order of acquittal also is equally invalid.

It is contended on behalf of Pershadi that this Court cannot take cognisance of this petition for revision as it is a case of acquittal and the only Court that can revise an order of acquittal is the Hon'ble High Court. But this is not a case of acquittal on merits. In fact the order of acquittal is in the eyes of law no order at all. Under s. 435 of the Cr. P. C. this Court is entitled to send for the record of a case and to examine whether the order passed was improper and illegal. As I have already said the order is absolutely illegal. It cannot be allowed to stand and since it is not an order of discharge or an order under s. 203 of the Cr. P. C. no action can be taken under s. 436 of the Cr. P. C. I am, therefore, of opinion that this is a fit case to report to the Hon'ble High Court with a recommendation that the order in question be set aside and the case sent back to the Bench Magistrates for recording a proper judgment in the case and then to pronounce it. The record shall be sent through the District Magistrate to the Bench Magistrates asking them to submit such explanation as they like in regard to the order passed by them. On receipt of the explanation the record shall be submitted to the Hon'ble High Court for such action as the Hon'ble Court thinks fit.

JUDGMENT.—I agree with the District Magistrate that it would be a pity to give the case a new lease of life, but the Sessions Judge is correct in his view that the proceedings of Magistrates on the 30th September, the date fixed for judgment, were entirely illegal, and their order on the complainant was without jurisdiction. They ought to have disposed of the case on the merits. I accept the Reference, without issuing notice to the parties as no question on the merits is before me, and remit the case to the Bench Magistrates, with a direction to fix a date for delivering judgment, and to deliver a judgment on that date, on the evidence already before them. Notice of the date fixed must be given to the parties, and the Magistrates may use their discretion as to hearing arguments before judgment. They are not obliged to do so, and they must not allow any further evidence but deliver judgment on the case as it stands.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS CASE No. 64 OF 1924.

August 29, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kulwant Sahay.

GOURI SHANKER AND OTHERS—SECOND PARTY—PETITIONERS

THE COLLECOR OF MUZAFFERPUR —FIRST PARTY—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 145, 426—Dispute relating to immoveable property—Sale by one of the parties of his interest, effect of—Jurisdiction of Magistrate—Stay of proceedings by High Court—Matter brought to notice of Magistrate—Duty of Magistrate—Procedure.

Once proceedings pending in the Court of a Magistrate are stayed by the High Court and the matter is brought to the notice of the Magistrate before whom the proceedings are pending it is his duty to stay his hands and stop further proceedings. If in spite of such notice the Magistrate proceeds with the matter any order passed by him must be treated as passed without jurisdiction and cannot stand. [p. 423, col. 2]

Where in a proceeding under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. proper opportunity is not given to one of the parties to represent his case and to cross-examine the witnesses examined on behalf of the opposite party or to produce his documentary evidence, he is entitled to have the proceedings transferred to the Court of some other Magistrate. [ibid.]

Where a Magistrate receives information from any source that there is a likelihood of a breach of the peace relating to the possession of immoveable property, he is entitled to initiate proceedings under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C., even although it appears that one of the parties has already sold the property provided he has not delivered possession to the purchaser and still claims to be in possession of the property. [p. 424, col. 1.]

Application against an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Hajipur, dated the 22nd July 1924.

Messrs. Nirsu Narayan Singh and Bhuvaneshwar Prasad Sinha, for the Petitioners.

Mr. L. N. Singh, Government Pleader, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioners were the second party in a proceeding under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C. initiated by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Hajipur. The proceedings were initiated on an application made by the Collector of Muzafferpur under the following circumstances. Certain plots of land which had been acquired by Government under the Land Acquisition Act for the purpose of B. & N. W. Railway had been relinquished by the Railway Company on the ground that they did not require the land any longer. After such relinquishment those plots of land were resumed by the Government in September 1923. In April 1924 the Collector sold those lands by auction to one Khobari Choudhury, but when the Kanungo was deputed to deliver possession to the purchaser he was resisted by the petitioners who claimed those lands as their lands and not the lands belonging to the Railway Company. The Kanungo found certain structures on portions of the land and upon his report the Collector of Muzafferpur applied to the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Hajipur for institution of proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C. On receipt of this application the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Hajipur initiated proceedings under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C., by his order dated the 26th May 1924, which runs thus:—

"The Collector's petition perused. Draw up proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C., at once for 16th June 1924".

In these proceedings the Collector of Muzafferpur was the first party and the second party were the petitioners. On the 16th June 1924 Gauri Shanker of the second party appeared and represented before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate that copy of the proceedings had not been served upon him or upon the other members of the second party and he wanted time to file written statement and to be ready to go on with the case. The learned Sub-

Divisional Magistrate rejected the application with the following order:—

"Only Gauri Shanker is represented. In the case of others the copy of the proceedings was served by hanging the same on their residential houses on the 1st June. They and Gauri Shanker had enough time to be ready. Petition of Gauri Shanker for time rejected".

After rejecting the application for time the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate at once proceeded to examine witnesses for the first party. He examined five witnesses and called upon Gauri Shanker to cross-examine them; Gauri Shanker expressed his inability to cross-examine them as he was not ready. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate refused to grant him time to cross-examine the witnesses and in the order-sheet he recorded the following order:—

"Examined five witnesses for the first party. Cross-examination by Gauri Shanker declined. These witnesses are, therefore, discharged.

"To 2nd July 1924, for evidence of second party."

On the 17th June 1924 the second party filed an application in which they stated that on the previous day they were not ready to go on with the case inasumch as the proceedings were not served upon them and no written statement had been filed and no documents had been produced and they prayed that the witnesses for the first party who had been examined on the previous day might be re-called for cross-examination. The learned Magistrate rejected this application without assigning any reason whatsoever. On the same day, namely, the 17th June the second party filed another application giving a list of witnesses whom they wanted to be summoned on their behalf. Amongst the witnesses named in this application were two witnesses, Babu Jogeshwar Prasad, Sub-Deputy Magistrate of Samastipur, and Maulavi Ishaq, Sub-Inspector of the Railway Police, whom they wanted to be summoned through the Superintendent of Police of the Railway Police at Samastipur. It was necessary to call these two witnesses in order to prove certain reports and enquiries made by them in a proceeding under s. 144 between the second party in the present proceedings and others in which proceedings the second party were found to be in possession of the land in dispute. The order passed upon this petition by the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate was. "Issue summons on payment of travelling allowance of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate".

Now the amount of the travelling allowance was not stated and the petitioners were not told as to what amount was necessary for them to deposit in order to issue summons upon the Sub-Deputy Magistrate. The case was called on on the 2nd July 1924. On that day the second party filed another petition to re-call the witnesses of the first party for cross-examination. This was rejected on the ground that the second party had already had an opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses for the first party. On that day the second party filed another petition to summon Babu Jogeshwar Prasad, Sub-Deputy Magistrate, and Maulavi Ishaq, Sub-Inspector of the B. & N. W. Ry. Police. The learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate rejected this application also on the ground that the second party were asked on the 17th June to deposit the travelling allowance of the Sub-Deputy Magistrate which they had failed to do. As regards the Sub-Inspector Maulavi Ishaq, the reason given for not summoning him was that he had been summoned on the previous application but the second party had given wrong address and the summons was returned unserved and even on the 2nd July when fresh application for summoning him was made no address was given of the Sub-Inspector. Having rejected this application of the second party the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate proceeded at once to examine three witnesses of the second party who were present in Court and after cross-examining them these witnesses were discharged. He thereafter thought fit to make a local inspection and he fixed 6th July for a local inspection. Later on on the same day after recording that he will hold a local inspection on the 6th July the learned Magistrate passed the following order:—

"The Assistant Government Pleader prays for an immediate local inspection. I will do it this evening. Inform parties".

He accordingly held the local inspection on that day and he postponed the case to the 23rd July 1924 for order.

On the 22nd July the second party filed the application giving rise to the present revision case in this Court in which they prayed for quashing the proceedings or in the alternative for transfer of the case from the file of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Hajipur and a Division Bench of this Court admitted the application and ordered the issue of the usual notice and directed further procedings to be stayed pending the disposal of this application. This order was passed by the Division Bench of this Court on the 22nd July 1924 and from the affidavit file to day on behalf of the petitioners, it appears that on the same day Amir Singh the karpardaz of the second party, who had come to Patna to move that application, went back to Hajipur with a certificate given to him by Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha, the Vakil who had moved the application, stating that the application had been moved by him and that this Court had admitted the application and had ordered the stay of further proceedings. The certificate of Mr. Nirsu Narain Sinha was filed before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate with an application in the first hour of the 23rd July 1924 and it was stated that the petitioners had moved the High Court for quashing the proceedings and for the transfer of the case to some other Court and that a Division Bench of this Court had issued a Rule and had directed further proceedings to be stayed and they prayed that further proceedings might be stayed, and that the learned Magistrate should refrain from hearing the arguments and deciding the case The affidavit of Amir Singh filed to-day stated that this application was presented before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on the 23rd July in the first hour before the case was called on. But it appears that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate took absolutely no notice of this application and of the fact that this Court had stayed further proceedings pending the disposal of the application, and, without hearing the arguments on either side, he proceeded to pronounce his final order in the case declaring possession of the first party. Notice of this affidavit filed to-day was given to the Government Pleader on 20th August, and the correctness of the facts therein stated is not denied.

At the hearing of this application a preliminary objection is taken by the learned Government Pleader that this petition has become infructuous inasmuch as the proceedings had terminated in a final order declaring the first party to be in possession. Having regard to the circumstances of the case I am clearly of opinion that the action taken by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was wholly irregular and unwise, and he has laid himself open to grave censure. His attention may be drawn to the observations of Mookerjee, J., in the case of Satinath Sikdar v. Ratanmani Naskar (1). Once proceedings are stayed by this Court and the matter is brought to the notice of the Magistrate or the Court in which the proceeding is pending, it is his duty to stay his hands and stop further proceedings. In the present case an application was filed before him in the first hour before the case was called on supported by a certificate given by the Vakil who had moved the application in this Court and the matter was brought to his notice that this Court had stayed the proceedings. Under these circumstances it was his menifest duty to stay his hands and not to pass any order in the case. In spite of his being apprised of the fact that further proceedings had been ordered to be stayed by this Court he did proceed to dispose of the case and to pass final orders. This order cannot stand and must be treated as passed without jurisdiction. He had no power to pronounce the final order or to proceed with the case once the proceedings had been stayed by this Court. Courts have gone to the length of holding that whether orders of stay are communicated to the Court below or not, the moment such orders are made by the High Court, the Court in which the proceedings are pending has no jurisdiction to make any further order in the case. However, the fact that the learned Sub-Divisional Magistrate had thought fit to proceed with the case and to make a final order will in no way affect the decision of the present case. Having regard to the circumstances stated in the petition and to the fact that no proper opportunity was given to the second party to represent their case and to cross-examine the witnesses examined on behalf of the first party, or to produce their documentary evidence, it is clear that they were greatly prejudiced in the present proceedings.

As regards the Sub-Deputy Magistrate whom the second party wanted to examine in order to prove his report in a previous case, the second party were never informed as to the amount that was necessary for them to deposit, and when on the 2nd July they renewed their prayer, it was evidently the duty of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate to give them an opportunity to deposit the travelling allowance and to summon the Sub-Deputy Magistrate. As regards the Sub-Inspector of the Railwey Police Maulavi Ishaq, the prayer of the second party was that the summons might be served through the Superintendent of Police of Samastipur. That is the way in which summonses are served upon Government servants and that is the provision in s. 72 of the Cr. P. C. and I do not see how the address given by the second party in their application of the 17th June was incorrect or why the summons was not served on the Sub-Inspector when it was sent to the Superintendent of Police at Samastipur.

As regards the ground taken by the learned Vakil for the petitioner that the proceeding should be quashed inasmuch as the Collector had already sold the land to a third person and, therefore, had no interest left in the land and that, therefore, he cannot be made a party to the proceedings, I am clearly of opinion that this contention cannot be sustained. The Collector has no doubt sold the land to a third party, but he has not delivered possession to the third party and claims to be still in possession and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate was entitled to initiate proceedings if he received information from any source that there was a likelihood of a breach of the peace relating to possession of the immoveable property. Therefore, the prayer for quashing the proceedings cannot be granted. But in the circumstances of the present case it is desirable that the proceedings should be transferred from the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Hajipur to some other competent Court.

The orders of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate passed by him after the 2nd July 1924 are all set aside. The case will be transferred to the District Magistrate of Patna which is the nearest place from Hajipur and he will make it over to a Magistrate at Patna competent to hear and decide this case. The second party will be given proper opportunity to cross-examine the witnesses produced by the first party and produce their own documentary and oral evidence.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 439 OF 1924.

December 17, 1924.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Crump.

MANGAL NARAN—ACCUSED —APPELLANT

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 423, 439—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 302—Appeal, admission of—Enhancement of sentence, notice of, when to be given—Practice—Murder—Death sentence not inflicted by Sessions Judge—Revision—Interference by High Court.

Where a case comes to the knowledge of the High Court by an appeal being filed against a conviction it is not desirable, if the appeal is admitted, to issue a notice at the same time for enhancement of the sentence under s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. It is incongruous that the Court in the same breath should admit the appeal of the accused, and should issue notice calling upon him to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, especially where the sentence proposed to be inflicted in the notice to enhance is the sentence of death. The proper procedure is to deal first with the appeal and then to consider whether a notice to enhance should be issued. [p. 425, col. 1.]

If after an appeal has been heard on its merits and dismissed, a notice to enhance the sentence is issued, the accused has still the right under sub-s. (6) of s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. to show cause against his conviction, but any attempt to set aside the conviction would not have much chance of success. [p. 425, col. 2.]

It is only in very rare cases that the High Court will interfere with the order of a Sessions Judge sentencing a man convicted of murder to transportation for life because the circumstances of the case appear to him not to demand the sentence of death. The High Court will interfere only in cases in which the sentence of death is the only possible sentence to be inflicted. [ibid.]

Criminal appeal from the conviction and sentence passed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Ahmedabad.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The accused in this case was found guilty of (1) kidnapping a girl in order to commit murder under s. 364, Indian Penal Code, and (2) having murdered the girl and so having committed an offence under s. 302, Indian Penal Code. For the first offence he was sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment, and for the second he was sentenced to transportation for life.

The accused filed a petition of appeal from the Jail and when it came before the Court for admission the Court was of opinion that the accused ought to have been sentenced to death. Consequently the following order was made :—"Admit and issue notice to enhance the sentence, i. e., to sentence of death."

The order would at first sight seem to be strange, although it may be justified by the addition to s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. contained in sub-s. 6. The Court exercising the powers conferred on a Court of Appeal by the relative section of the Cr. P. C. has no power to enhance the sentence. But under s. 439 :—

"In the case of any proceeding the record of which has been called for by itself or which has been reported for orders, or which otherwise comes to its knowledge, the High Court may, in its discretion, enhance the sentence."

Then under sub-s. 6 :—

"Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, any convicted person to whom an opportunity has been given under sub-s. (2) of showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced shall, in showing cause, be entitled also to show cause against his conviction."

The previous practice has been to dispose of the appeal first before considering the question whether the sentence should be enhanced in the event of the appeal being dismissed. Generally the cases in which the powers of the Court to enhance the sentence under s. 439 have been exercised are those in which the record has been called for by the High Court, or which have been reported to the High Court, or which otherwise come to the knowledge of the High Court on a perusal of the returns from the Subordinate Courts, and in such cases the High Court may, if it thinks fit, issue notice to the accused under s. 439, Cr. P. C., to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced. Then it is in accordance with justice that the accused should be entitled to show cause, not only against the sentence being enhanced but also against the conviction. But when a case comes to the knowledge of the Court by an appeal having been filed against a conviction it is not desirable, in my opinion, if the appeal is admitted to issue a notice at the same time under s. 439. It seems to me absolutely incongruous that the Court in the same breath should admit the appeal of the accused, and issue notice calling upon him to show cause why the sentence should not be enhanced, and especially it seems incongruous in a case of this kind, where the sentence proposed to be inflicted in the notice to enhance is the sentence of death. If, after an appeal has been heard on its merits and dismissed, a notice to enhance the sentence is issued, the accused has still the right to show cause against his conviction, but any attempt to set aside the conviction would not have much chance of success. However that may be, speaking for myself, I prefer to retain the old practice, namely, first to deal with the appeal, and then to consider whether a notice to enhance should issue. In this case there can be no doubt that the accused was guilty of murder, so the appeal is dismissed.

We have now to consider whether we should proceed with the notice to enhance. If we decide to proceed we should have to send for the accused to be present in Court. Now it is only in very rare cases that we interfere with the order of a Sessions Judge sentencing a man convicted of murder to transportation for life, because the circumstances of the case appeared to him not to demand the sentence of death. I can only remember myself one case in which the sentence of transportation for life was enhanced to sentence of death by the High Court. The facts proved in that case were so shocking that it appeared to the Court that the sentence of death was the only sentence that could be imposed on the accused. There are many murder cases which come on appeal to this Court in which it has been evident that the Sessions Judges were too lenient, and had exercised the discretion which they are given by law too much in favour of the accused. But, as I have already stated, we do not like to interfere except when we think that the sentence of death is the only possible sentence to be inflicted. In this case, although we think that the Sessions Judge ought to have sentenced the accused to death, we are not disposed to proceed with the notice to enhance the sentence.

Crump, J.—I agree in this case that the Sessions Judge would have exercised a wider discretion had he sentenced this accused person to the extreme penalty for the case was extremely bad of its kind. At the same time I do not think that it is of such an exceptional nature that we should exercise the powers that we possess to enhance the sentence of transportation for life to a sentence of death. I should be most unwilling to do so in any but most exceptional cases. I also agree as to the practice in such matters. To make the admission of the appeal of an accused person the occasion for calling upon him to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced is, in my opinion, undesirable. It is likely to produce an impression on the mind of an illiterate accused in Jail that it is proposed to enhance the sentence because he has appealed. Further, my own experience is that this practice is likely to lead to an inconvenient result because it confounds two matters which should be kept separate. The first point on an appeal is to consider whether the conviction is right or not, and that is one matter. When that matter has been disposed of, the further question that arises is as to whether the sentence imposed is not inadequate. But that is entirely a separate question, which speaking for myself, I prefer to keep distinct. Although I do not say that the procedure followed in the present case is in any way contrary to law, I do say that it is not a desirable practice. I agree, therefore, with the remarks of the learned Chief Justice.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 656 OF 1924.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 417—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 439—Debtor inducing creditor fraudulently to grant time for payment—Cheating—Acquittal—Revision—Procedure.

Accused owed a sum of money to the complainant. The complainant served the accused with a notice requiring immediate payment. Accused thereupon approached the complainant and induced him to grant 15 days' time to pay up. During the time granted the accused removed their goods from their shop with the intention of escaping the payment of their debt to the complainant. Complainant prosecuted the accused for the offence of cheating and the accused were convicted. On appeal the Sessions Judge held that the prosecution evidence showed that the accused fraudulently induced the complainant to grant them time but that the fraud was inchoate and inconsequential, and on this finding the accused were acquitted. On an application for revision being made on behalf of the complainant:

Held, (1) that on the finding arrived at by the Sessions Judge there was a clear case of cheating and that the order of acquittal was, therefore, erroneous; [p. 427, col. 1.]

(2) that the order of acquittal must, therefore, be set aside and the case remanded to the Sessions Judge for re-hearing of the appeal. [ibid.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 16th August 1924.

Messrs. G. P. Boys and Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is revision filed at the instance of the complainant asking this Court to set aside an order of acquittal passed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge of Cawnpore and to restore the order of the learned Magistrate convicting the opposite parties.

It appears that the complainant's masters were whole-sale merchants of cloth and the opposite parties were retail traders. The opposite parties owed money to the complainant's firm. The complainant's masters gave the opposite parties 24 hours' time to pay up. This time was granted by means of a telegram, although the parties were residing at the same place, viz., Cawnpore. The object of sending a telegram was evidently to show the urgency of the matter. The prosecution case is that the opposite parties approached the creditor firm and induced them to grant 15 days' time to pay up. It is further said that the object was that within the time granted, the opposite parties would remove their goods from their shop and would thereby escape the payment of just dues of the creditors. This object was carried out. The telegram was sent on the 19th of May 1924 and the Civil Courts closed for the usual vacation on the 1st of June 1924. It is clear that on the closing of the Civil Courts it was not open to the creditors to seek any remedy in the Civil Court. The creditors went to the Criminal Court and brought a charge of cheating against the opposite parties. The learned Magistrate who heared the case was of opinion that cheating had been committed and he, convicting the opposite parties, sentenced them. An appeal was taken to the learned Additional Sessions Judge. He found that, to quote his own words, "All that the prosecution evidence shows is that the appellants fraudulently induced the complainants to give them some time, but the fraud it seems, was inchoate and inconsequential." The learned Sessions Judge remarks that there was no guarantee that the Civil Court at the instance of the creditors would have granted an order for attachment before judgment. But the question is not what the Civil Court would have granted or not granted. The main question is whether the creditors could have moved the Court to grant their prayer or not, if the time of 15 days had not been obtained. On the finding of the learned Sessions Judge that the time was obtained fraudulently a conviction ought to have followed.

Mr. Dillion, who has appeared for the opposite parties, has argued that the learned Sessions Judge did not really mean to hold that there was any fraudulent intention when 15 days' time was asked for. He argued that it was not expected that a Sessions Judge of Mr. Banerji's standing would make a mistake like that.

I do not think I should express any opinion of my own on the facts. It would be the duty of the learned Sessions Judge to find on the facts and to apply the law: On the judgment, as expressed by the learned Additional Sessions Judge, there would be a clear case of cheating. In my opinion the appeal has not been adequately dealt with and it should be re-heared.

I may point out that this Court was really asked to do what it was not authorised to do, viz., to convert a finding of acquittal into a finding of conviction. In the view which I take of the matter and in the course which I propose to take, the law would be respected.

I accept the petition in revision, set aside the judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge and remand the appeal to him with the direction that it will be re-heard with proper notice to the opposite parties and disposed of according to law. If there be no Additional Sessions Judge exercising jurisdiction at Cawnpore the appeal will be heard by the learned Sessions Judge himself.

MARIA—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 256, 257, 342—Examination of accused, when to be made —Cross-examination after charge, whether part of examination of prosecution witnesses:

The examination of a witness means his examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination, and the expression "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined", which occurs in s. 342 of the Cr. P. C., includes any cross-examination of the witnesses for the prosecution after the charge has been framed. It is, therefore, imperative for a Magistrate under this section to examine an accused person after the prosecution witnesses have been, if so desired by the accused, further cross-examined after the charge. [p. 430, col. 2.]

The prosecution case does not close until all the prosecution witnesses have been discharged after their examination, cross-examination, further cross-examination, if so desired by the accused, and re-examination and it is only after the prosecution witnesses have been discharged that the stage for the obligatory examination of the accused under s. 342 of the Cr. P. C. arrives. [p. 430, col. 1.]

Case-law referred to.

Appeal against a judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge, Akola, dated the 21st May 1925, in Criminal Appeal No. 119 of 1924.

Mr. P. Lobo, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

Baker, J. C.—This is an appeal by the Local Government against an order of acquittal by the Additional Sessions Judge, West Berar, Akola. The point of law involved which has been referred to a Full Bench is:

"Whether s. 342, Cr. P. C., renders it imperative for a Magistrate to examine the accused afresh after the prosecution witnesses have been further cross-examined after the charge?"

As neither the other High Courts nor the Judges of this Court are agreed on this question, I do not feel myself bound by any authority, in giving my opinion.

A large number of cases have been quoted, but I will at once rule out those cases which do not deal directly with the particular point under consideration, which is whether if the accused after all the prosecution witnesses have been examined and a charge framed re-calls any prosecution witnesses for further cross-examination after the charge, it is necessary that his statement should be taken again, after it has once been taken before the framing of the charge. We are not, therefore, concerned with cases in which the accused has not been examined at all, or in which after his examination fresh witnesses have been called by the prosecution. In such cases the accused's statement admittedly must be taken at the close of the prosecution case. We are also not concerned with Sessions cases in which the procedure is different.

This will rule out the following cases:—

Fernandez v. Emperor (1), which refers to a summons case in which the accused was not examined at all. The point in that case was whether s. 342, Cr. P. C., applied to summons cases. Gulabjan v. Emperor (2) and Basapaningapa v. Emperor (3) are also not relevant as in those cases accused was not examined at all. Bechu Chaube v. Emperor (4) is a case in which a fresh prosecution witness was examined after the accused's statement had been recorded. So also in Hamid Ali v. Srikissen Gossain (5), two witnesses for the prosecution were examined, then the accused's statement was recorded and then several more witnesses for the prosecution were examined and a charge framed without any further statements being taken from accused, while in Haro Nath Malo v. Ala Bux (6) the accused's statement was recorded after the prosecution witnesses had been examined-in-chief, but before their cross-examination, and no further statements of accused were recorded.

Section 342 of the Cr. P. C. lays down that the accused shall be questioned generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence. The point, therefore, put shortly is what is meant by the words "after the prosecution witnesses have been examined." Does it mean after they have been examined and cross-examined before the charge or, if they are re-called for further cross-examination after the charge does it mean after such cross-examination. On this point we have directly conflicting rulings of the Madras and Calcutta High Courts, and one ruling of the Lahore High Court to the same effect as that of the Madras High Court.

In the case of In re Varisai Rowther (7), it was held by a majority of the Full Bench (Venkata Subba Rao, J., dissenting) that in a warrant case, the examination of the accused directed by the latter part of s. 342, cl. (1), should be made after the prosecution witnesses have been examined, which means when the prosecution has finished calling evidence; and if the accused has been once so examined, it is not obligatory on the Court to question him again after the cross-examination and re-examination of the prosecution witnesses re-called at the instance of the accused under s. 256 of the Code.

If new and material matter is elicited in the cross-examination and re-examination of prosecution witnesses re-called under s. 256 of the Code, it is desirable, and, if fresh evidence on material matters in support of the prosecution case were elicited in such re-examination, it is probably obligatory on the Court to question the accused generally on the case: and if the prosecution calls fresh evidence after the charge is framed, the accused must be questioned generally after this further examination of prosecution witnesses.

The last proposition will not be disputed and is not relevant to the point now in question. In his dissenting judgment Venkat Subba Rao, J., held that the examination of the accused under the latter part of s. 342, cl. (1), should be made after the entire evidence for the prosecution mentioned in s. 256 has been given and before the accused called upon to enter on his defence. In Byrne v. Emperor (8) it was held in similar circumstances that although it may often be desirable that the accused should be asked, after the further cross-examination of witnesses for the prosecution re-called after the charge has been framed, whether he wishes the Court to record any additional explanation, s. 342 of the Cr. P. C., cannot be interpreted as conveying a peremptory direction to that effect, if the Court has already questioned the accused before the charge, when the case for the prosecution has been closed and the witnesses for the prosecution have been cross-examined.

The Calcutta High Court has taken a contrary view in three cases reported in I. L. R 50 Cal.

In Mazahar Ali v. Emperor (9)] it was held that under s. 342 of the Cr. P. C. it is obligatory on the Magistrate to question the accused generally on the case after the close of the prosecution case, that is when all the prosecution witnesses have been examined-in-chief, cross-examined and re-examined, although the accused has stated that he intends to file a written statement and has done so.

In Jummon Christian v. Emperor (10) though the point was not the same as in the present case, as the witnesses had not been cross-examined at all before the accused's examination, it was held that the examination of the witnesses cannot be held to have been concluded until they have also been cross-examined.

In Pramatha Nath v. Emperor (11) it was held that a Magistrate is bound to examine the accused, under s. 342 of the Cr. P. C., after the examination, cross-examination and re-examination of all the prosecution witnesses. In this case the accused was not examined at all.

In Dibakanta Chatterjee v. Gour Gopal Mukerjee (12) it was held that the word "examined" in s. 342 of the Code includes cross-examination and re-examination. The omission to examine the accused after the cross-examination and re-examination of all the prosecution witnesses vitiates the trial and conviction. The examination of the accused only after the examination-in-chief of the prosecution witnesses is not a compliance with s. 342.

It may perhaps be said that in none of the Calcutta cases was the question of examination of the accused after the further cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses after the charge considered, and, therefore, they do not lay down a rule contrary to that in the Madras case.

The Calcutta cases, however, definitely lay down that the examination of a witness means his examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination. The cross-examination and re-examination may take place at different stages and often after the charge has been framed.

I am myself unable to see any ground for making a distinction between various portions of the evidence of the same witness. His deposition must be taken as a whole and I am not in favour of the theory that it is possible to say that up to a certain point his evidence should be taken as evidence for the prosecution and after that as evidence for the defence.

The wording of s. 342, Cr. P. C., is that the accused shall be questioned "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined, and before he is called on for his defence." Section 256, after dealing with the accused's right to re-call and cross-examine such prosecution witnesses as he desires after the charge has been framed, goes on to say: "The evidence of any remaining witnesses for the prosecution shall next be taken, and, after cross-examination and re-examination (if any), they also shall be discharged. The accused shall then be called upon to enter upon his defence and produce his evidence." The plain meaning of this wording appears to me to be that the defence of the accused commences after the prosecution witnesses have been discharged, that is to say, after they have been cross-examined and re-examined, and, therefore, the stage at which the compulsory examination of the accused must take place is after the prosecution witnesses have been discharged and before he enters upon his defence; and that implies that if any prosecution witnesses have been re-called for cross-examination after the framing of the charge, the examination of the accused must take place after that. Section 257, which has been referred to both by Hallifax, A. J. C., in Gangadhar v. Bhangisao (13) and by the learned Chief Justice of the Madras High Court in his judgment in In re Varisai Rowther (7) has, in my judgment, nothing to do with the prosecution case. Section 257 refers entirely to the evidence which is produced by the accused in his defence. It is true that the second paragraph refers to the Magistrate's powers to refuse to compel the attendance of any witness who has been cross-examined or whom the accused had an opportunity to cross-examine after the charge was framed, but the meaning of that, in my opinion, is only that if the accused wishes to call as a witness in his defence a witness who has already been examined by the prosecution and whom he had an opportunity of cross-examining, he shall not, except in special circumstances, be allowed to do so. Every matter referred to in s. 257 is a matter after the accused has entered on his defence, and, therefore, after his obligatory examination under s. 342, and we must look to s. 256 to see the stage at which that obligatory examination is also to take place, and the wording of that section, which I have already referred to, leaves no doubt, in my mind, that the prosecution case does not close until all the prosecution witnesses have been discharged, and that their discharge does not take place till they have been cross-examined after the charge, if the accused so desires.

With great respect, I am unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Chief Justice of the Madras High Court. He states at page 458* of In re Varisai Rowther (7) that an examination of s. 257 shows that "the Magistrate may on the application of the accused have the prosecution witnesses re-called for examination. The questioning of the accused under s. 342 has to take place before the accused is called on for his defence; and it follows that if this cross-examination of re-called prosecution witnesses is examination of prosecution witnesses within the meaning of s. 342, it would be impossible to comply with the Statute, because the questioning would then be taking place after the accused had been called on for his defence and not before as the section requires."

With the greatest respect I would venture to say that any witnesses called under s. 257 whether they were witnesses previously examined by the prosecution or not, are called as part of the defence and that has nothing to do with their cross-examination under s. 256.

I see no warrant for confining the examination of the prosecution witnesses to their examination-in-chief. All witnesses are examined-in-chief; then, if the adverse party so desires, cross-examined; then, if the party calling them so desires, re-examined. It seems to me impossible to divide the evidence of a witness in an artificial manner; his deposition must be taken as a whole, even supposing that he was cross-examined on numerous occasions on different dates.

It may further be pointed out that under s. 256 it is contemplated that after the prosecution witnesses, who have been examined before the charge, have been cross-examined, re-examined and discharged, "The evidence of any remaining witnesses for the prosecution shall next be taken, and, after cross-examination and re-examination (if any), they also shall be discharged." This leads to the conclusion that the Code contemplates that the prosecution case shall continue after the charge has been framed, and that it is only after all the prosecution witnesses have been discharged that the accused shall be called upon to enter upon his defence.

In these circumstances I am of the same opinion as the Calcutta High Court that the examination of a witness means his examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination, and that the expression "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined", used in s. 342 of the Code, includes any cross-examination of them after the charge has been framed. I am, therefore, of opinion that the obligatory examination of the accused must be made after the witnesses for the prosecution have been cross-examined after the charge, if the accused has re-called them for such examination.

This would appear to be the view taken by this Court also. I find in Criminal Circular Memorandum No. 63, dated 1st March 1923, instructions regarding the examination of the accused. In para. 4 it is laid down that "the accused should invariably be questioned after the last cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses."

The practice, therefore, which has given rise to the present appeal of not examining the accused after the last cross-examination of the prosecution witnesses is in direct disregard of the provisions of the Circular Memorandum in question which was issued for the guidance of all Criminal Courts in the Province.

Prideaux, A. J. C.—I agree.

Kinkhede, A. J. C.—The learned Judicial Commissioner has set forth the point which the Full Bench had to decide, in the beginning of his judgment. He has very exhaustively dealt with it and in face of the elaborate discussion contained therein, I do not think I can add anything useful to it. He has summed up his conclusions towards the end of the judgment in the following terms:—

"In these circumstances I am of the same opinion as the Calcutta High Court that the examination of a witness means his examination-in-chief, cross-examination and re-examination, and that the expression "after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined" used in s. 342 of the Code includes any cross-examination of them after the charge has been framed. I am, therefore, of opinion that the obligatory examination of the accused must be made after the witnesses for the prosecution have been cross-examined after the charge, if the accused has re-called them after such examination."

In these conclusions I entirely agree.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL APPLICATION FOR REVISION No. 399 OF 1924.

January 14, 1925.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Coyajee.

DAVID SASSOON—APPLICANT

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 488—Maintenance of wife and children—Neglect to maintain—Offer to maintain children, effect of.

With regard to the maintenance which can be directed to be paid to a wife under s. 488 of the Cr. P. C. in case of her husband's negligence or refusal to maintain her, there is a special proviso to the section that if the husband offers to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him, and she refuses to live with him, the Magistrate may consider any grounds of refusal stated by her and may make an order under the section notwithstanding such offer if he is satisfied that there is just ground for so doing. [p. 432, col. 2.]

With regard to the maintenance of children, however, it is sufficient under sub-s. (1) of s. 488 of the Cr. P. C. if neglect or refusal to maintain them is proved. On such proof the Magistrate can make an order for the payment of a monthly allowance for the maintenance of each child to such person as the Magistrate from time to time directs. An offer to maintain the children in future is not sufficient of itself to debar the Magistrate from making the order. The Magistrate will be entitled to consider the circumstances in which the offer is made, and whether it is right and proper that the children, if not in the custody of the father, should be handed over to him. [p. 432, col. 2.]

Criminal application against an order of the Additional Presidency Magistrate, Bombay.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, (with him Messrs. I. J. Sopher and S. G. Shertukde), for the Applicant.

Mr. Daphtary instructed by Messrs. Dixit and Maneklal, for the Wife.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The complainant in this case was one Mrs. David Sassoon who presented an application under s. 488, Cr. P. C., for maintenance for herself and her four sons against the respondent David Sassoon, her husband and the father of the children. The defence to the application, as set out in the respondent's statement, was, that the complainant was misbehaving herself with a certain person, and had gone to Calcutta without his permission. With regard to the maintenance of the four sons, the respondent said that he was willing to have the children with him.

On the facts the Magistrate came to the conclusion without any hesitation that the defence was not proved in any of its material particulars. Consequently the charge of misconduct was proved to be false. The Magistrate further considered that the complainant had satisfied him that the respondent having sufficient means was neglecting to maintain his wife and his four sons who were unable to maintain themselves. The ages of the children varied from seven to eleven. The Magistrate then considered the contention of the respondent that he was willing to keep the children with himself, and, therefore, no order under s. 488 could be made against him. He said:—

"The point is not free from difficulty. It is not covered by any Bombay authority, so far as I know. There are conflicting rulings of the Punjab Court, supporting respondent's contention, on the one hand [viz., Man Singh v. Dharmon (1) and Sardar Muhammad v. Nur Muhammad (2)] and the decisions of the Burma Court, supporting the complainant on the other hand Murgesar Mudaliar v. Sodiamma (3). Considering the object underlying s. 488, Cr. P. C., I prefer to follow Burma rulings rather than Punjab ones. Otherwise in those cases where children are very young, as in this case, a man knowing full well that no mother would part with such children, has simply to make an ostensible offer to keep the children with him and he can thus defeat the object of s. 488, which is to secure provision for helpless children."

The Magistrate then made an order that the respondent should pay in the aggregate Rs. 90 a month to the complainant for the maintenance of herself and the children.

On November 26, a rule was granted on the application of the respondent in order that this question might be decided by this Court. Thereafter an application was made on the Crown side by the respondent under s. 491, Cr. P. C., asking that the custody of the sons should be given to him. The application was heard by Mr. Justice Mirza who came to the conclusion that the petitioner's allegation that for some time past his wife had led an unchaste life and that he was afraid that if his children were to continue to reside with her they would be contaminated, was absolutely without foundation. The learned Judge was satisfied on the evidence that Mrs. Sassoon had looked after the children very well. She had sent the elder boys to school and had educated them at her own expense. He was also satisfied that the children would be much better looked after by the mother than they would be if they were thrown to the tender mercies of their father.

(2) 41 Ind. Cas. 331; 22 P. R. 1917 Cr.; 16 P. W. R. 1917 Cr.; 18 Cr. L. J. 811.
(3) 30 Ind. Cas. 480; 16 Cr. L. J. 656; 8 Bur. L. T. 134.

We can now consider the proper construction of s. 488 of the Cr. P. C., in the light of the respondent's contention.

We think that with regard to the maintenance of children, it is sufficient under sub-section (1) of s. 488 if the neglect or refusal to maintain them is proved. On such proof, the Magistrate can make an order for the payment of a monthly allowance for the maintenance of each child to such person as the Magistrate from time to time directs. An offer to maintain the children in the future is not sufficient of itself to debar the Magistrate from making the order. The Magistrate will be entitled to consider the cirumstances in which the offer was made, and whether it was right and proper that the children, if not in the custody of the father, should be handed over to him.

With regard to the maintenance which can be directed to be paid to a wife in case her husband neglects or refuses to maintain her, there is a special proviso to the section that if the husband offers to maintain his wife on condition of her living with him, and she refuses to live with him, the Magistrate may consider any grounds of refusal stated by her, and may make an order under the section notwithstanding such offer, if he is satisfied that there is just ground for so doing. There was a very good reason in our opinion why the Legislature did not include children in that proviso, namely, so that the onus should not be thrown on them of stating grounds of refusal which would have to be considered by the Magistrate before making an order for their maintenance. It could not have been intended that the father by stating his willingness to maintain the children could deprive the Magistrate of his jurisdiction to make an order under the section. It seems to us that once the Magistrate is satisfied that a father has neglected or refused to maintain his children, he is entitled to make an order for their maintenance, though he may consider any offer by the father to maintain them in the future on its merits. In this case, agreeing entirely with the remarks of the learned Judge who heard the application under s. 491, Cr. P. C., we are satisfied that the children ought to remain with the mother. The Rule will, therefore, to discharged.

Coyajee, J.—I agree.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, South Kanara, in A. S. No. 181 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Mangalore, in O. S. No. 122 of 1919.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. Venkatachala Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sues for possession of the plaint land on the ground that he terminated the lease granted to the defendant. The District Munsif gave a decree in favour of the plaintiff, but the District Judge dismissed the suit on the ground that the clause with regard to the right of re-entry was repugnant to the nature of the document.

Mr. Sitarama Rao's contention on behalf of the appellant is that though the lease is called kayamgeni chit, yet the body of the document shows that it was not intended by the lessor that the lease should be permanent. No doubt the document is headed. "Kayamgeni chit" and begins with the words "kayamgeni chit executed on the 10th Pushuabhahula" etc., and the counter part is similar in terms and in the body of the document there is a recital that the lessee is to enjoy from generation to generation. But in the end of the document, there is a clause "When we require the property, you should take half the value of the improvements for the trees planted by us and full value for the plants planted by you out of the value fixed by wise persons for the improvements and surrender the property to us." Does this clause give the landlord the right to terminate the lease?

For the respondent, Mr. Venkatachala Iyer who appears for Mr. Anantakrishna Iyer contends that the document should be construed as containing the terms of a permanent lease. He relies upon the use of the term "kayamgeni chit," and also upon the clause that the lessee was to enjoy the land from generation to generation and upon the fact that the rent is a fixed rent. No doubt in interpreting the document in the absence of clear words to the contrary, these things would be of great value, namely, the nature of the terms used for the description of the document, the clause with regard to the enjoyment of the property from generation to generation and the rent being a fixed rent. But in a lease of this kind, the Court has to see what is the contract entered into by the lessor with the lessee. It is open to the lessee to surrender the land leased to him and it is also open to the lessor to contract with the lessee that the land should be available for him whenever he requires it. The mere use of the word "kayamgeni chit" would not take away the force of the recital in the document that the lessee should surrender the land whenever required by the landlord. In construing a document of this kind, the whole of the document should be taken into consideration. If there are clear words in the body of the document that the landlord was not to enter upon the land at any time, then the clause in question would be considered repugnant to the general tenor of the document. But so far as I can see, there is nothing in the body of the document itself to show that the landlord contracted with the lessee that the lessee should have a perpetual or a permanent lease without the right of re-entry on the part of the landlord.

For the respondent several cases were quoted. But I think they are not applicable to the case of a lease of this kind. For instance the case of In re Dugdale Dugdale

v. Dugdale (1) was a case of bequest; and the Court held that the legatee took an absolute interest under the gift, and that the attempted executory gift over was void for repugnancy.

It is also contended by Mr. Venkatachala Iyer that this clause is bad for remoteness. I fail to see how it can be said that this clause is bad for remoteness. As I have observed, it is open to two persons to contract to do or not to do a certain thing; the only question is whether the contract is one which offends against any rule of law. The decision in Maharaj Bahadur Singh v. Balchand Chowdhury (2) does not apply to this case. In that case a body of Jains were given by a Rajah the right to build on a hill belonging to him, whenever they wanted, a place for their people. The Privy Council held that there was no covenant running with the land and the observation at page 166* is "Further, if the case be regarded in another light—namely, an agreement to grant in the future whatever land might be selected as a site for a temple —as the only interest created would be one to take effect by entry at a later date, and as this date is uncertain, the provision is obviously bad as offending the rule against perpetuities for the interest would not then vest in præsenti, but would vest at the expiration of an indefinite time which might extend beyond the expiration of the proper period."

It is not necessary to notice in detail the other cases such as Banamali Chowdhury v. Ram Kinkar (3), Mohim Chandra Pal v. Pradyat Kumar Tagore (4) and Chandi Churn Baru v. Sidheswari Debi (5). The agreement in Exs. A and A-1 is one which does not offend against any rule of law. On a proper construction of the document, I have no hesitation in holding that the parties did agree that the land leased should be surrendered whenever required by the landlord and that they so contracted is clear from the fact that the landlord agreed to pay half of the value of the improvements for trees planted by himself. This evidently is in consideration of the fact that at some future time the lessee may be required to surrender the land to the lessor. I, therefore, hold that the learned District Judge was wrong in construing that the last clause of the document was repugnant to the rest of the document.

Mr. Sitarama Rao's next contention is that his client should not be asked to pay for the value of the buildings of the land. I do not think the landlord is entitled to re-enter upon the land without paying for the value of the improvements. In the document, itself the expression is "full value for plants planted by you out of the value fixed by wise persons for the improvements and surrender the property to us." I think this clearly shows that the lessor contracted to pay for the improvements on the land whatever be the nature of the improvements. I do not think the lessor is entitled to re-enter without paying compensation for the value of the building and other improvements effected by the tenant.

In the result the decree of the District Judge is set aside and that of the District Munsif restored.

Each party will bear his costs in this Court. Appellant will have his costs in the lower Appellate Court.

Custom—Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Sale in favour of co-sharer in different thok—Co-sharers in same patti, whether entitled to pre-empt.

A wajib-ul-arz provided that a co-sharer desiring to sell his property must offer it first to his own brothers, then to his cousins and nephews, then to co-sharers in the same patti, then to co-sharers in the thok and then to co-sharers in the village, and that if none of these persons were desirous to take the property, the vendor would then be at liberty to sell to a stranger. A sale was effected by a co-sharer in favour of a co-sharer in a different thok, and a suit was brought to pre-empt the sale by persons who were co-sharers in the same khewat and patti with the vendor:

Held, that the entry in the wajib-ul-arz provided for pre-emption inter se between the various classes of pre-emptors specified therein and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to a preferential right of pre-emption as against the vendee.

Mathura Singh v. Ram Lal Singh, 64 Ind. Cas. 486; 19 A. L. J. 903, dissented from.

Dhanraj Misir v. Rameshwar Misir, 78 Ind. Cas. 904; 21 A. L. J. 928; 46 A. 170; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 227, referred to.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra, dated the 8th August 1923.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—There is no question in this case as to the existence of the right of pre-emption but the question is whether under the custom as recorded, the plaintiffs had a better right to pre-empt than the vendee-appellant.

It appears that the plaintiffs pre-emptors are co-sharers in the same khewat and patti with the vendor. The vendee on the other hand, is a co-sharer in a different thok.

The wajib-ul-arz lays down that a claim for pre-emption can be made when a co-sharer proposes to sell his property and it sets out a number of classes of persons in order who will be entitled to claim pre-emption.

The first class entitled to pre-empt consists of own brothers; the second class, of cousins and nephews; the third class, of co-sharers in the same patti, the fourth class of co-sharers in the thok; and the last class consists of co-sharers in the village. It is not to be doubted that on the language of the wajib-ul-arz these classes are set out in order of preference; the strongest claim to pre-emption being awarded to the first class; the second strongest claim to the second class, and so on. After these classes have been mentioned, there is a statement in the wajib-ul-arz that if no person in any of the classes desires to take the property then the vendor is to be at liberty to sell to a stranger.

We have not the slightest doubt in our minds that the record as here set out does provide for pre-emption inter se between the various classes who are specified. It is only by holding this view that we can give full effect to the words, awwal, phir, phir.

The case of Mathura Singh v. Ram Lal Singh (1) has been referred to. There, on language which had some resemblance to the language which we are now considering, it was held that there was no right of pre-emption inter se between the classes of persons who are mentioned in the wajib-ul-arz. It was held that a right to pre-empt only arose in case there was a sale to a stranger and that the recital in the wajib-ul-arz merely indicated the various grades of persons who could put forward a claim to pre-emption in case the sale was to a stranger.

We could not extend the principle of that decision beyond the facts as they are set out in the judgment of the reported case, and in fact in subsequent cases this judgment has been dissented from. An instance may be found in the case reported as Dhanraj Misir v. Rameshwar Misir (2).

We think it clear that the judgment of the Court below in this case was correct and that on the terms of the wajib-ul-arz the plaintiff was entitled to preference over the defendant. The appeal, therefore, fails and we dismiss it with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 99, O. I, rr. 1, 9, O. II, r. 3—Suit by several plaintiffs against same defendant on one cause of action—Suit really arising out of several causes of action—Misjoinder of causes of action—Procedure.

Plaintiffs, five in number, sued to recover a certain sum from the defendant as the balance alleged to be due from the defendant on account of a certain contract for the sale of cotton jointly entered into by the plaintiffs with the defendant. It transpired during the trial of the suit that there was not one contract for the sale of cotton by all the plaintiffs but that each plaintiff had contracted to supply a certain quantity to the defendant:

Held, (1) that the plaintiffs having based their claim against the defendant on a single contract, their suit was liable to be dismissed when it was discovered that the cause of action alleged by them did not exist and that there were five separate contracts entered into by the plaintiffs with the defendant;

(2) that the case was not one of a misjoinder of parties or of a misjoinder of causes of action and that any one of the plaintiffs could not be allowed to change the suit which was brought in the name of all into a suit brought by one of them.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Jalgaon, in Suit No. 15 of 1921.

Mr. D. C. Virkar, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. B. Virkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued to recover Rs. 6,369-13-6 with interest and costs being the balance alleged to be due on account of 861 maunds and 29½ seers of cotton jointly sold by all the plaintiffs to defendant No. 1 on or about March 1, 1920, at Rs. 12 per maund. A decree was passed in favour of the plaintiffs for Rs. 1,609 with one-third of their costs. It was proved in the Trial Court that there was not one contract for the sale of 861 maunds of cotton by the plaintiffs to the defendant but that each plaintiff contracted to supply a certain number of maunds of cotton to the defendant, the total amount of the five contracts being 861 maunds. It was quite impossible, therefore, for the plaintiffs to join in one suit five different causes of action on five different contracts made by five different plaintiffs. But they do not seek to do that. They seek to base their claim against the defendants on a single contract, though it is perfectly clear on the evidence that there was not one single contract but five contracts. Consequently the suit must inevitably fail. The provisions of the C.P. C., as regards the misjoinder of parties or the misjoinder of causes of action cannot possibly apply to this case. There is neither a misjoinder of parties nor a misjoinder of causes of action. But it is a case where a number of plaintiffs file a suit on a cause of action which does not exist. Consequently to allow any one of these plaintiffs to change the suit which was brought in the name of all into a suit brought by one of them would not come within the provisions of the Code which provide that no suit shall be defeated on a technical ground by reason of the misjoinder of parties or causes of action. Assuming that we were to accede to the respondents' suggestion that one of them should be allowed to continue the suit as based on his own contract, which of the plaintiffs is to be allowed to do this? There can be no answer to that question, and consequently the decision of the Court below was wrong, the appeal must be allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout.

SALIK RAM SAHU—DECREE-HOLDER—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 16—Execution of decree—Assignment of decree—Notice to judgment-debtor—Order declaring that execution can proceed—Objection, subsequent, that decree cannot be executed—Res judicata.

Under O. XXI, r. 16 of the C. P. C., when the assignee of a decree applies for execution of the decree a notice has to be issued to the judgment-debtor to show cause why the execution should not be granted. The Court is directed not to execute the decree till the objection of the judgment-debtor has been heard. If the judgment-debtor has any objection as to why the execution should not be granted, for instance, on the ground that the decree is a nullity, the objection must be put forward at the time when the notice is served upon him. Once the Court holds that the execution can proceed, the matter becomes res judicata and the judgment-debtor cannot at a subsequent stage object that the decree is not executable.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 8th January 1924.

Mr. A. P. Bagchi, for the Appellant.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of execution proceedings under the following circumstances:—

An Insolvency Court, namely, the District Judge of Gorakhpur, passed a decree against the appellant Ram Charan Sahu in order that some money, belonging to the judgment debtor which he had realized, he might re-pay. That decree having been passed, the Receiver Babu Raghubar Prasad transferred the decree to the opposite party Salik Ram. Salik Ram having obtained an assignment applied for execution and obtained an order of transfer of the decree to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Azamgarh. In that Court, for the first time, Ram Charan Sahu raised the objection that the decree that had been passed by the Insolvency Court was a nullity. That objection having failed, he preferred an appeal to the District Judge.

The District Judge held that the Court which passed the decree had recognized the title of Salik Ram to execute the decree and that it was not open to the Court at Azamgarh to go behind that order.

In this Court in the memorandum of appeal not a word has been said as to why this view of the learned District Judge was unsound. The appellant in the memorandum of appeal reiterates his objection to the validity of the decree as it was passed.

Under O. XXI, r. 16 of the C. P. C., when a transferee applies for execution of a decree a notice has to be issued to the judgment-debtor to show cause why the execution should not be granted. The Court is directed not to execute the decree till the objection of the judgment-debtor has been heard. Evidently it was the order which allowed execution, that is mentioned by the learned District Judge in his judgment. According to a ruling of this Court, namely, Taj Singh v. Jagan Lal (1), the order allowing execution operates as res judicata.

In our opinion so long as the order allowing execution of the decree at the instance of Salik Ram stands, the appellant cannot be heard to say that the decree is not executable. When the notice was sent to him, that was the time when the appellant should have raised the objection as to why the execution should not be granted.

The appeal fails and is hereby dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fee in this Court on the higher scale.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 89—Execution of decree—Sale—Deposit of decretal amount—Application to set aside sale, absence of, effect of.

An application either in writing or oral for setting aside the auction sale is necessary before the Court can be called upon to act and set aside the sale under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C. The mere deposit of the required amount unaccompanied by an application is not sufficient to enable the Court to set aside the sale.

Petition under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 praying the High Court to revise an order, dated the 30th November 1921, of the Court of the District Munsif, Madura Taluq, and made in M. P. No. 450 of 1921, in E. P. No. 179 of 1921, in S. C. S. No. 623 of 1920 (on the file of Madura, Sub-Court.)

Mr. P. S. Narayanasami Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—I very much regret I cannot interfere with the order of the lower Court in revision. The petitioner who was the judgment-debtor paid the required amount according to the rules under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 89, apparently with a view to enable her to apply for setting aside the sale under the terms of that section. But it is now clear that there was no application made by her to the Court either in writing or by parol. A few days after this, the Court confirmed the sale, and more than 90 days thereafter the petitioner applied for a review of the order of confirmation. The lower Court has held that the review petition was barred by limitation and dismissed it. Assuming that the lower Court erred in its view of the law with regard to the limitation to be applied to the review petition, I do not see what jurisdiction I have to interfere. However, that may be, in view of the fact that no application was made by the petitioner to set aside the sale, I see no substance even in the application for the review and no use even if I should direct the lower Court to consider the application of the petitioner for review of the order. Three learned Judges of this Court have held that an application either in writing or oral for setting aside the sale is necessary before the Court can be called upon to act and set aside the sale under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 89. In the case of Papooru Venkata Narasimma v. Jayanti Lakshmi Narasiham (1), Sadasiva Aiyar and Moore, JJ., held that an application oral or written made within 30 days was necessary for the purpose of s. 310 (A) of the C. ponding to O. XXI, r. 89. Mr. Justice Krishnan has also taken a similar view in the case of Rayapati Venkatasubba Rao v. Kalapatra Narayana Rao (2). The Bombay case in Mathuji v. Kondaji (3) has been expressly dissented from and refused to be followed by this Court. It is no doubt a hard case, but after all the provisions of the C. P. C. are meant to be observed; and in view of the decisions of this Court, I feel I cannot do anything to help the petitioner. The civil revision petition is accordingly dismissed, and I do not see why costs should not follow the event, and I accordingly award costs against the petitioner to the respondent.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 151, O. IX, r. 9—Execution of decree, application for—Dismissal in default—Restoration, grounds for—Duty of Court.

An application for execution of a decree was dismissed in default and the decree-holder put in an application for restoration under s. 151 of the C. P. C. Without issuing any notice to the judgment-debtor and without considering the merits of the case the Court granted the application and restored the application for execution. On revision:

Held, that the order of restoration could not be maintained and that the case must be remanded to the lower Court for a proper trial after issuing notice to the judgment-debtor.

Where a Court acts under s. 151 of the C. P. C., in restoring execution proceedings dismissed in default, it ought to state in what manner the ends of justice require the revival of the proceedings and at least as strong grounds should be required to justify an application under s. 151 as would be required on an application for review.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 7th July, 1924.

Messrs. Ram Bharose Lal and Ali Mohammad, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. N. Sinha, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—This was wrongly registered as an appeal by the office. An application for execution of a decree was dismissed in default by the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad and on 7th July the decree-holder put in an application for restoration under s. 151 of the C. P. C. This procedure was adopted because the provisions of O. IX, do not apply to execution proceedings. Without issuing any notice to the judgment-debtor and without considering the merits of the case the Court granted the application the next day the 8th of July. The order of the lower Court is very summary. It is in these words:—"As the application is supported by an affidavit, I grant it. Let the execution case be restored." We do not believe that the learned Judge had any idea of what he was doing or under what section of the law he was proceeding in the matter. Such an order cannot be maintained. We shall treat this petition of appeal as an application in revision.

We set aside the order of the lower Court dated 8th July 1924 and remand the proceedings to it for a proper trial after issuing notice to the judgment-debtor. We would draw the attention of the lower Court to a Bench decision of this Court in execution of decree [Nageshwar Prasad v. Jai Narayan (1)] where one of the learned Judges observed that if the lower Court acted under s. 151 of the C. P. C., it ought to have stated in what manner the ends of justice required the revival of the proceedings. The other Judge observed that at least as strong grounds should be required to justify an application under s. 151 as would be required on an application for review. The learned Judge of the lower Court is desired to dispose of this matter bearing in mind the observations of the two learned Judges of this Court.

We set aside the order as stated above and remand the proceedings. Costs here and heretofore shall abide the result.

The property shall remain attached as before until the conclusion of the proceedings.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 68—Mortgage of occupancy holding—Sub-mortgage, legality of—Sub-mortgagee not put in possession—Suit to recover mortgage money, maintainability of.

Where a mortgagee of an occupancy holding purports to make a sub-mortgage of his mortgagee rights, he is doing nothing forbidden by law and the sub-mortgagee is entitled to enforce his sub-mortgage by any of the means which are open to him in law. For instance, if his mortgagor fails to put him in possession of the mortgaged property, the sub-mortgagee may bring a suit to recover the mortgage money under s. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act.

Civil revision against an order of the Judge of the Small Cause Court dated the 15th September, 1924.

Mr. Mushtaq Ahmad, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise a judgment of the Court of Small Causes under the following circumstances:—The applicant obtained a document, said to be a sub-mortgage, from the respondent on the 3rd of August, 1923, for a consideration paid by him of Rs. 300. It appears that the respondent was in possession of certain plots of land as mortgagee under a deed, dated the 10th August 1918. The repondent said that he would pay interest till Jeth following the execution of the deed, when the plaintiff would take possession of the property mortgaged. The applicant said in the plaint that he had neither been paid interest nor had he been put into possession of the property. He accordingly sued to recover his money with interest.

The respondent pleaded payment of the money which he had borrowed, and also urged that the contract was an illegal one and could not be enforced and the money could not be refunded.

The learned Judge of the Court of Small Causes held that the money borrowed had not been re-paid, but he was of opinion that the mortgage was an illegal one and the money could not be recovered.

In this Court it has been urged that the learned Judge has really mis-applied the law and there is nothing illegal in the transaction and there is no bar to the recovery of the money.

It appears that a Division Bench of two Judges of this Court in the case of Balgobind Bhagat v. Nagina Misir (1) held that where a mortgagor was himself holding a mortgage of occupancy tenancy and purported to make a sub-mortgage of his right, he was doing nothing forbidden by law. This argument was actually put forward before the learned Judge of the Court below, but was not accepted by him. In view of the ruling of this Court, the transaction was not illegal. I may point out that the mortgagor was quite secure in his possession. He could not be ousted by his mortgagor, the occupancy tenant, without the tenant paying up the money he had taken from his mortgagee. If the respondent had handed over such possession as he did have over the property mortgaged to him, the money advanced by the applicant would have been quite secure to him.

In this view of the case, it is not necessary to consider several other cases that were cited before me.

The learned Counsel for the respondent argued that the remedy of the applicant was whatever may have been provided for in the deed itself and not a suit for money. But I find in the plaint that the plaintiff did allege that not only he was not paid but that he was not put into possession of the mortgaged property. Under s. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagor was bound to put the mortgagee into possession. The applicant, therefore, was entitled to receive back his money.

I allow the application, set aside the decree of the Court below and decree the claim of the applicant, against the respondent with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Act (IX of 1880), s. 41—Landlord and tenant—Recorded proprietor of mahal*—Suit to recover rent—Tenant, whether can set up right of third person—Third person, whether necessary party—Road-cess—Liability of tenant.*

Under the provisions of s. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act a recorded proprietor of a mahal is the only person to whom the tenants of the mahal are entitled to pay rent for lands lying within the mahal, and in answer to a suit by such a proprietor to recover rent from the tenants in respect of such lands, the latter cannot be permitted to set up the title of the proprietor of another mahal to recover the rent. The proprietor whose right is set up by the tenants is not a necessary party to a suit by the recorded proprietor to recover rent.

Under the provisions of s. 41 of the Bengal Cess Act every cultivating raiyat is liable to pay to the person to whom his rent is payable one-half of the amount of road-cess.

Appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Shahabad, dated the 25th November 1921, modifying that of the Munsif, Buxar, dated the 26th July 1920.

Messrs. L. N. Singh and N. N. Singh, for the Appellant.

Messrs. S. S. Lal, S. C. Mitter and N. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—These appeals are directed against a decree of the Subordinate Judge of Shahabad dismissing the plaintiff's claim for apportionment of rents with respect to certain holdings which are partly in his Mahal Naubarar and partly in the adjoining Mahal Gang Barar. The ground upon which the learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the claim was that it was proved that the plaintiff had never realized rents from the tenants-defendants for these holdings, and that for more than twelve years the proprietors of Gang Barar, who were made parties to the suit, had realized rents in open assertion that the lands appertained to Gang Barar, it was, therefore, too late for the proprietors of Naubarar to claim the rents as against the proprietors of Gang Barar. The fallacy in this reasoning is that plaintiff has not claimed rent as against the proprietors of Gang Barar but has claimed rent from the tenants-defendants. It was unnecessary to implead the landlords of Gang Barar and they must be dismissed from these actions with costs throughout. But as regards the right of the plaintiff to recover rents from the tenants for the lands in Naubarar, s. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act concludes the matter. It is admitted that the plaintiff is the recorded proprietor of Naubarar and that the Commissioner appointed for this purpose has ascertained the extent of the lands of these holdings which lie within Naubarar. Consequently by the provisions of s. 60 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the plaintiff is the only person to whom the tenants are entitled to pay rent for these lands lying within Naubarar and they cannot be permitted to set up the title of the proprietors of Gang Barar.

The only other question in the appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to recover cess from the tenants. Under the provisions of s. 41 of the Cess Act every cultivating raiyat is to pay to the person, to whom his rent is payable one-half of the road-cess. It was suggested that the Cess Act does not prevail in the U. P., but this estate is now borne on the Register of the Collector of Shahabad and the Act is in force over this estate.

The result is that the appeals must be decreed with costs with the exception of S. A. No. 213 of 1922, and the cases must be remanded to the Court below in order to assess the proper rent payable by the tenants for the lands found by the Commissioner to be included in Naubarar. At the same time the defendants second party, proprietors of Gang Barar, will be dismissed from these actions with costs in all the Courts. As the Commissioner has not found that in Suit No. 264 any lands are within Naubarar, S. A. No. 213 of 1922 arising out of this suit must be dismissed with costs.

Das, J.—I agree.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Stridhan, succession to—Property inherited, whether joint family property—Survivorship.

When the stridhan property of a woman devolves on her sons who form a joint Hindu family at the time of the mother's death, the sons take the property as co-owners or tenants-in-common without benefit of survivorship, and on the death of one of the sons the property so inherited by him goes to his widow and not to his surviving brothers.

(Case-law referred to.)

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Banda, dated the 25th April 1923.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. N. Laghate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The question to be decided in this appeal is a question of Hindu Law and arises under the following circumstances. The property in suit belonged originally to one Piare. He gave it away absolutely to his daughter Musammat Sugna, in whose hand, therefore, it was her stridhan property. Musammat Sugna had three sons viz., Durga Prasad, the husband of the plaintiff-respondent, and Jamna Das and Ganga Prasad, the defendants-appellants. The plaintiff-respondent claimed a third share in the property as being the separate property of Durga Prasad.

The defence was that Durga Prasad died as a member of a joint Hindu family with the defendants and, therefore, the plaintiff inherited nothing.

It has been found, as a matter of fact, that Durga Prasad and his two brothers were living together as members of a joint Hindu family. The question is whether under the circumstances the share which Durga Prasad inherited was his absolute property inheritable by his widow on his death or whether Durga Prasad held the property as any other joint ancestral property inherited from father which would go by survivorship to his brothers.

The learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court has mentioned the authorities quoted before him and has come to the conclusion that the stridhan property of mother is inherited by the sons without any right of survivorship attaching to it.

Before the case of Venkayyamma Garu v. Venkataramanayama Bahadur Garu (1) was decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, there was no doubt in the proposition that property inherited from a maternal grandfather was inherited without any attachment of the right of survivorship to it. But their Lordships of the Privy Council ruled in the above mentioned case that where three joint brothers inherited their grandfather's property they took it with right of survivorship attaching to the property. The question before me is how far this principle can be applied to the case of the inheritance of the stridhan property of their mother by three brothers who lived jointly.

It seems to me that the expression "ancestral property" has nowhere been so applied as to include property inherited from a female. The property inherited from Musammat Sugna is, therefore, not likely to be termed as "ancestral." Indeed, there is a direct decision on the point by the Madras High Court in the case of Karuppai Nachiar v. Sankaranarayanan Chetty (2). This was a decision of five learned Judges and it was held there that "when the stridhan property of a woman devolves on her sons, who, with their father, form an undivided Hindu family at the time of the mother's death, the sons take it as co-owners or tenants-in-common without benefit of survivorship."

A similar decision was arrived at by two learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in the case of Bai Parson v. Bai Somli (3). It is worth mentioning that the Privy Council case of Venkayyamma Garu v. Venkataramanayama Bahadur Garu (1) was cited and was present in the minds of their Lordships in both the cases.

It is a matter of some conjecture how far the case of Atar Singh v. Thakur Singh (4) decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council, modified or affected the law as laid down in Venkayyamma Garu v. Venkataramanayama Bahadur Garu (1). In this latter case, the property as in the case of Venkayyamma Garu v. Venkataramanayama (1) was inherited from maternal grandfather by one Dayal Singh. Dayal Singh having transferred the property, his sons claimed that the property was ancestral in the hand of their father and sought to set aside the alienation. Their Lordships of the Privy Council remarked that it was for the sons to prove that the property was "ancestral" in the hands of Dayal Singh. It is, however, clear that the case of Venkayymma Garu v. Venkataramanayama (1) does not directly govern the case before me and that there are at least two cases having the authorities of seven learned Judges of two different Courts which establish the proposition that in the circumstances of the present case the property is taken by the heirs as tenants-in-common and not as joint tenants with right of survivorship.

In the circumstances I dismiss the appeal with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Ch. X, s. 52—Bengal Alluvial Land Settlement Act (XXXI of 1858), s. 2—Diara proceedings—Settlement of rent for accreted lands—Tenants, whether bound to pay rent settled—Suit to recover rent in respect of lands comprised in lease—Failure to include claim for increased rent in respect of accreted lands, effect of.

A suit to recover rent in respect of lands let out under a lease of which the proper description is given in the plaint is not liable to dismissal owing to the fact that the plaintiff might have asked for increased rent for an accretion to the tenure. [p. 442, col. 2.]

In order to make a tenant liable for additional rent for accretions to his tenure, such rent must be settled under Ch. X to the Bengal Tenancy Act or the landlord must take proper proceedings so as to bring into operation s. 152 of the Act or any other appropriate provision of the law. [p. 443, col. 2.]

Where a diara officer does not work under Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he is required only to ascertain and record the rights of, and not to settle the rents payable by, under-tenants, and the latter are not bound to pay the rent determined by the diara officer under s. 2 of the Bengal Alluvial Land Settlement Act of 1858. JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—These two appeals are by the defendants and arise out of two suits for rent. The suit out of which Appeal No. 2500 arises was for rent for about 213 acres of land comprised in permanent miras tenure created in 1864 A. D. in favour of the predecessor of the defendants at a rent of Rs. 359 odd. There has been gradual accretion of some lands contiguous to the lands of the miras in the bed of a river and the defendants are entitled to those lands as an increment to their tenure. The plaintiffs did not include these accreted lands in their suit for rent for the miras. It is argued on behalf of the appellants that the plaintiffs were bound to give the extent and boundaries of the land in their suit for rent under s. 148 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, and as the accreted lands are an increment to the tenure the plaintiffs were bound to include those in their suit, and as they did not do so the suit ought to be dismissed. We do not think that the contention is sound. The plaintiffs sued for rent for the lands let out under the lease of 1864 A. D. of which a proper description was given in the plaint. The fact that they might have asked for increased rent for the accretion to the tenure does not impose on them the penalty of having their suit for rent for the lands actually dismissed. This appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

The Appeal No. 2499 arises out of a suit for rent for about 98 acres of land at the rate of Rs. 550 odd. These were lands gained by gradual accession from a river and are contiguous to the lands for which the other suit was brought. The lands were brought under diara operations and formed into a separate estate of which the plaintiffs took settlement from Government. The liability of the defendants to pay the rent is thus set forth in para. 2 of the plaint:—"The defendants have a miras taluk recorded at the annual rent of Rs. 550-3-0, in respect of 98·7 acres of land. . . . . in 5/1 mouja Kistakati bearing No. 2436. . . . . and the same was recorded in khewat No. 2 and the defendants are in possession thereof." It is not necessary to set out the pleas taken in defence. The lower Appellate Court has overruled the objections taken by the defendants and passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs affirming that of the Trial Court. It found that the diara officer fixed the rent payable by the defendants as claimed, which is fair and equitable and that the defendants are liable to pay rent at that rate. The grounds urged by the appellants against the decree are (1) The suit of the plaintiffs is barred as res judicata. (2) The defendants are not liable to pay the rent fixed by the Revenue Authorities for the lands and the plaintiffs can only claim for increase of rent under s. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. (3) The lands being an increment to the old tenure of the defendants separate suit for the rent of these lands is not maintainable.

The plea of res judicata is based on the judgment of the Appellate Court in R. Appeal No. 30 of 1912 arising out of a previous rent suit. The pleadings in the suit have not been filed nor the judgment of the Trial Court. It is not clear from the judgment produced what the issues in the rent suit were and form the materials on the record, so it is not possible to hold, that the present suit is barred by res judicata. This ground must, therefore, fail.

In support of the second ground it is urged by the appellants that the diara officer was not vested with any authority under the law to settle any rent with regard to the lands in suit so as to fasten liability of the defendants, and all that he was authorized to do was to ascertain the amount of rent capable of being realized from the lands for the purpose of assessment of revenue. The defendants are not consequently bound to pay the rent settled by the diara officer. This contention seems to be well-founded. Under cl. (1) of s. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 these lands are to be considered as an increment to the tenure of the defendants. The last paragraph of that clause which referred to the liability of the under-tenant for payment of increase of rent has been repealed by the Bengal Tenancy Act and s. 52 of that Act has made provisions for increase of rent for increase of area. No additional rent was claimed for increase of area of the tenure under that section or any other provision of the law by the plaintiffs. The learned Vakil for the respondents relies upon the provisions of s. 2 of Act XXXI of 1858 and contends that the tenant is bound to pay the rent determined by the Revenue Authorities under that section. The first paragraph of that section leaves the rights of under-tenants as to alluvial land under cl. (1), s. 4 of Regulation XI of 1825 unaffected. The second paragraph is to the following effect: It shall be the duty of all officers making Settlements of such lands. . . . . to ascertain and record all such rights according to the rules prescribed in Regulation VII of 1822; and to determine whether any and what additional rent shall be payable by the person or persons entitled to any under-tenures in the original estate. It may at first sight seem that this leads to the inference that the under-tenant would be bound to pay the rent so determined, but there does not appear to be any provision in the law under which it would be obligatory on him to do so. The learned Vakil for the respondent referred us to s. 9 of Regulation VII of 1822 as empowering the officer to settle rent. It seems to me, however, that the Collector is not empowered under that section to determine any rent so as to fix the under-tenant with liability to pay the amount fixed to his landlord, but he is only to record existing rights. If proceedings had been taken, under Part II of Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, by the diara officer he might have settled rent under the provisions therein laid down with consequential results. But there is no suggestion that any action was taken under that Chapter. The diara proceedings have not been produced nor is there any evidence as to what was actually done by the diara officer. In order to make the tenant liable for additional rent for accretions to his tenure such rent must be settled under Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act or the landlord must take proper proceedings so as to bring into operation s. 52 of the Act or any other appropriate provision of the law. Rule 550 of the Bengal Survey and Settlement Manual, 1917, may also be referred to in this connection. The relevant passage runs thus :—"He (the diara officer) will ordinarily be working under Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act and will prepare the record under that Chapter. If there be no notification under Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the diara officer will ascertain the Record of Rights of under-tenants under Regulation VII of 1822 read with s. 2 of Act XXXI of 1858. . . . . The rights of under-tenants ascertained as above will not be affected by the nature of the arrangement made by Government with the proprietor." From this it would appear that where the diara officer does not work under Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, he has been required only to ascertain and record the rights and not to settle the rents payable by under-tenants. In my opinion, therefore, there is no liability on the defendants to pay the rent settled by the diara officer for the lands in dispute. No other ground of liability of the defendants was alleged by the plaintiffs nor was any other argument advanced in support of the decree.

The learned Vakil for the appellants relied on the case of Assanullah Bahadur v. Mohini Mohan Das (1) in support of his third contention that a separate suit for the rent of the lands is not maintainable. It would appear that at any rate, so long as the plaintiffs are entitled to the lands by virtue of Settlement from Government, these would not constitute a separate tenure held by the defendants under the plaintiffs. But in view of the decision on the second ground it is unnecessary to make any further observations, on this point. In the result the defendants cannot be said to hold any miras taluk under the plaintiffs at the rent claimed. The Appeal No. 2499 is decreed and the suit dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Being a recorded co-sharer he can only obtain his share of the profits by a suit in a Rent Court. Section 167 of the Agra Tenancy Act bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in the matter. Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 15th March 1923.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellant.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Mauna and others mortgaged certain zemindari plots of an area of about 12 bighas in favour of Jhak and Ramnandan Lal. The mortgagors transferred all their rights to Basant Lal. Basant Lal has redeemed half the mortgage and is mortgagor in respect of the remainder. The mortgagee rights in respect of the remainder have been sold to Mahadeo Pande in execution of a decree. Mahadeo Pande's name has been entered as mortgagee in the khewat. He is thus a recorded co-sharer.

The situation is now this Basant Lal owns half the property and is mortgagee of the remainder. Mahadeo the present appellant is the mortgagee of the remaining half. These remarks apply only to the area in dispute. That area is recorded as a portion of certain khata and in the remainder of the khata many other people are co-sharers.

Mahadeo's grievance was this. The area in dispute is cultivated by tenants. When he endeavoured to collect rents from those tenants through the Courts, he was opposed and was unable to collect the rents. He has now come into Court to claim his rights. The lower Appellate Court has given him a decree declaring that he is the mortgagee, but has refused him any other relief. He appeals against this decree.

It appears to me that following the recent Bench decisions in this Court in Bisheshar Singh v. Hanuman Singh (1) and in Sarbjit Singh v. Raj Kumar Rai (2), the appellant is entitled to a decree for joint possession. According to the latter decision he is not entitled to mesne profits. As he is a recorded co-sharer he can only obtain his profits in this matter by a suit in a rent Court. Section 167 of the Tenancy Act bars the jurisdiction of the Civil Court in the matter.

(2) 63 Ind. Cas. 806; 19 A. L. J. 783; 3 U. P. L. R. (A.) 146; 44 A. 5; (1922) A. I. R. (A.) 162.

In the result I modify the decree of the lower Appellate Court by granting the appellant a decree for joint possession. I do not, however, see my way to award him costs and consider that he should pay the costs of the other side for it appears to me that he himself is responsible for unnecessary litigation. As he is a recorded co-sharer there was nothing to prevent his collecting the profits in the ordinary way. Why a recorded co-sharer should wish to come into a Civil Court to ask for a decree for joint possession is a question that can probably only be answered in the eastern Districts. While permitting him modified relief I direct that Mahadeo pay his own costs and costs of the other side on the higher scale.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 11—Suit on mortgage-bond—Plea of minority—Burden of proof.

Where in answer to a suit for sale on foot of a mortgage-bond the defence is that the defendant was a minor at the time of the execution of the bond, the burden lies on him to prove his minority at the date of the execution of the document and not on the plaintiff to prove that the defendant was a major on that date.

Narain Singh v. Chiranji Lal, 79 Ind. Cas. 945; 22 A. L. J. 461; 46 A. 568; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 730; L. R. 5 A. 353 Civ., followed.

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 14th November 1922.

Mr. K. C. Mital, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Haidar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal in a suit for sale to recover money on a bond executed by him. The main ground is that at the time of the execution of the deed he was a minor.

Both the Courts below have placed the burden of proof that he was a major on the date of the execution of the deed on the plaintiff. Even in this view of the case the lower Appellate Court found that the defendant had made certain admissions which were enough to shift the burden on to the defendant and that the defendant's evidence had failed to rebut the case made by the plaintiff and, therefore, decreed the plaintiff suit. The defendant appeals.

The matter is now set at rest by the decision of a Bench of this Court in Narain Singh v. Chiranji Lal (1) in which it was pointed out that in a case like the present the burden of proof lies on the person who says that the defendant was a minor at the time of the execution of the document. It is admitted that if the burden of proof lay on the defendant, he has entirely failed.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

ASHRAF KHAN AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Muhammadan Law—Hanafi school—Gift—Life-interest, whether can be created—Possession, delivery of, what constitutes—Will in favour of heir, validity of—Estoppel—Ignorance of law.

Per Ashworth, A. J. C.—There can be no estoppel in favour of a party who was not misled except by his own ignorance of the law. [p. 448, col. 1.]

A family arrangement cannot be effected by mere conduct apart from any explicit agreement. [ibid.]

Where a Muhammadan after making a Will gifts away the whole of his property the gift has the effect of operating as a revocation of the Will. [p. 452, col. 1.]

A Hanafi Muhammadan cannot make a Will in favour of one of his heirs. [p. 447, col. 2.]

Under the Muhammadan Law the owner of an estate may retain what is virtually a life-estate, but he cannot transfer anything more than a mere use. If he purports to transfer something more than a use, namely a use, which is not revocable during the term for which it is granted, and which can be lent or leased to another or otherwise alienated, he will be held to have transferred not only the use, but also the corpus. A life-estate, therefore, can only, under the Muhammadan Law, be created by reservation after the transfer of the corpus. It cannot be created by transfer to another whether the corpus is retained or not by the donor. [p. 450, col. 2.]

The requirements of the Muhammadan Law that a gift must be perfected by delivery of possession negatives the possibility of a life-estate being conferred by gift under that law. [p. 451, col. 1.]

Under the Muhammadan Law delivery of possession may be given in such a way as the nature of the gift permits but this does not mean that delivery of the corpus, either constructive or actual, can be entirely absent in the case of a gift. [ibid.]

The word "construction" used with reference to a document may mean the meaning which the person executing the document expressed, and it may also mean the effect which the law allows the deed to have. The Muhammadan Law does not in fact require that a deed giving a life-estate should be construed against the intention of the donor as having meant that he gives an absolute estate, but it requires that whatever his intention was, the deed is to be treated as giving an absolute estate. [ibid.]

Under the Muhammadan Law there must be evidence produced by the person claiming under a gift that the donor did all in his power to enable the donee to exercise his possession over the property gifted. It is necessary for a gift by a husband to a wife, who is not a minor, to be completed by some act of delivery of possession other than a mere declaration in the deed of gift that possession has been transferred to the donee. [p. 454, col. 1.]

Per Wazir Hasan, A. J. C.—In order to construe a deed of gift it is necessary to ascertain the intention of the donor and this must be done primarily with the help of the language used by him. For this purpose it is permissible to derive such assistance as can be derived from the surrounding circumstances. [p. 457, col. 1.]

Under the Muhammadan Law proof of the intention of a donor to create a life-interest is permissible. The giving of interest in a certain property is different from, and is not the same thing as, the gift of the corpus, and such an interest may be supported on the basis of a trust resulting from an agreement for valuable consideration. Where the manifest intention of the donor is to give the corpus of, and the absolute interest in, the property gifted to one person and such gift is accompanied with a reservation of a limited estate in the same property in favour of another, both the gift and the reservation are valid. [p. 462, col. 2.]

There is no rule of Muhammadan Law to the effect that where a donor in a transaction of a simple gift merely creates a life-interest in the property gifted in the donee and reserves the reversion to his heirs-at-law the donee of the interest takes the absolute estate. [ibid.]

The argument that where the intention of the donor is to give merely an interest in, and not the whole of, his property the gift must be construed to convey the whole is erroneous. [p. 466, col. 1.]

If the law of the Muhammadans or of any other class of people must keep pace with the progress of society and the multifarious relations arising therefrom, interests in property apart from the property itself must be recognized. [p. 465, col. 1.]

Mutation of names in the Collector's office is not actually necessary to complete a transfer of possession under a deed of gift. The reason of the rule of the change of possession will be fully satisfied where in the circumstances of a particular case such a change may only be constructive. [p. 470, col. 2.]

A Muhammadan executed a deed of gift in favour of his wife who was a pardah nashin lady, the subject-matter of the gift being merely a life-interest in the property dealt with by the deed and not the corpus of it. The deed contained a recital that possession of the property gifted had been transferred to the donee. The donor continued to live for a year after the execution of the deed of gift and continued to collect the rents and profits of the property, the wife living in the same house with him:

Held, that, under the circumstances, the collection of the rents and profits by the husband after the execution of the deed must be taken to have been made in the capacity of an agent of his wife and it must be held that possession of the interest gifted had been transferred to the wife so as to satisfy the requirements of the Muhammadan Law. Appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 30th May 1923.

Messrs. M. Wasim and Khaliquzzaman, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Niamatullah and E. R. Kidwai, for Respondents Nos. 1, 2 and 21.

JUDGMENT.

Ashworth, A. J. C.—[December 2, 1924.]—These first civil appeals arise out of a suit brought by one Salar Khan for the recovery of certain property, which it was alleged had belonged to his deceased sister, Musammat Waziran, in virtue of a deed of gift executed on the 17th January 1905 by her husband, Ghulam Murtaza Khan. The suit was brought against the nephews of Ghulam Murtaza, defendants Nos. 1 and 2; and against persons to whom they had transferred the property, defendants Nos. 3 to 18.

[In para 3 of the plaint, there is also a claim for 3 bighas, 3 biswas, which it is stated that Musammat Waziran purchased, during the lifetime of her husband, on the 30th July 1901. The defence of the defendants as to this was that it was purchased benami really by her husband, in which case it would be part of the property included in the alleged deed of gift by the husband to Musammat Waziran. The Subordinate Judge framed an issue as to whether this sale-deed in favour of Musammat Waziran was a benami transaction, but did not decide the issue on the ground that the point was not pressed. Accordingly, he decreed the claim in respect of this small area, and against this part of the decree there is no appeal. By an oversight, however, he appears to have omitted this area in his decree.]

The Subordinate Judge decided that the deed of gift of the 17th January 1905, Ex. 5, read along with a Will, Ex. A. 13, and an agreement, Ex. A. 14, both executed by Ghulam Murtaza and dated the 18th January 1894, should be construed as in the nature of a family arrangement, and as such, it gave Musammat Waziran an absolute interest in one-third of the property mentioned in it, and a life estate in the remaining two-thirds. Accordingly, he passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for one-third of the property mentioned in the deed of gift. It may also be mentioned that the Subordinate Judge, under Issue No. 4, decided that Ghulam Murtaza was a Hanafi Musalman, and that he did not belong to the Shia sect. This decision has been impugned in ground No. 4 of Appeal No 51 but this ground has not been pressed. The questions involved, therefore, must be decided on the basis that the Muhammadan Law applicable is the Hanafi and not the Shia Law.

From this decree of the Subordinate Judge the defendants have appealed in Appeal No. 51, contending that the deed of gift along with the attendant circumstances constituted a family arrangement that Musammat Waziran should only hold her husband's property during her life-time, and that thereafter, the nephews, namely, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, should have the reversion of the whole estate. The plaintiffs in Appeal No. 44 impugn the decree of the Subordinate Judge on the ground that the deed of gift of the 17th January 1905 should not have been construed as a family arrangement but as a gift parting with the whole of the property mentioned therein to the widow absolutely, and that the Will and agreement of the 18th January 1894 were inoperative and could not be used to affect the deed of gift.

The first question then which arises in these appeals is whether the lower Court was justified in considering that the deed of gift Ex. 5, read along with the Will Ex. A 13, and the agreement Ex. A 14, constituted a family arrangement. My finding is that he was wrong. The agreement was merely a declaration by Ghulam Murtaza that he executed the Will to obviate mischief and dispute. It could have no effect of any kind and cannot be used, as it was used by the Subordinate Judge, to prove that there was any existing family dispute.

Ghulam Murtaza, his wife, and the nephews were perfectly aware that the disposition of the property, so far as it could be disposed of by Will or gift, rested entirely with Ghulam Murtaza, and the mere fact that he apprehended dissatisfaction on the part of the widow or on the part of the nephews or both, would not show the existence of a bona fide family dispute. Reliance has been placed by the defendants on the fact that the deed of gift was signed by the two nephews. This would not make it an agreement by them. Their signatures, at the best, would mean nothing more than that they accepted the reversion of the estate which it purported to give them. The Will was invalid on the ground that a Hanafi cannot devise to his heirs, and in any case, it was entirely revoked by the deed of gift executed in respect of the same property at a subsequent date. An attempt has been made by the defendants in the argument of this appeal to show that even if the deed of gift, read with the Will and so-called agreement just mentioned, cannot be considered as constituting a family arrangement, yet in the alternative a family arrangement could be held to have been arrived at between the widow and the nephews on the death of Ghulam Murtaza. This argument is based on the mutation proceedings upon the death of Ghulam Murtaza. Exhibit A 12, (page 97 of the second part of the record) is a copy of a statement of Musammat Waziran made in the mutation case in which she claimed on the basis of the deed of gift, and admitted that she enjoyed alienation in respect of one-third of the village and not in respect of two-thirds. Exhibit A 15 (page 98 of the second part of the record) is a copy of the order in the mutation case sanctioning mutation in favour of Musammat Waziran. There is also the evidence of Ashraf, defendant, on page 97 of the first part of the record, stating that he filed objections to the mutation proceedings in favour of the widow, on the ground that she had not got possession under the deed of gift during her husband's life time, but that he withdrew his objection after the statement of Musammat Waziran just mentioned (Ex. A 12), wherein she admitted that she had no powers of alienation in respect of two-thirds of the property. An attempt to make out that this admission by Musammat Waziran accompanied by the withdrawal of objection by Ashraf, constituted a family arrangement between the widow and the nephews entirely fails for the following reasons:—In the first place, a family arrangement cannot be effected by mere conduct such as this apart from any explicit agreement. In the second place, there is no evidence to show that Musammat Waziran's statement, or Ashraf's withdrawal from objection in the mutation proceedings was the result of a settlement of any bona fide dispute. It is clear that both parties were under the impression that the deed of gift was valid. Ashraf, until satisfied that Musammat Waziran would not claim more than was allowed her in the deed of gift, objected to the mutation, but withdrew his objection when she showed that she did not claim more. So far, then, from there being any dispute, both parties at that time appeared ready to comply with the deed of gift. Nor can anything that they did at that time stop them, or their successors-in-interest, from impugning the deed of gift. Neither party can claim ignorance of the law, and there can be no estoppel in favour of a party who was not misled except by his own ignorance of the law.

This finding is sufficient for dismissal of the defendants' Appeal No. 51 so far as that appeal is based on an alleged family arrangement.

The only question remaining for decision by this Court in respect of the appeal of the plaintiff No. 44 is whether the deed of gift of 17th January 1905 is valid, and if so what interest under it passed to Musammat Waziran. It has been contended by the plaintiff that the deed of gift operated as a valid transfer of absolute rights in the estate, and that the execution of the written deed was perfected by the delivery of possession. On behalf of the defendants it is maintained that at the best the deed of gift only gave the widow a life interest in the estate with power of alienation of one-third, and that on her death not only the two-thirds of the property but also so much of the one-third as had not been alienated by her passed to the nephews. It is also maintained that the deed of gift was inoperative for failure of delivery of the property. It is necessary, therefore, to decide:

(1) Assuming that the gift was perfected by delivery of possession what was the interest that passed under it to Musammat Waziran?

(2) Was the deed of gift perfected by delivery of possession?

The deed of gift runs as follows:—

"I am Murtaza Khan son of Sarfaraz Khan caste Bhatti resident and zemindar of Muhi-ud-dinpur, hamlet of village Jamoli, Pargana Mawai Maholara, Tahsil Ram Sahehighat, District Bara Banki.

"Whereas I am co-sharer of the following shares in the village comprised in Taluqa Mawai, in the above pargana and district, at present valued at Rs. 15,000. Whereas I am in possession and occupation of the same and whereas in respect of the same I have already executed a Will and an agreement dated 18th January 1894, but as I want to avoid any difficulty to my wife in obtaining possession over the willed property after me, I, therefore, by means of this document, have made a gift, without consideration, of my entire property detailed below with all external and internal rights and without the exception of any right or part, to my wife Musammat Waziran resident of Muhi-ud-dinpur hamlet of village Jamoli, in the above pargana and district subject to the condition that out of the entire property mentioned in the deed of gift she shall remain in possession of shares worth Rs. 5,000 with power to make at her pleasure any sort of alienation like mortgage, sale or gift in respect thereof and that, as to the rest, worth Rs. 10,000 she shall not possess any power of alienation but she shall remain in possession thereof for life-time. After the death of the donee the entire property gifted away by this document, shall revert to the donor's collaterals, viz., Ashraf Khan, Basharat Khan and their heirs, in equal shares, and those heirs of mine shall become owners with full proprietary powers, and the own heirs of the donee lady shall not inherit the same and the donee and my aforesaid heirs have accordingly agreed and consented to this. I have put the lady donee in possession of the property gifted to her and therefore from to-day I have ceased to possess any right or claim in respect of the gifted property and my wife, Musammat Waziran, from to-day, became owner and possessor of the aforesaid property in accordance with the terms of this deed. As to shares worth Rs. 5,000 gifted to the said lady she has power to choose the same from any village she likes, or if she likes, she can take shares worth Rs. 5,000 from all the villages."

That the intention shown in this deed was an intention to give Musammat Waziran merely a life-interest in two-thirds of the estate and life-interest along with a power of alienation in the other third, is not seriously disputed, but, on behalf of the appellants, it is contended that a life-interest cannot be given under Muhammadan Law, and that even if it can be given, it cannot be given in a deed expressed, as this one was, by clauses in the latter part of the deed cutting down an absolute interest given by the former part of the deed. It is clear that this latter contention is of no importance, if the former contention is good. For the respondents, on the other hand, it has been contended that there is nothing in the Hedaya, as interpreted by the rulings of the Privy Council, to debar a Muhammadan from giving a life-interest, and that, where the meaning of a deed has to be construed, Muhammadan Law looks at the intention and not at the precise form.

I will deal first with the question, the paramount question in this case, whether Muhammadan Law permits the gift of a life-estate. There has been some suggestion, during the argument of this case, that the law on the subject as expressed in the Hedaya has been modified by rulings of the Privy Council, but, I find no inconsistency between the meaning that I put on the passages of the Hedaya shown to me and the pronouncements of the Privy Council in the various rulings cited. It will conduce to clearness of argument to keep separate as far as possible the discussion whether the gift of a life-estate is forbidden expressly by Muhammadan Law, or whether it is merely impliedly forbidden, because the requirements of that law, as to delivery of possession or seizin cannot be fulfilled in the case of a gift of the life-estate That the Muhammadan Law permits the separation by a donor of the use of property from the corpus or substance of the property is clear from the following passage which I quote from Hamilton's Hedaya, Vol. III, page 294:—

"Objection.—Analogy would suggest that the gift of a part of an indivisible article is invalid, because, although the donor do not in such a case incur the inconvenience of a division, still he incurs a participation in the property; and this also is a sort of inconvenience.

"Reply.—The donor is subjected to a participation in a thing which is not the subject of his grant, namely, the use (of the whole indivisible article), for his gift related to the substance of the article, not to the use of it; hence the necessity of a participation is not incurred by him with respect to the thing which is, properly, the subject of his grant."

This passage was relied upon in Nawab Amjad Ally Khan v. Mohumdee Begum (1), as authority for holding, that a father might make a gift of Government promissory notes with a stipulation that the donor during his life should have a right to the interest. The gift of the corpus of the notes was held to be perfected by delivery of possession of the notes. It was again relied upon in Mohammad Abdul Ghani v. Fakhr Jahan Begum (2) for upholding the gift of an estate with a stipulation that some villages out of it should be retained by the donor during his life. Here it was held that the necessity of the former gift being perfected by delivery of possession was fulfilled by the fact that there was delivery of the unreserved portion.

It has, however, been urged by the respondents' Counsel that this passage of the Hedaya and the above rulings cannot be held to permit the gift of a life estate in view of the following language in Hamilton's Heyaya, Vol. III, page 308 and 309: "If a person made a gift of a house to another, on condition that the donee give back a part of it, such gift is valid, but the condition annexed is invalid, because it is contrary to the spirit or intendment of the contract; and gifts are not affected by being accompanied with an invalid condition, because the Prophet approved of amrees (gifts for life), but held the condition annexed to them by the grantor, namely, the condition of restoration upon the demise of the grantee, to be void." Again, "An amree, or life grant, is lawful to the grantee during his life, and descends to his heirs, because of the tradition before quoted. Besides, the meaning of amree is a gift of a house (for example) during the life of the donee, on condition of its being returned upon his death. The conveyance of the house, therefore, is valid without any return, and the condition annexed is null, because the prophet has sanctioned the gift, in this instance, and annulled the condition, as before mentioned. An amree, moreover, is nothing but a gift and a condition and the condition is invalid; but a gift is not rendered null by involving an invalid condition, as had been already demonstrated." Now it may be conceded that if these passages on pages 308 and 309 are repugnant to that on page 294, the former must prevail, inasmuch as they deal specifically with the question of a life estate, while the former deals generally with that of the severance of use from the substance, but I find no discrepancy, if we give the proper meaning to the word "use." For the ascertainment of this meaning, we must look at the discussion in the Hedaya, pages 277 and 278, Vol. III of areeat, or loans. I would quote the following passages as the more important:—

"Areeat, according to our doctors, signifies an investiture with the use of a thing without return." Again, "Our doctors, on the other hand, argue that the word areeat indicates an investiture, since it is derived from areeya, which signifies a grant; and that accordingly, informing the contract the expression investiture is used. The use of a thing, moreover, is capable of being property, in the same manner as the actual thing itself, and as investiture with the latter may take place either with or without a return, so also with respect to the former.....It is also to be observed that investiture is made in four different shapes," and one of them is—"By gift, which is an investiture with substance, without a return," and another of them is "By loan which is an investiture with the use of a thing without return." Again on page 279, "The lender is at liberty to resume the loan whenever he pleases, because the Prophet has said 'Moonha is liable to be recalled, and a loan must be returned to the proprietor.' Moonha is a species of loan, where a person lends another a goat, a cow, or a she-camel, for instance, that he may use their milk; and also because the produce, or use of the thing lent, becomes property, particle by particle, merely according as it is brought into being: hence, with respect to such part of the produce as is not yet brought into being there is merely an investiture, but no seizin: retraction with respect to such part is, therefore, valid." It is also stated on page 281: "It is not lawful for a borrower to let out a loan, because a loan is inferior to a lease, and an inferior cannot comprehend its superior; and because the lease would deprive the lender of the power of resuming the loan until the expiration of the lease."

These passages in respect of the areeat indicate that the complete right of an absolute owner in property may be analysed into three component rights:—

(a) the right to the corpus or substance,

(b) the right to the mere use, and

(c) the right to revoke the use.

Right (a) can be transferred by hiba which requires delivery of possession of the corpus Right (b) can be transferred by areeat which does not require any delivery of the corpus. Right (c) cannot be transferred at all, as it is inherent in the donor of an areeat, and does not belong to owner, for the time being, of the corpus. It only comes into existence on the transfer of an areeat. When right (b) is retained, the fact that the donor has also right (c) makes right (b) not a mere license revocable and incapable of transfer or lease, but it makes it a right approximating to that known as a life estate. Now the use referred to on page 294 of Hamilton's Hedaya, Vol. III, is a use reserved after parting with the corpus, while the use described as an amree on pages 308 and 309 is a use transferred. The law, therefore, must be interpreted to mean that the owner of an estate may retain what is virtually a life estate, but he cannot transfer anything more than a mere use. If he purports to transfer something more than the use, namely, a use, which is not revocable during the term for which it is granted, and which can be lent or leased to another or otherwise alienated, he will be held to have transferred not only the use, but also the corpus. A life estate, therefore, can only, under Muhammadan Law, be created by reservation after the transfer of the corpus. It cannot be created by transfer to another whether the corpus is retained or not by the donor. The passage on page 294 is only inconsistent with the remarks on pages 308 and 309 about an amree on the assumption, which I have shown to be unwarranted, that what can be retained by a donor must necessarily be capable of transfer by him. The same Arabic word is used for "use" in this discussion on the areeat as in the passage respecting the amree or life-estate, namely, "munafa,"

It was argued that even if there is nothing in the Hedaya to support the gift of a life estate, still there is nothing to prevent it. I find this passage concerning the amree on pages 308 and 309 to be a clear indication that the gift (hiba) of a life estate is forbidden in the sense that it will be construed as a gift of an absolute estate. I also find that the requirements of Muhammadan Law that a gift must be perfected by delivery of possession negatives the possibility of a life estate being conferred by gift under that law for the following reasons:—The corpus must either go to the life owner or to the owner of the remainder. There is nothing in the Hedaya to support the suggestion that the corpus can be split up into different estates of this nature. If the corpus goes to the remainderman there is no possibility of the delivery of the corpus to the life owner. It is no doubt correct that the delivery of possession may be given in such a way as the nature of the gift permits, but it would not appear that this means that delivery of corpus, either constructive or actual, can be entirely absent in the case of gift. The delivery of the corpus to the remainder-man would not be even constructive delivery of the corpus to the life owner and no such delivery is set up in the case. No attempt has been made to show that a life estate can be granted by means of an areeat, and any such attempt would be useless in the face of the provisions of the Hedaya that an areeat does not convey the corpus that it is liable to be revoked by the donor, and that it does not vest in the donee a power of lease etc.

It has been argued that Muhammadan Law looks at the intention of a document and not at the form, and that to construe a deed of gift for life as an absolute gift is inconsistent with this principle. This argument involves a confusion of thought. The word "construction" used with reference to a document may mean the meaning which the person executing it expressed and it may also mean the effect which the law allows the deed to have. Muhammadan Law does not in effect require that a deed giving a life estate should be construed against the intention of the donor as having meant that he gave an absolute estate, but it requires that whatever his intention was, the deed shall be treated as giving an absolute estate.

So far as rulings have been quoted, all the rulings dealing with Hindus, and all those dealing with estates created by family arrangement, appear irrelevant. Hindu Law, as has been stated by the Privy Council, can afford little analogy in a case depending on the interpretation of the Hedaya. Family arrangements may possibly not be subject to Muhammadan Law, or may be governed by principles not applicable to gifts and Wills. It is not necessary to express any opinion on the matter. The rulings in cases where family arrangements were in question were cited mainly with reference to the contention which I have rejected, that there was a family arrangement in the present case. Confining myself to rulings on gifts and Wills, I find no rulings of the Privy Council giving any countenance to the gift of a life estate, under Muhammadan Law, but several rulings suggesting the contrary. On pages 508 and 509 of Mr. Tyabjee's Principles of Muhammadan Law, 2nd Edition, various suggestions are made by which a gift of a life estate under Muhammadan Law might be defended. They all appear to me to be untenable in the face of the passage as to amree on page 294 of the Hedaya. They also appear to ignore the principle that a gift must be perfected by delivery of possession of the corpus, and that where there is no corpus transferred there can be no gift. They might be excellent arguments otherwise.

In the course of argument it has been urged that if life estates cannot be given or devised under Muhammadan Law, that law is unsuited to modern conditions and requirements, a conclusion which should certainly be founded on very cogent reasoning. Markby in his Elements of Law, 4th Edition, pages 200 and 201 makes the following remarks:—"The term possession, as we have hitherto explained it, clearly assumes some tangible existing thing, over which the party in possession may exercise his physical control but the Roman lawyers extended the idea of possession to abstractions: to things which are not perceptible to the senses, to incorporeal things, as they are usually called by lawyers." Again, "The Roman lawyers contented themselves with extending the legal idea of possession to those rights which the denominated servitudes—a class of rights similar to, but more extensive than, that class of rights which we call easements. And they constructed for the protection of the enjoyment of rights of this class rules closely analogous to those for the protection of the physical control over things corporeal. Modern lawyers have attempted to give to the idea of possession a much wider extension: and this extension with us is infinite." ....."Whether or no such an extension of the idea of possession is useful, this is not the place to consider." Now it would appear that up to the date when the British took over the government of this country there had been no demand for the extension of the legal idea of possession, in Muhammadan Law, to any right midway between mere use and ownership of the corpus or substance. In order to allay any fear that the British Government intended to interfere with personal law, it was declared that the personal law of Hindus and Muhammadans should be governed by their own authorities. This may have stood in the way of the evolution of that law, by the broadening of precedents, so as to make it keep pace with modern requirements. If this is so, the remedy appears to me not to lie in legislation by the Courts under fiction of exposition, but by direct legislation on the part of the Legislature.

I, therefore, hold that Muhammadan Law required the deed of gift of the 17th January 1905, to operate as a gift of the absolute estate, if it was to operate at all.

It has been urged that apart from the consideration of the effect of the deed of gift in favour of Musammat Waziran, she must be held to have taken the estate under a trust requiring her heirs to hand it over to the defendants. If it is contended that this trust came into existence under the terms of the deed of gift, then to allow such a trust would be in effect to allow the donor to give a life estate, and would be against what I have held to be the law as expressed in the Hedaya. It has, however, been urged that Musammat Waziran's statement at mutation amounted to a declaration of a self-imposed trust. The expression "self-imposed trust" appears to me a contradiction in terms. The only meaning that I could attach to it in this connection would be that Musammat Waziran imposed on her existing title some limitation at the time of mutation. Now the imposition on herself of such a limitation would be without consideration, except so far as the imposition was part of a family arrangement. I have already held that there was no family arrangement at the time of mutation. It has been suggested that the reason why the Hedaya forbids a condition which is a clog on the absoluteness of the gift of the corpus, is because that condition cannot be enforced by a donor, and that this objection would not apply when the clog was a self imposed one, but I hold that the Hedaya does not merely forbid a donor imposing such a clog because he cannot enforce it, but because it will not recognise any such clog for that clog is inconsistent with the transfer of the corpus.

The question is now whether the gift was perfected by delivery of possession. The case of the plaintiff is that from the date of the deed of gift Ghulam Murtaza ceased to make collections, and that they were made on behalf of Musammat Waziran by one Ahmed Husain. He has given evidence as P. W. No. 3 (page 38 of the first part of the record), and says "Musammat Waziran remained in possession since the execution of the deed of gift. Ghulam Murtaza died about a year after the deed of gift. I used to make collections on her behalf, and those tenants who lived close by made payments to her direct at the direction of Ghulam Murtaza." In cross-examination he says Ghulam Murtaza made collections up to his death, (then says) till the execution of the deed of gift. I do not know whether he signed patwari siyaha." This slip of the tongue is somewhat significant, and in any way it is difficult to reconcile this evidence with the evidence of P. W. No. 5 at page 41. Ahmad Husain, moreover, did not produce any mukhtarnama to show that he was formally authorised to collect. P. W. No. 6 is a tenant at Jamauli. He says "I paid Rs. 11 a year to Ghulam Murtaza for 25 or 30 years till one year before his death, and then paid the rent to his wife at his direction as he told me that he had given over the land to the Thakurain" and in cross-examination says "I paid rent to Muhammad Husain and sometimes to the Thakurain. Ahmad Husain never made collections." Now this Muhammad Husain was not appointed an agent till after Ghulam Murtaza's death (mukhtarnama printed as Ex. 7, page 95 of part II of the record). It is contended that he may have collected rents before formal appointment but there is no evidence of this. P. W. No. 5 says that he paid rents during the year in question either to the lady or to Muhammad Husain. P. W. No. 6, page 42 says that he paid rent to the lady; Turab Ali, P. W. No. 12, page 50, says that he paid rent to Ghulam Murtaza till a year before his death. Ghulam Murtaza told him to pay the rent to his wife as he said that he had transferred the property to her. Now P. W. Nos. 5, 6, and 12, are all tenants of Jamauli where Muhammad Husain himself owns land. P. W. No. 5 admits that he is a tentant of Muhammad Husain. This Muhammad Husain, according to P. W. No. 7, page 43 is a nephew of one Aulat Hussain, whose sister is married to Amjad Khan, the son of the plaintiff. His sympathies would, therefore, be with the plaintiff; and it is suggested that he got these witnesses.

On the other hand, the defendants have produced a very large number of tenants and co-shares who deposed that nothing was done to alter any arrangements until after the death of Ghulam Murtaza. They are D. W. Nos. 1, 2 and 7 from Jamauli, Nos. 8 and 20 from Bhatauli, No. 9 from Hajipur, No. 10 from Kachiya, No. 11 from Akhori, No 12 from Balpur, No. 12 a co sharer in Jamauli, No. 16 a Zilladar of a co-sharer in all the villages, No. 18 a co-sharer in four of the villages in suit, and Nos. 19 to 27 co-sharers in the villages in suit. They all say that Ghulam Murtaza made collections during his life and after his death Muhammad Husain made collections for the widow. The learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment under Issues No. 1, 2, and 3 (see page 107 of the first part of the printed record) holds that it is proved that Ghulam Murtaza remained in actual possession until his death, but he holds that the acknowledgment in the deed itself on the part of Ghulam Murtaza that he has ceased to be the owner of the gifted property, and had given over possession to the donee, would make the gift complete, in view of the fact that he was the husband of the donee, and that they were living together. He has cited Art. 393, page 302 of Tyabjee's Principles of Muhammadan Law, 1st Edition, which states that, where the subject of the gift consists of immoveable property which is occupied by tenants, if the donor requests them to attorn to the donee the possession of the property is thereby transferred to the donee. This article appears irrelevant in view of the fact that the Subordinate Judge had not believed the tenants who are produced to depose to the attornment. It must be held proved that Ghulam Murtaza, apart from the declaration in the deed, did nothing in the way of transferring possession to the widow, and we have now to consider whether the mere declaration in the deed, in view of the fact that the donee was the wife of the donor, was sufficient proof of delivery of possession. Certain rulings have been cited in which the evidence consisting of the declaration in the deed has been held sufficient to prove delivery of possession. Some of these rulings refer to cases where the donor died so soon after this gift that he had no time to do anything further. They will not be applicable to this case where a whole year intervened. In the Privy Council case, Mohammad Mumtaz Ahmad v. Zubaida Jan (3) their Lordships of the Privy Council found that mutation had taken place without objection, and that the donor had made an application to the Collector for expunction of her name. This case is, therefore, not on all fours with the present circumstances. In the case of Mahamed Buksh Khan v. Hoseini Bibi (4), it was held that the gift was a public one and authorised the donee to take possession which was in fact taken subsequently, and so it is not applicable. The case of Shaikh Ibhram v. Shaik Suleman (5) is to be distinguished on the ground that the donee was already in physical possession of the house in question. It appears that each case must be judged on its merits. In the present case there was no mutation. When Ghulam Murtaza died and the widow applied for mutation, although the defendant Ashraf Khan at first objected, he withdrew his objection upon the widow making a statement that she only held for life under the deed of gift. He now says in his evidence that his objection was based on the fact that the widow had not got possession during her husband's life time, a statement which the appellant's Counsel would use against him, on the ground that in this case his subsequent withdrawal of the objection amounted to an admission that the lady really did get possession. But, it being clear on the evidence that the lady, if she held possession, only held it vicariously through Ghulam Murtaza, the admission is no evidence that she actually got possession. The mutation proceedings are evidence neither one way nor the other. The state of the law appears to me to be that there must be evidence produced by the person claiming under a gift, as the plaintiff is, that the donor did all in his power to enable the donee to exercise her possession. In this case it is at least as likely as not that Ghulam Murtaza did not intend the deed of gift to operate until his death. The terms of the deed of gift along with the evidence as to the circumstances in which it was executed show that he only wanted to carry into effect the intention shown in the previous Will. When he made the Will it is shown by the deed of the so-called agreement executed on the same date that he did not want to give up possession until after his death. It is urged that he reconciled himself to her immediate possession in order to vaildate the gift, but if this were so, he might have allowed the lady to appoint an agent to make collections for herself, and indeed this (but falsely in my opinion) was alleged by the plaintiff. Again he might have seen that the money was entered in the patwari's payment register (siaha) as paid to the lady but no siaha has been produced. Lastly he might have made the lady apply for mutation in her name. I am unable to hold that the mere fact of his living in the same house with his wife would justify him in doing nothing at all beyond making the declaration of the transfer of possession in the deed of gift. It appears to me that to hold this would be inconsistent with the passages in the Hedaya enacting that in certain specific cases, such as that of minor wife (in some but not all circumstances) and that of a lunatic, the donor may retain possession on behalf of the donee. These specific cases, which do not include that of a wife who is not a minor, appear to me, on the principle of "what is not included is excluded" to have the effect of making it necessary for a gift by a husband to a wife to be completed by some act of delivery of possession other than the mere declaration in the deed. I am the less prepared on this point to condone any weakness in the plaintiff's case (the burden of proving delivery of possession was on the plaintiff) because he allowed 11 years to elapse since the death of Musammat Waziran before bringing this claim against the nephews.

For these reasons I am unable to hold that the deed of gift was perfected by delivery of possession.

Assuming that the gift was perfected by delivery of possession and was otherwise valid, the interest that passed to Musammat Waziran was clearly only a life interest in the whole, coupled with a right during her life to dispose of one-third. On her death the whole property retained by her at the time of her death would pass to the nephews. The Subordinate Judge's decision cannot, in my opinion, be sustained to the effect that these nephews should only get two-thirds. In view, however, of my findings that the deed of gift must be held to have given the widow an absolute estate, but that it was not perfected by delivery of possession, this question does not arise.

On these findings the position is as follows:—

The plaintiff's Appeal No. 44 is successful against the finding of the Subordinate Judge in favour of a family arrangement and in maintaining that the deed of gift should be construed as a gift of absolute title. The defendants' Appeal No. 51 succeeds as to the contention that there was not delivery of possession, and that the plaintiff-respondent is not entitled to succeed to even one-third of the property in suit. The result is that the plaintiff's claim fails except so far as it was allowed in respect of the area of 3 bighas 4 biswas mentioned in para. 3 of the plaint, and should stand dismissed with costs to the defendants in both Courts. The plaintiff asks for costs against the defendants according to the proportion that the value of the claim for the 3 bighas 4 biswas bears to his total claim but contest on this point was withdrawn by the defendants at so early a stage, and the costs are so relatively small, that I would not grant these costs. The decree of the lower Court should be amended according to this decision and also to supply the omission of the decree for the 3 bighas 4 biswas referred to in para. 3 of the plaint.

Wazir Hasan, A. J. C.—[December 12, 1924.]—These are cross-appeals from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Barabanki, dated the 30th May 1923. Appeal No. 44 is of the plaintiff's, while the other Appeal No. 51 is of the defendants. The sole plaintiff in the suit out of which these appeals arise was one Salar Khan. He died during the pendency of the appeals in this Court and in his place was substituted his son Amjad Khan, by an order dated the 11th April 1924. Amjad Khan is the sole appellant in Appeal No. 44. Amongst the defendants Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan are the chief contesting parties. The other defendants from Nos. 3 to 18 are transferees of certain portions of the property in suit from the principal defendants. Amongst the defendants Gaya Prasad No. 7 died during the pendency of the appeals. His representatives are Harihar Bakhsh, already respondent No. 8 in his own right and one Musammat Munia. This statement completes the array of the parties.

Happily no facts except one are in controversy. The exception will be stated at its proper place in the course of this judgment. The property in suit consists of 3 bighas 4 biswas land situated in village Jamauli, Pargana Mawai stated at the foot of the plaint and 11 parcels of shares in different villages the specifications of which were given in the list attached to the plaint. The plaintiff's title to one class is different from his title to the other of these properties. The shares in the villages originally belonged to one Ghulam Murtaza Khan. Musammat Waziran was his wife. The plaintiff, Salar Khan, was the brother of Musammat Waziran. The 3 bighas odd land in village Jamauli was purchased by Musammat Waziran on the 30th July 1901. This last-mentioned property has been decreed by the Court below in favour of the plaintiff and is no longer in dispute in these appeals. The narrative of events which follows, therefore, relates to the shares in the villages alone.

On the 18th January 1894 Ghulam Murtaza Khan executed two documents one styled as a Will (Ex. A 13) and the other as an agreement (Ex. A14). The Will and the agreement both related to the property in suit. The main dispositions made by the Will may easily be described in the language of English Law as creating a life estate in favour of Musammat Waziran with an absolute remainder in favour of Ashraf Khan on the one hand and Asghar Khan, Wahid Khan, and Basharat Khan on the other in equal moieties. Asharf Khan is the son of Muhammad Ali, Basharat Khan, Wahid Khan and Asghar Khan are the sons of Masum Ali, both being the brothers of Ghulam Murtaza Khan. In the deed of agreement the dispositions made in the Will were recited and further Ghulam Murtaza Khan made a declaration that he shall remain in possession of all the properties so long as he lived but shall have no power of alienation.

On the 17th January 1905 Ghulam Murtaza Khan executed a document which is christened as a deed of gift (Ex. 5) and evidences a transfer in presenti of the property first to his wife, Musammat Waziran, and after her death to Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan, his nephews. The deed was attested as witnesses by Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan. The other two nephews of his, namely, Asghar Khan and Wahid Khan, had died before the execution of the deed of gift. The legal effect of this deed is a matter of serious controversy between the parties to this litigation.

Ghulam Murtaza Khan was a Hanafi Muhammadan. He died on the 6th February 1906. After his death proceedings for mutation of names in the revenue registers were taken by Musammat Waziran on the one hand and Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan on the other. In the course of those proceedings Musammat Waziran's statement was recorded by the Court (Ex. A 12). In that she stated that her husband had died 15 days ago and that she had no issue. She was in possession of her husband's property under the gift. The gift gave her power of alienation in respect of one-third but not with respect to the remaining two-thirds. On these grounds she asked for mutation of names to be made in her favour. The proceedings came to a close by the order of the Court dated the 17th December 1906 (Ex. A 15), and mutation was granted in favour of Musammat Waziran in place of Ghulam Murtaza Khan. Curiously enough the entry in the khewat of the villages in pursuance of the order mentioned above was made in favour of Musammat Waziran in the right of inheritance and not as a donee under the gift (Exs. A 1 to A 10). The error is of no consequence, having regard to the circumstances in which the order for mutation in favour of Musammat Waziran was passed. We have also on this record an Ex. (No. 3), which is a copy of an extract from a register kept for the purpose of showing the destruction of mutation records after the expiry of 12 years. The nature of one of the records destroyed is described in column 3 of this extract as "Musammat Waziran v. Ghulan Murtaza mutation of names by virtue of gift." It will be convenient to refer here to the evidence of Ashraf Khan, defendant in the present case, bearing on the matter now being narrated. He says: "After his (Ghulam Murtaza Khan's) death Musammat Waziran applied for mutation saying that she had been in possession under a gift. I filed objections to the mutation on the basis of the gift as she had not got possession during her husband's lifetime. Musammat Waziran was examined in the mutation case before the partition. After her statement I did not prosecute my objection." Musammat Waziran admittedly remained in possession and enjoyment of the property in suit till her death which occurred on the 18th November, 1909. The controversy between the parties relates to the period of the commencement of such possession. According to the plaintiff, Musammat Waziran's possession followed the gift. According to the defendants it commenced after the death of Ghulam Murtaza Khan. On this question of fact we are called upon to give our decision.

After the death of Musammat Waziran. Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan entered into the possession of the entire property and mutation of names was made in their favour without any objection by any body. In the course of the proceedings relating to the mutation of names just now mentioned Ashraf Khan stated that the property left by Musammat Waziran was possessed by Basharat Khan and himself in equal shares. He further stated that that property was transferred by Ghulam Murtaza Khan first by Will and again by gift to Musammat Waziran and the deed of gift provided that after the death of Ghulam Murtaza Khan and of Musammat Waziran the deponent, that is Ashraf Khan, and Basharat Khan were entitled to it in equal shares (Ex. 4).

The present suit was commenced by Salar Khan, brother of Musammat Waziran, on the 4th November 1921. His case is that Musammat Waziran was the absolute owner of the properties in suit under the deed of gift of the 17th January 1905 that possession was delivered to the donee in pursuance thereof and that on her death he as her sole heir under the Hanafi Muhammadan Law was entitled to the recovery of possession of the said properties from the hands of the defendants whose possession was unlawful. The pleas taken in defence were—(1) that Ghulam Murtaza Khan belonged to the Shia sect and not to the Hanafi; (2) that the gift was invalid for want of delivery of possession; (3) that it did not confer a heritable estate on Musammat Waziran in any portion of the property in suit and that at best she acquired only a life interest thereunder; and (4) that the circumstances in which the gift was made and also those following the death of Ghulam Murtaza Khan constituted family settlements under each of which Musammat Waziran was to possess no more than a life interest in the property in suit and on her death it was to devolve on the legal heirs of Ghulam Murtaza Khan. On the question as to whether Ghulam Murtaza Khan was a Shia or a Sunni the learned Subordinate Judge found that he was a Sunni. This finding was accepted by both the parties to these appeals at the hearing before us. We must, therefore, hold that Ghulam Murtaza Khan was a Hanafi Musalman.

On the issue relating to the delivery of possession his finding is that there was such a delivery. On the plea of family settlement his finding is that the gift in question is the result of such a settlement and that a similar settlement giving effect to the provisions of the gift was reached during the mutation proceedings following the death of Ghulam Murtaza Khan. On these grounds he upheld the gift as it is. On the question of the construction of the deed of gift dated the 17th January 1905 the learned Subordinate Judge's opinion is that Musammat Waziran acquired absolute title descendible to her heir, the plaintiff, in respect of only one-third of the gifted property. He, therefore, gave a decree to the plaintiff for that share and dismissed the rest of the suit except as to the 3 bighas odd which were also decreed and which, as we have stated above, are now dropped out of the controversy.

At the hearing of these appeals two points were urged in support of Appeal No. 44 on behalf of the plaintiff:—1. That the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that there was a family settlement is erroneous. 2. That according to the Hanafi Muhammadan Law the gift in question must be construed to have conferred an absolute estate upon Musammat Waziran in the whole of the gifted property. In support of Appeal No. 51 the following points were urged on behalf of the defendants:—

(1) That there was no delivery of possession following the gift.

(2) That the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge that the gift in question conferred an absolute estate on Musammat Waziran in respect of one-third of the property was erroneous and that she acquired only a life estate in the entire property; and

(3) That the life estate so gifted was valid in law.

First of all, I propose to deal with point No. 2 in the plaintiff's appeal which of course involves a consideration of points Nos. 2 and 3 in the defendants' appeal as well. I have given my prolonged and anxious consideration to this part of the case and I confess that it is not easy to come to a decision on it with confidence.

In this direction the first step is to settle the construction of the deed of gift of the 17th January 1905. As a mere matter of construction, I am clearly of opinion that the contention of the defendants is sound. To construe this deed of gift, as indeed any deed, is to ascertain the intentions of the donor and this must be done primarily with the help of the language used by him. To this means it is permissible to such assistance as can be derived from the surrounding circumstances.

The translation of the deed of gift in question is printed at page 91, Part III, of the record. At the outset reference is made to the Will and the agreement of the 18th January 1894. The motive of the gift is stated to be "to avoid any difficulty to my wife in obtaining possession over the willed property after me." Then follows the operative part of the document—"I, therefore...have made a gift without consideration of my entire property detailed below...without the exception of any right or part to my wife Musammat Waziran...subject to the condition that out of the entire property mentioned in the deed of gift she shall remain in possession of shares worth Rs. 5,000 with power to make at her pleasure any sort of alienation like mortgage, sale or gift in respect thereof and that, as to the rest, worth Rs. 10,000, she shall not possess any power of alienation but she shall remain in possession thereof for lifetime. After the death of the donee the entire property gifted... shall revert to the donor's collaterals, viz., Ashraf Khan, Basharat Khan and their heirs, in equal shares, and those heirs of mine shall become owners with full proprietary powers and the own heirs of the donee lady shall not inherit the same and the donee and my aforesaid heirs have accordingly agreed and consented to this. I have put the lady donee in possession of the property gifted to her, and, therefore, from to-day I have ceased to possess any right or claim in respect of the gifted property and my wife Musammat Waziran, from to-day became owner and possessor of the aforesaid property in accordance with the terms of this deed." The avowed object of the gift is to accelerate the operation of the Will and the agreement. The combined effect of both was to confer a life interest upon Musammat Waziran and the devolution of the reversion upon the testator's heir-at-law. By the gift, therefore, the donor Ghulam Murtaza Khan, makes in the first instance an immediate transfer of the property stated in the schedule attached to the deed in favour of his wife, Musammat Waziran, for her life. The life estate thus conferred is divided into two proportions, one-third and two-thirds. Musammat Waziran is given the power of alienation in respect of the one-third and that power is expressly withheld from her in respect of the remaining two-thirds. The next disposition is to come into effect after the death of Musammat Waziran and it relates to the whole property, that is, both the parts, one-third and two-thirds. The course of the devolution of the property after the death of Musammat Waziran may be construed as either one of inheritance to the donor or a further gift of an absolute estate in favour of Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan. Having regard to the events which have actually happened it is not necessary to determine precisely which of the two courses mentioned above was intended by the donor to follow. Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan both survived the lady, and they are the heirs-at-law of Ghulam Murtaza Khan. The power of alienation given in respect of the one-third and its explicit withdrawal in respect of the two-thirds creates no difficulty to my mind. Those provisions merely mean at the best that the reversion or the vested remainder shall be bound by any alienation which the lady may choose to make in respect of the one-third or any fraction of it; but if such alienation is not made the entire property shall devolve upon Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan and their heirs by virtue of reversion to the estate of Ghulam Murtaza Khan or by the force of a vested remainder under the gift. It is admitted that the lady did not exercise the power of alienation in respect of any portion of the property. Disregarding, therefore, in the circumstances of this case this power of alienation as of no consequence I am clearly of opinion that Musammat Waziran acquired merely a life interest in the property in suit.

The construction of the deed of gift adopted in the paragraph immediately preceding is not seriously disputed by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff. His contention, however, is that though the gift in favour of Musammat Waziran, both in letter and in spirit, is merely of a life interest this Court is compelled by the rules of the Muhammadan Law applicable to gifts without consideration to hold that an absolute estate passed to Musammat Waziran. The question thus raised is a difficult one. In giving my decision on that question, the first step which seems advisable to take is to consider the effect of the relevant pronouncements made from time to time by their Lordships of the Privy Council. Obviously, the best method of so doing is to refer to the judgments of the Privy Council in their chronological order. It need hardly be said that if these judgments singly or collectively are authority for the proposition contended for by the learned Counsel I must uphold the contention whatever may be my own views on the subject.

Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Musammat Mohamdee Begam (1). The case was one of Shias whose law on the subject under consideration is admittedly different from that of the Hanafis. The judgment of the Privy Council was, however, given with reference to the Hedaya, which is a book of law governing the Hanafi sect. In that case the donor made a gift inter vivos of certain Government promissory notes to his son with a stipulation that the interest accruing on the notes would be applied during the donor's lifetime to certain religious and charitable purposes. To appreciate the full effect of the decision I must quote here the portion of the judgment bearing on this question: "It remains to be considered whether a real transfer of property by the donor in his life-time under the Muhammdan Law, reserving not the dominion over the corpus of the property, nor any share of dominion over the corpus, but simply stipulating for and obtaining a right to the recurring produce during his life-time is an incomplete gift by the Muhammadan Law. The text of the Hedaya seems to include the very proposition, and to negative it. The thing to be returned is not identical but something different—see Hedaya, tit. 'Gifts,' Vol. III, Book XXX, page 294, where the objection being raised that a participation of property in the thing given invalidates a gift, the answer is: 'The donor is subjected to a participation in a thing which is not the subject of his grant, namely, the use (of the whole indivisible article); for his gift related to the substance of the article, not to the use of it.' Again, if the agreement for the reservation of the interest to the father for his life be treated as a repugnant condition, repugnant to the whole enjoyment by the donee, here the Muhammadan Law defeats, not the grant, but the condition—Hedaya, tit. 'Gifts,' Vol. III, Book XXX, p. 307. But as this arrangement between the father and the son is founded on a valid consideration, the son's undertaking is valid, and could be enforced against him in the Courts of India as an agreement raising a trust, and constituting a valid obligation to make a return of the proceeds during the time stipulated."

It will be seen that the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council is not based exclusively on the Muhammadan Law. The gift is also interpreted and upheld as an agreement for consideration resulting in a trust. In considering the rule of the Muhammadan Law as applied by their Lordships of the Privy Council stress must be laid on the observation that "the thing to be returned is not identical but something different." This judgment clearly recognises the juristic distinction between the corpus of and an interest in property.

Musammat Humeeda v. Musammat Budlen (6). The property in dispute in that case belonged to one Moulvi Mahomed Ali. On his death it devolved under the Hanafi Law of inheritance upon his son, Ali

(6) 17 W. R. 525 (P. C.).

Karim, and his widow Musammat Bibi Budlun, mother of Ali Karim. The property was confiscated in 1857 on account of the rebellious conduct of Ali Karim. The Government then sold it to several purchasers. Musammat Bibi Budlun instituted a suit against the purchasers and the Government for recovery of possession. Her case was that Ali Karim being unable to pay the dower debt due to her from her husband's estate relinquished his right as heir of his father to 14-annas share of the property in satisfaction of the dower debt. The question in the case was whether the arrangement by which the relinquishment was made by Ali Karim in favour of his mother amounted to an acquisition of a life estate or an absolute estate by the widow. The High Court held that she held only a life interest in the property in suit. Their Lordships of the Privy Council disagreed with the High Court and came to the conclusion that it was not proved that the widow had acquired anything less than an absolute estate. The decision turns entirely upon the construction of certain documentary evidence tendered in proof of the arrangement relied upon in that case. In construing that evidence their Lordships said:—

"The case made is that the son relinquished his share in his father's possession in satisfaction of the claim for dower. Such relinquishment would be prima facie absolute; and, if it were absolute, the widow could take the whole property, subject to the claims of other creditors. The subsequent acts of the parties are consistent with this state of things." In support of the construction which their Lordships placed on the arrangement in question the following observation was made:—

"Upon what grounds then ought it to be held that what the son gave up, he gave up for only the life of his mother, retaining the legal reversion in himself? The creation of such a life estate does not seem to be consistent with Muhammadan usage, and there ought to be very clear proof of so unusual a transaction." The result is that the opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council that the mother of Ali Karim acquired an absolute and not a life estate was clearly founded upon the proof produced in that case. In my judgment, therefore, the decision in this case does not support the plaintiff's contention. On the other hand, it would seem to follow from the observations quoted above that if the intention to confer merely a life estate were established it would have been given effect to. At all events it may be safely said, as was said by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Banoo Begum v. Mir Abed Ali (7) "that their Lordships do not affirm the validity of such a transaction but they certainly do not discard it as impossible."

Mahomed Faiz Ahmad v. Ghulam Ahmad Khan (8). The transaction in dispute in that case was evidenced by two documents—one executed by Faiz Ahmad Khan, the appellant, and the other by Musammat Wali-un-nisa, the widow of his deceased brother. By the first instrument Faiz Ahmad Khan granted two villages to Musammat Wali-un-nisa. By the other the widow accepted the gift and relinquished her claim to any part of the estate of her husband. The suit was brought by the heirs of Musammat Wali-un-nisa against Faiz Ahmed Khan. The defence put forward on behalf of Faiz Ahmed Khan was that the villages had not been granted to the widow for any estate greater than for her life but had been granted by way of ariat. The Courts in India held on the construction of the two documents that the grant was not an areeat but that an absolute gift of the villages was made to the widow. In delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council Sir Montague E. Smith laid stress on the use of the word "gift" in the document executed by Faiz Ahmed Khan and held that the word has a technical signification and could not be construed as conveying an interest by way of areeat, there being nothing in the documents to support the latter construction. The argument in the present case advanced on behalf of the defendants is not that the deed of gift of the 17th January 1903, evidenced a transaction of areeat in favour of Musammat Waziran. It is true, however, that some of the expressions used in the deed of gift under consideration for conveying an estate to Musammat Waziran are technical such as "I have made a gift.....of my entire property" and "Musammat Waziran from to-day became owner and possessor of the aforesaid property." The rule of interpretation applicable to such cases was stated by Lord Davey in the case of Lalit Mohan Singh

Roy v. Chukkun Lal Roy (9) in the following words:—"There are two cardinal principles in the construction of Wills, deeds and other documents, which their Lordships think are applicable to the decision of this case. The first is that clear and unambiguous dispositive words are not to be controlled or qualified by any general expression of intention. The second is, to use Lord Denman's language, that technical words or words of known legal import must have their legal effect even though the testator uses inconsistent words, unless those inconsistent words are of such a nature as to make it perfectly clear that the testator did not mean to use the technical terms in their proper sense—Doe d Gallini v. Gallini (10)." It is hardly necessary to repeat that these technical expressions cannot be given the effect of conveying an absolute estate to Musammat Waziran in the present case. Those expressions are clearly controlled by unambiguous language manifesting an intention of conveying merely a life-interest.

Suleman Kadr v. Dorab Ali Khan (11). The portion of the judgment relevant to the present inquiry may only be quoted:—"Their Lordships are by no means satisfied that the gift to this lady of these Government promissory notes subject to a condition that she is to have the interest only for life, and that after her death there is to be a trust in perpetuity for all her heirs to all time, is not, according to Muhammdan Law, in its legal effect, a gift to her absolutely, the condition being void. However, without determining a point which is not necessary for the decision of the case....." The case was one of Shia Musalmans and it cannot be doubted that had their Lordships decided the point the decision would have been that the life estate was a valid estate. As it is, the decision is no authority one way or the other.

Abdul Wahid Khan v. Nuran Bibi (12). By a compromise in a litigation between one Gauhar Bibi, the widow, and Abdus Subhan Khan and Abdul Rahman Khan, who claimed as sons of one Muazzam Khan, it was agreed that the widow shall during her lifetime continue to hold possession and remain proprietor without power of alienation of the property in suit and that after her death Abdus Subhan Khan and Abdul Rahman Khan shall possess the property in equal moieties. Abdus Subhan Khan died in 1868, Abdul Rahman Khan in 1874 and Gauhar Bibi in 1875. While in possession Gauhar Bibi made a gift of the property in 1874 to Murad Bibi, daughter of Abdul Rahman Khan, Murad Bibi remained in possession till her death which occurred in 1881. Her husband, Abdul Wahid Khan, succeeded her and was the defendant in the case. The suit was brought by Nuran Bibi, sister of the two brothers. Her case was that the title which her brothers had acquired under the compromise devolved upon her by law of inheritance and that she had a right to the possession of the property on the termination of the life estate of Gauhar Bibi. The defence to this suit was that the compromise created only rights contingent upon the brothers surviving Gauhar Bibi and as they had both died before Gauhar Bibi no estate passed to the plaintiff. On those pleadings the issue which legitimately arose was "Was the interest of the two brothers vested or contingent?" In agreement with the Court of first instance their Lordships of the Privy Council held that it was not vested. Here again the question was one of construction and in deciding that question their Lordships referred to their previous decision in the case of Musammat Humeeda v. Musammat Budlun (6) already mentioned. In this case as in the previous case their Lordships expressed their opinion "that expressions from which it might be inferred that the plaintiff was to take only a life interest might be explained on the supposition that they may have been used to import that the property was to remain with the widow for the full term of her life, and that the son as her heir would succeed to it after her death." This cannot be predicated of the present deed of gift. Indeed the deed says that "the heirs of the donee lady shall not inherit the same" and the persons upon whom the remainder or the reversion was to devolve were the heirs of the donor and not of the donee. Before parting with the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council I must quote the following observation also:—"Their Lordships think this is the reasonable construction of the compromise in this case, and that it would be opposed to Muhammdan Law to hold that it created a vested interest in Abdul Rahman and Abdus Subhan which passed to their heirs on their death in the lifetime of Gauhar Bibi." I have said more than once that the defendants' title to the property now in suit does not depend upon the validity of the remainderman's estate in the deed in question. In the first place, they are the heirs at law to the estate of Ghulam Murtaza Khan, and, in the second place, they are in possession of the property to which they may have no title; but the absence of title in the defendants will give no right to the plaintiff to succeed. I am, therefore, not called upon to decide whether the creation of a vested remainder is valid or invalid under the Muhammadan Law. Their Lordships did not decide, as it was not necessary to decide, that no title would have devolved upon the two brothers even if they had survived the widow. This decision also is, therefore, no authority in favour of the plaintiff's contention.

Umesh Chunder Sircar v. Zahoor Fatima (13). This is an important decision and was noticed at great length by Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Banoo Begum v. Mir Abed Ali (7). The result at which the learned Chief Justice reached may be stated here in his own words: "This case then affirms the possibility of the creation by a Muhammadan of 'a definite interest like what we should call in English Law a vested remainder,' and that such a remainder though liable to be displaced was not a mere expectancy in succession by survivorship or other merely contingent or possible right or interest, but an interest that could be attached and sold." It is hardly necessary to point out that there can be no valid remainderman's estate without a valid preceding particular estate. The interpretation placed by Sir Lawrence Jenkins on the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council is definitely opposed to the plaintiff's contention and equally definitely supports the defendants'. It may be noted that it was admitted at the Bar before us that the case was one of Sunnis and not of Shias.

Abdul Gafur v. Nizamuddin (14). The document relied upon in that case was styled as a wakfnama. The Courts in India held that it was invalid as such. The High Court further held that it was also inoperative as a settlement. Before their Lordships of the Privy Council endeavour was made to support the appeal on the ground that the deed ought to be treated as a Will. In respect of that ground their Lordships held that a Muhammadan cannot by means of a Will either curtail or defeat the legal interests of his heirs and that a Muhammadan Will is, therefore, inoperative with regard to two-thirds of the testator's succession, unless it is validated by the consent of the heirs having interest. Then their Lordships proceeded to observe: "Their Lordships do not think the appellants would take any benefit from the document of 1838 if it were construed as the Will of Karimuddin. It was plainly not his intention to create a series of life-rents, a kind of estate which does not appear to be known to Muhammadan Law—see Masammat Humeeda v. Musammat Budlun (6)—but to make the fee devolve from one generation of his descendants to another without its being alienable by them or liable to be taken in execution for their debts. Even if Tahirabibi had expressly consented to accept the Will, she would not have been the owner of a life-estate, but a full owner, with prohibition against alienation, which, being void in law, could not either affect herself or her creditors." It is clear to my mind that here again the question was decided on the construction of the document and it was held as a mere matter of construction that the intention was to make the fee devolve from one generation to another: in other words, the document was held to have created an estate of fee simple with a restraint on the power of alienation which of course was void in law. The decision, therefore, does not support the plaintiff.

Muhammad Abdul Ghani v. Fakher Jehan Begam (2). On the 7th March 1884 one Munni Bibi executed a document, the construction and legal effect of which was the matter in controversy. The plaintiff-appellant contended that the document was a

Will. The defendant, on the other hand, said that it was a deed of gift. In agreement with the opinion of this Court their Lordships of the Privy Council held that it was a deed of gift. By this deed Munni Bibi conveyed moveable and immoveable property to Muhammad Lutfullah Khan, nephew of her deceased husband. Amongst the immoveable property so conveyed there were three items—(1) Mauza Mundia Misir, Patti Gundhia (2), Gungipur, and (3) sir land at Jalalpur. In respect of these items the deed said :—"I shall keep the villages and sir lands which have been exempted hereunder, for my lifetime without the power of alienation by mortgage, sale and gift; and after me, the donee shall also be the owner of the said exempted property." As regards the validity of this gift two questions arose for decision : (1) The legal effect of the reservation of the three items of property by the donor for her own use during her lifetime and (2) the legal effect of the non-delivery of actual possession of the reserved property by the donor to the donee. At this stage I am not concerned with the second question. On the first question, their Lordships' decision was pronounced in the following words :—

"The reservation of the usufruct did not by itself make the gift of the property now in question void under Muhammadan Law. So far as that is concerned there is the authority of the Board in Nawab Umjad Ally Khan v. Mohumdee Begam (1) for that statement as to Muhammadan Law, although the parties in that case were Shias and not Sunnis." Now so far as the language of the document is concerned there can be no doubt that the technical expression 'I make a gift' was used with reference to the entire subject-matter of the gift including the three items and in describing the exception the donor used words indicating the corpus and not the usufruct of the excepted property: "with the exception of the villages and sir lands; I shall keep the villages and sir lands...for my life time." It must be taken, therefore, that in construing the deed of gift as a whole their Lordships reached to the conclusion that by the use of the expressions quoted above the intention of the donor was to reserve the usufruct for her own use during her lifetime. If such a reservation in favour of the donor is valid in law, as it must be held to be on the authority of the two decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council, I see no reason for holding that a similar reservation of a creation of an interest having the same effect in favour of the donee is invalid.

These are all the decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council bearing on the point under consideration that I am aware of or were cited at the Bar. From them I venture to deduce the following propositions relevant to the case before me :—

1. Proof of the intention to create a life estate is permissible.

2 Giving an interest in a certain property is different from and is not the same thing as the gift of the corpus.

3. Such an interest may be supported on the basis of a trust resulting from an agreement for valuable consideration.

4. Where the manifest intention of the donor is to give the corpus of and the absolute interest in the property gifted to one person and such gift is accompanied with a reservation of a limited estate in the same property in favour of another, both the gift and the reservation are valid.

5. No rule of the Muhammadan Law is propounded to the effect that where the donor in a transaction of a simple gift merely creates a life interest in the property gifted in the donee and reserves the reversion to his heirs-at-law the donee of the interest takes the absolute estate.

I now proceed to consider the application of the propositions stated above to the facts of the case before me.

Proposition No. 1.—There is no doubt as to the intention of the donor in so far as the gift to Musammat Waziran is concerned. His intention was to give her only a life and not an absolute interest in the property in suit. This has already been shown in that part of this judgment in which I have recorded my opinion on the question of the construction of the deed of gift of the 17th January 1905.

Proposition No. 2.—Having ascertained the intention to give only a life interest to Musammat Waziran and bearing in mind the provision relating to the reversion it follows that references in the deed of gift to "the property" must be construed to apply to the life interest in that property so far as the gift to Musammat Waziran is concerned.

Proposition No. 3.—The facts relevant to the applicability of the proposition now under consideration are these. The dispositions made by Ghulam Murtaza Khan in favour of his wife, Musammat Waziran, and his heirs-at-law by his Will dated the 18th January 1894 were practically the same as those which were subsequently made by the deed of gift of the 17th January 1905. If this bequest had stood alone as the last act of Ghulam Murtaza Khan in respect of his property there could be no doubt in law that it would have failed in its entirety, being in favour of the heirs. The deed of gift clearly anticipates this eventuality and that indeed is the sole motive of making the gift. To avoid any possible difficulty in the matter of giving complete effect to his intentions Ghulam Murtaza Khan secures the consent of Musammat Waziran and his heirs Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan to the terms of the gift. This consent is clearly stated in the deed itself, "and the donee and my aforesaid heirs have accordingly agreed and consented to this." The heirs Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan also signed the deed of gift in token of their consent and when after the death of Ghulam Murtaza Khan, Musammat Waziran went to the Court of Revenue with a prayer for mutation of names in her favour she stood by the deed of gift and did not claim absolute interest in the property to herself. The result is that in consideration of the gift of life interest in the entire property in her favour Musammat Waziran agreed to respect the reversion in favour of the heirs of Ghulam Murtaza Khan. Therefore, even if she be held to have taken the property in its entirety as a legal owner she was merely a trustee for the beneficial interest of the reversioners.

Apart from trust, the transaction may be looked at from another point of view. It is not a simple gift but a contract for consideration which has moved from both sides as shown above. Besides under s. 25 (1) of the Indian Contract Act "natural love and affection" between the parties is enough to support it. It is admittedly not forbidden by the general law of the land and it is not forbidden by the Muhammadan Law of gift because it is not a gift. This view is covered by the principle of the decision of the Privy Council in Solehman Qadir v. Salimullah Bahadur (15).

It is said that the Privy Council judgment in Sadik Husain Khan v. Hashim Ali Khan (16) is opposed to this view. I do not think so. It was not a case of a contract for consideration as the present transaction may be construed to be but one of simple gift (which of course means gift without consideration) by means of an express trust. It was contended for the respondents that the gift being through the medium of a trust and in consideration of the release by the settlor's wife of her claim for dower no delivery of possession was necessary. Their Lordships rejected this contention and held that it was nothing but a transaction of gift pure and simple and failed for want of possession in the trustees.

Proposition No. 4.—In applying this proposition we have again to bear in mind the all-dominating intention of the donor to give no more than a life interest to Musammat Waziran and an absolute ownership either by way of gift or by way of maintaining the reversion at law to Ashraf Khan and Basharat Khan in the gifted property. This intention must be given effect to, so far as possible, and with a view to give effect to this the deed of gift may be construed as a reservation of the usufruct of the property in favour of Musammat Waziran. I do not for a moment think that the reason for the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the first and the last of the cases mentioned above as to the validity of reservation of the usufruct rests on the fact that the reservation in both those cases was in favour of the donor himself. It would appear that in this aspect of the case the question reduces itself into one of mere form or words. If the deed of gift had assumed the form of a transfer of the absolute estate in the gifted property in favour of the heirs and that transfer had been subjected to a life interest in the same property in favour of Musammat Waziran the gift would have been entirely covered by the decision in the case of Mohamad Abdul Ghani v. Fakhr Jahan Begam (2) But though the form of the present deed of gift is different, the substance is manifestly the same.

Assuming that my application of proposition No. 4 to the present case is defective I have no hesitation in expressing my opinion that the view which I take of this case is merely a logical extension of the principle involved in that proposition. To give effect to the clear intention of the donor is certainly conducive to substantial justice, and to confer an absolute estate instead of a life interest, which the donor did not wish to do, is not. To negative the clear dictates of justice "and to find consolation in the fact that Lord Halsbury once said that law was not a logical science," —per Lord Dunedan in the case of Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiappa Gounden (17) is a course which I am not prepared to adopt unless compelled to do so by any express rule of law. Indeed law will cease to be a progressive science if logical deductions are absolutely barred. What difference can there be in principle between a case where a man gives, for instance, half of his property to another and reserves the other half for his heirs to inherit and the case like the present one. A life interest in a property is as much different from, and as much a particle of, the whole as any mathematical fraction.

Proposition No. 5.—This leaves me free to decide the point according to my own judgment. The question which I now propose to answer is—

Is there any substantive rule of the Muhammadan Law that when a donor intends to give no more than a limited interest to his donee in a certain property the donee in spite of the donor's intention takes an absolute estate in that property? Before entering into an examination of the texts of the Muhammadan Law I desire to make some preliminary observations.

In the first place, the contention that a life interest is unknown to Muhammadan Law is in my opinion not well-founded. That it is fully recognised by the Shia Muhammadan Law is admitted. In this connection the exhaustive judgment, if I may respectfully say so, of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Banoo Begam v. Mir Abed Ali (7) may be read with advantage. It is equally well recognised by the Shafei school—see Minha-Et-Talibin, by Nawawi, translated into English by E. G. Howard, page 234. In the Hanafi Muhammadan Law as well as in the laws of all other sects life interest is clearly permitted in cases of waqfs. The legal ownership in an endowed property vests in the Almighty and the beneficiaries either conjointly or successively are merely entitled to the use of that property for their lives, the ultimate beneficiaries being always the poor. Next we have the transaction of areeat common, as waqf, to all the schools of the Muhammadan Law. Under areeat distinction between the use of a thing and the actual thing itself is recognised and both are 'property'. "The use of a thing moreover is capable of being property in the same manner as the actual thing itself."—Hamilton's Hedaya, Vol. III, Book XXIX, heading 'Definition of Areeat'. The distinction should not be lost sight of when the rules relating to simple gifts are considered. At this place I need only say that those rules are limited to a gift of عين (ain), that is the corpus of it. But, as my careful study of them has convinced me they do not forbid or declare the invalidity of a gift of an interest in the corpus. To this matter I will revert later. No authority need be cited that an areeat or to use the technical expression "an investiture with the use of a thing without a return" may be made for a limited period and that period may be the lifetime of the mustayir, that is the donee of areeat. As stated in the Hedaya itself the word "areeat" is derived from areea which signifies a grant. It would seem to follow that where in a grant of property without consideration the grantee's interest is a limited one and in making the grant the grantor uses language which clearly excludes the intention of granting complete dominium the transaction is essentially one of areeat. Must we then wipe off the essense of the grant and substitute a new grant in its place of the full ownership simply because a grantor may use the word 'gift' instead of the word 'areeat'. I am far from giving my answer to this question in the affirmative. Then we have the transactions of widda which may properly be described as cases of trust. Here again a limited interest in the subject-matter of the trust is well recognised. Lastly, the subject most akin to gifts is the case of a testamentary disposition by a Muhammadan. By such a disposition he can create a limited estate in the thing bequeathed and retain the dominium of the thing for his heirs. The matter is fully dealt with in Ch. V of Book III of Vol. IV of the Hedaya. Therein is also recognised the distinction between the bequest of a thing to one and the usufruct of it to another.

The second observation which I desire to make is that in the Chapters relating to gifts in the books of the Muhammadan Law, for instance I need only mention the Hedaya, the Fatwa-i-Alamgiri and the Durrul Mukhtar, any incorporeal hereditament or an 'interest' in a corporeal property finds no place whatsoever and the only conception of property in relation to the subject-matter of a gift is the physical entity. In the event of the complete absence of any such thing as we understand by the term res incorporales the whole law relating to gifts naturally deals with no other thing than the physical thing. But if the law of the Muhammadans or of any other class of people must keep pace with progress of society and the multifarious relations arising therefrom, interests in property apart from the property itself must be recognised. Are we compelled to hold that if a Musalman of to-day desires to carve by way of gift only a particular estate out of his property and retain the rest of it for himself or his heirs he cannot do so and if he does, the gift vests the entire estate into the donee in spite of the intentions of both to the contrary? I have come to the conclusion that the rules of the Muhammadan Law do not compel me to so hold. The question of the gift of a 'right in property' in relation to possession of the subject-matter of the gift has been considered in many cases by the High Courts in India. Reference may be made to the following two cases:—Mullick Abdool Guffoor v. Muleka (18), in which the judgment of the Court was delivered by Sir Charles Garth, C. J., and particularly to his remarks at page 1125* of the report, and Anwari Begam v. Nizamuddin Shah (19).

In the Hanafi Muhammadan Law of gift, the ultimate foundation of the entire law rests on the Prophet's saying تهادوا وتحابوا (Hedaya) which literally means 'presents for the increase of affection.'

Gift is defined in Fatawa-i-Alamgiri as follows:—

"Law defines hiba as the act of making owner of the substance عين without return." Baillie gives the translation of the definition in the following words: "Gift, as it is defined in law, is the conferring of a right of property in something specific, without an exchange." Durrul Mukhtar's definition is in the following words:—

تمليك العين مجانا اى بلاعوض

In these definitions the word عين (ain) is the important word. The Prophet's saying and the definition quoted above make it abundantly clear that the subject-matter of a gift as conceived by the Muhammadan Law is the corporeal thing alone. Once this fundamental notion is grasped every thing else in the Muhammadan Law of gifts is perfectly intelligible.

The reasoning of the Muhammadan lawyers is as follows:—As gift conveys the "specific thing" to the donee the condition that he shall be the owner of the thing gifted only during his life time is repugnant and must, therefore, fail. This is in consonance with every system of civilised jurisprudence. The second ground upon which in the books of the Muhammadan Law condition as to life interest is held to be of no effect is the interpretation which the Muhammadan lawyers place on the language used by the donor in making the gift. Naturally that interpretation falls to be founded on the essentials of the act of making a valid gift, one of such essentials being the subject-matter of the gift. It will be seen from what has just been said that the Muhammadan Law does not create a gift which the donor himself never intended to create. They always ascertain the true intention of the donor, of course, by the aid of the rules of interpretation applicable to the subject of the gift.

The highest, though in my opinion only apparent, support for the plaintiff's contention is to be found in the following passage of the Hedaya:—

"An amree, or life-grant, is lawful to the grantee during his life, and descends to his heirs, because of the tradition before quoted. Besides, the meaning of amree is a gift of a house (for example) during the life of the donee, on condition of its being returned upon his death. The conveyance of the house, therefore, is valid without any return: and the condition annexed is null because the Prophet has sanctioned the gift, in this instance, and annulled the condition as before mentioned. An amree moreover, is nothing but a gift and a condition; and the condition is invalid; but a gift is not rendered null by involving an invalid condition, as has been already demonstrated." Another passage in the same book relevant to the discussion is as follows: "If a person make a gift of his female slave to another on condition that he restore her to him, or that he emancipate her, or create her an amwalid, or, if a person make a gift of a house to another, on condition that the donee give back a part of it, or, if a person make a gift of his house in charity to another, on condition that the receiver of the charity give him something in exchange for part of the house, such gift or charity is valid but the condition annexed is invalid, because it is contrary to the spirit or intendment of the contract; and neither gifts nor charities are affected by being accompanied with an invalid condition, because the Prophet approved of amree (gifts for life) but held the condition annexed to them by the grantor to be void."—Hamilton's Hedaya, Book XXXI, Vol. III. The text of the Hedaya for the underlined portion quoted above is as follows:—

فالهبة جائزة و الشرط باطل لأن هذه الشروط تخالف مقتضي العقد-

These quotations bring out in full relief the first line of reasoning adopted by the Muhammadan lawyers as given by me just now. In the second quotation emphasis must be laid on the works indicative of the reason by which the view is supported; "because it is contrary to the spirit or intendment of the contract." I conclude from these quotations that the argument that where the intention of the donor is to give merely an interest in and not the whole of his property the gift must be construed to convey the whole is erroneous. I have not the least doubt in my mind as to the true import of these quotations. They only deal with cases of transfer of ownership in the physical property and with conditions in derogation of that ownership. The real matter, therefore, which arises for consideration in each particular case is the determination, first, of the thing in which the ownership is transferred and, secondly, whether there is any condition derogatory to that ownership. If there is, it must be annulled. Now the thing transferred in the present case by Ghulam Murtaza Khan in favour of his wife, Musammat Waziran, is the ownership of the life estate in and not of the corpus of the property. There is no case before us of any condition being attached to that ownership. Musammat Waziran is dead and the ownership of her life estate which was gifted to her by her husband has come to an end.

I shall now quote that portion of Baillie's Translation of Fatawa-i-Alamgiri which is most relevant to the matter under consideration. This is to be found at page 517 of the book:—

"The words by which gift is effected are of three kinds; first, those which are fitted or appropriated to the purpose, as 'I have given this thing to thee,' 'I have made it to thee,' or 'This is to thee;' second, those in which the meaning is veiled under an allusion, but are known to signify gift, as 'thy garment is this piece of cloth' or (1) 'I have invested thee with this mansion for thy age,' which would be a gift. So also if he had said (2) 'This mansion is to thee omree (for thy age—omr) or hyatee (for thy life—hyat) and when thou art 'dead it reverts to me,' in which case the gift is lawful, and the condition void; third, words which bear equally the construction for gift and of areeat or commodate loan, as 'I have given thee this food for food,' an expression which, if he should say 'Take possession of it,' would be a gift, but without words might be either a gift or commodate loan. And if one should say, 'I have mounted thee on this beast,' it would be a loan, unless gift were intended. The principle in cases of this kind is that when a word is employed which has reference to the body of the thing, it is a gift and when a word is employed which has reference to the profits of the thing, it is a loan; and when the word may be understood in either sense; the meaning is to be determined by intention." The italics are mine. I also quote here the Arabic text of the second part of the quotation:—

وأما الثاني فنقوله كسوتك هذا الثوب (١) اعمرتك هذه الدار فهو هبة كذا لو قال (٢) هذه الدار لك

rules.' Their Lordships concur in the conclusion arrived at below, that it would be inconsistent with that decision to apply a doctrine, which in its origin applied to very different subjects of property, to shares in companies and freehold property in a great commercial town. The argument of the appellant was not that the law of mushaa did in fact embrace (in the sense of having been applied to) such property, but that, if the same aspect of life and things were logically applied, it involved the invalidity of the gifts in dispute. But this is not the true criterion."

At the conclusion of this part of my judgment I must also mention the cases decided by the High Courts in India to which our attention was drawn by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff. They are few in number.

Nizamudin Gulam v. Abdul Gafur (24). This perhaps is the strongest case in favour of the plaintiff's contention. The decree of the High Court was confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Abdul Gafur v. Nizamuddin (14), to which reference has already been made. The grounds of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council are clearly not the same as of the learned Judges of the High Court. The deed in question in that case was a wakfnama.

The High Court and their Lordships of the Privy Council both decided that the settlement failed. But before the Privy Council it was also sought to be supported as a Will. The first question in that connection was one of construction and their Lordships of the Privy Council came to the conclusion, as already noticed, that there was no grant of a life estate but of the fee simple with restriction on the power of alienation which was void. The learned Judges of the High Court, however, had said:—"The creation of any life estate at all appears quite inconsistent with the Muhammadan Law," and "as a general rule, the donee in such a case would take an absolute estate." They quoted a passage from Baillie and another from the Hedaya. I am unable to regard this expression of opinion as a considered decision of the point which could only arise in the event of the construction of the deed of settlement being settled in favour of the propounders of it but it was not so settled as the decision of the Privy Council shows. As regards the quotations from Baillie and the Hedaya I have already considered them at some length.

Mumtaz-un-Nissa v. Tufail Ahmed (25). The transaction in that case was considered to be an areeat and not gift. There was no deed. In delivering their judgment the learned Judges said:—"No doubt, under the Muhammadan Law, the rule is that if it is clear that the intention of the donor was to give to the donee the entire subject-matter of the gift, any subsequent condition derogating from or limiting the extent of the right of the donee would be null and void." In the case before us I have held that the subject-matter of the gift was a limited interest only.

Mahomed Shah v. Official Trustee of Bengal (26). The head-note gives complete idea of the decision given by Mr. Justice Stephen on the Original Side of the Court and it is as follows:—"A deed creating a life interest with remainder over is void under the Muhammadan Law. Similarly a gift to unborn person is void." No such argument is raised before us by any party in respect of the deed of gift of the 17th January 1905.

These are the only cases in the authorized reports and I do not wish to detain myself any longer on this subject by referring to two or three cases more which have not appeared in any such report.

On the above grounds I hold that Musammat Waziran acquired merely a life interest in the property in dispute under the deed of the 17th January 1905. It follows that the plaintiff who claims the right of inheritance to the estate of Musammat Waziran has no title to this property.

Now I pass on to the only question of fact in dispute between the parties whether the gift of the 17th January 1905, in favour of Musammat Waziran was followed by delivery of possession or not. On this point of fact I am in agreement with the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge and hold that in the circumstances of this case the question must be decided in favour of the plaintiff. The decision of this matter should be approached in the light of the particular circumstances of the case. Such circumstances are as below:—

1. The object of the gift was to accelerate the operation of the previous Will,

(24) 13 B. 264; 13 Ind. Jur. 342; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 175.

(25) 28 A. 264; A. W. N. (1905) 269.

(26) 2 Ind. Cas. 292; 36 C. 431.

2. The donor stood in the relation of husband to the donee.

3. The donee was a pardanshin lady.

4. According to my finding the subject-matter of the gift in her favour was an interest in the property and not the corpus of it.

5. The husband and the wife lived amicably together so long as the former was alive.

6. In the deed of gift the donor made the following declaration: "I have put the lady donee in possession of the property gifted and my wife, Musammat Waziran, from to-day became owner and possessor of the aforesaid property in accordance with the terms of this deed."

If there were nothing else on this record there could be no two opinions on the materials stated above that the lady did acquire such possession as the nature of the property gifted to her was capable of. Against this conclusion, however, two points were urged on behalf of the defendants—

(1) That there was no mutation of names in the life time of the donor; and

(2) That the plaintiff produced oral evidence to show that she employed her own servants for the collection of rents, that Ghulam Murtaza Khan ceased to collect them and that that evidence is unreliable.

As to the first point, I attach no importance to it. The lady being a pardanashin woman could only look up to her husband for taking steps for the entries to be made in the Revenue Register and Ghulam Murtaza Khan might well have refrained from taking those steps for the reason that the gift in favour of Musammat Waziran was not in respect of the entire proprietary interest, and so far as the possession of the interest given was concerned he had already made a sufficient declaration in relation thereto in the deed of gift. Besides, Ghulam Murtaza Khan died almost a year after the gift and within that interval instalments of rents payable by tenants fell due hardly twice. Within less than a fortnight of the death of her husband Musammat Waziran applied for mutation of names in her favour on the basis of the deed of gift and said that she was in possession of the "assets of the deceased" under the gift (Ex. A-12). Ashraf Khan, the chief defendant in the case, acquiesced in the statement made by the lady and withdrew his opposition. Mutation was accordingly ordered to be made. After the death of Musammat Waziran, Ashraf Khan asked for the entry of his and Basharat Khan's name in place of Musammat Waziran's, and admitted that she had held the property under the gift (Ex. 4). In these circumstances it does not lie in the mouth of the defendants to say that there was no possession and no mutation on the basis of the gift. "Mutation of names in the Collector's office was not actually necessary to complete a transfer of possession under the deed of gift"—Per Sir Barnes Peacock in the case of Muhammad Mumataz Ahmad v. Zubaida Jan (3).

On the second point, the only result of producing unacceptable evidence can be this that the fact intended to be proved by the evidence remains unproved. The plaintiff cannot be put in a worse position than what he would have been in if he had produced no evidence at all. In the circumstances of the case the reasonable inference seems to be that Ghulam Murtaza Khan did collect rents so long as he lived. But after the execution of the deed of gift and the unequivocal declaration made in it and the position in which he stood to the donee his possession must be taken to have been that of an agent in the management of the property. That Ghulam Murtaza Khan had bona fide intention of divesting himself in presenti of the ownership of the subject-matter of the gift is not disputed, in other words it is not the case of either party that the transaction was a fictitious one. The reason of the rule of the change of possession will be fully satisfied where in the circumstances of a particular case such a change may only be constructive.

The subsequent management of the property by Ghulam Murtaza Khan must be presumed in this case to have been on behalf of his pardanashin wife—see the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ameeroonnissa Khatton v. Abdoonnissa Khattoon (21) already referred to in another connection. In the case of Muhammad Mumtaz Ahmad

v. Zubaida Jan (3) also mentioned before, their Lordships of the Privy Council said:—"The lady (donor) had merely proprietary, not actual, possession of the greater portion of the property, that is to say, she was merely in receipt of the rents and profits. In the deed of gift she declared (an admission by which Usman as her heir and all persons claiming through him were bound) that she had made the donee possessor of all properties given by the deed; that she had abandoned all connection with them; and the donee was to have complete control of every kind in respect thereof. Ahmad Hussain, the daughter's husband, was the general manager of both mother and daughter, and would doubtless take care that the deed of gift should be carried into effect. Their Lordships have no doubt that sufficient possession was taken on behalf of the daughter to render the gift effectual." In the case of Muhammad Baksh Khan v. Hussaini Bibi (4) also already referred to, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council, Lord Macnaghten said: "Gift was attended with utmost publicity, the hibbanama itself authorises the donee to take possession, and it appears that in fact they did take possession." The facts of the last mentioned case show that possession had been taken by the donees subsequently. The observations quoted above are a fortiori of the present case. On these grounds I uphold the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of possession.

The only matter which remains for me to decide is the question of the alleged family settlement. I am of opinion that the evidence relied upon in support of such a settlement falls far short of establishing it. There is no trace of a bona fide dispute at any stage. At the time of the making of the Will Ghulam Murtaza Khan was an absolute owner of this property.

His heirs had not a shadow of claim in respect of it nor the consent of the heir as regards his testmentary powers was of any avail to him, such consent being effective only when it is given after the death of the testator under the Hanafi Muhammadan Law. The situation was exactly the same at the time when Ghulam Murtaza Khan made the gift of the 17th January 1905. Apart from the agreement between him and his wife as regards the terms of the gift, his heir-at-law had no interest either in the subject-matter of the gift or in the making of it. Finally when we come to the event which occurred after the death of Ghulam Murtaza Khan they also furnish no basis for any inference in favour of the alleged family settlement. Musammat Waziran applied for mutation of names in her favour, so did the reversioners. When Musammat Waziran stated that she was in possession in virtue of the gift and asked for mutation in terms of it the reversioners withdrew their application. The unilateral act on the part of the reversioners proved no settlement. I, therefore, agree with the contention of the learned Counsel for the plaintiff that the alleged family settlement has no foundation whatsoever in fact.

The result of my finding on the first point is that the plaintiff's Appeal No. 44 of 1923, fails and that of defendants No. 51 of 1923 succeeds. I would, therefore, dismiss the former and allowing the latter dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout except so far as plots Nos. 397 and 618 situate in village Jamauli, Paragana Mawai, are concerned. The lower Court gave a decree in respect of these plots to the plaintiff and they are not the subject-matter of the appeal by the defendants. I would, therefore, direct that in the decree which shall now be prepared those plots shall be shown as having been decreed to the plaintiff but without costs.

By the Court.—For the reasons given in our separate judgments, we dismiss the plaintiff's Appeal No. 44 of 1923, and, allowing the defendants' Appeal No. 51 of 1923, dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout except in respect of plots Nos. 397 and 619 situate in village Jamauli, Pargana Mawai, which shall be shown as having been decreed to the plaintiff, but without costs, in the decree to be prepared in this Court.

Plaintiff's appeal dismissed;
and
Defendants' appeal accepted.

RINDABAI LALITAPRASAD—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Hindu Law—Adoption—Brahmins—Adoptive father and son belonging to different gotras—Datta Homam, performance of, whether necessary.

Under the Hindu Law the ceremony of datta homam is essential to validate an adoption amongst Brahmins unless the adoptive father and son belong to the same gotra. [p. 473, col. 1.]

Case-law referred to.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dharwar, in Suit No. 137 of 1919.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to obtain a declaration that the first defendant was not the legally adopted son of the plaintiff's husband. The plaintiff disputed the factum of the adoption. That issue was found in the affirmative, but on the issue whether the adoption was valid, the Court held that the adoption was not valid, though in fact it had been made, because the adoptive father and the adopted son were of different gotra. Consequently the datta homam was essential to validate the adoption, and in this case it is not disputed that the datta homam had not been performed. If we were of opinion that the adoption was valid, it would have been necessary to consider the authorities at some length. But we agree with the judgment in the Court below that in this particular case the datta homam was necessary.

The authorities are considered in the latest Edition of Mayne on Hindu Law at pages 205-208, and at the bottom of page 207 the conclusion is as follows: "So far as it is possible to reconcile these conflicting decisions, they seem to point to the conclusion that, among the twice-born classes, the datta homam is necessary, unless the adopted boy is of the same gotra as his adopter, or unless a usage to the contrary can be established." In Shoshinath Ghose v. Krishnasunderi Dasi (1), their Lordships observed:—

"The mode of giving and taking a child in adoption continues to stand on Hindu Law and Hindu usage, and it is perfectly clear that amongst the twice-born classes there could be no such adoption by deed, because certain religious ceremonies, the datta homam in particular, are in their case requisite."

The question in issue in that appeal was whether there could be in the case of sudras such a giving and taking as was necessary to satisfy the law, by mere deed, without an actual delivery of the child by the father. Still this dictum of their Lordships may be taken as stating what their Lordships considered at that time was necessary to validate an adoption amongst the twice-born classes.

In this Presidency at any rate the only cases in which an adoption has been recognized as valid without the datta homam being performed have been those in which the adoptive father and the adopted son belonged to the same gotra. All the authorities on this subject are discussed in Valubai v. Govind (2) and in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shri Shriniwas Pandit (3), their Lordships in considering the same question gave their approval to the judgment of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in that case. On a review of the arguments in that judgment it is obvious that the learned Chief Justice considered that it was only because there was identity of gotra that the datta homam could be dispensed with. It must be noted, however, that in referring to the decision of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Govindayyar v. Dorasami (4), their Lordships in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shri Shriniwas Pandit (3) considered that decision as being of value as containing a careful study of the authorities and affirming that the ceremony of datta homam was not essential to a valid adoption amongst Brahmins in Southern India. respect it would seem difficult to find from the judgment of the Full Bench that it was decided that the datta homam was not essential to any adoption amongst Brahmins. The head-note is as follows:—

"The ceremony of datta homam is not essential to a valid adoption among Brahmins in Southern India, when the adoptive father and son belong to the same gotra."

Their Lordships considered whether they should depart from the decision in Singamma v. Vinjamuri Venkatacharlu (5). They pointed out that some doubt had been thrown upon that case by the observation of the Judicial Committee in Shoshinath Ghose v. Krishnasunderi Dasi (1), that datta homam was requisite in the case of Brahmins and referred to the case of Venkata v. Subhadra (6) which was to the same effect. In Singamma v. Vinjamuri Venkatacharlu (5), the point was not argued on both sides and Jagannatha, who was cited in the case, was no authority in Southern India. Their Lordships concluded that the original texts conveyed the impression that datta homam might probably be an essential part of a valid adoption as a general rule and that in a proper case there was sufficient ground for directing an inquiry as to usage. Although the general rule might be as indicated above there was reason to think that there were exceptions to it. There was a text of Manu to the effect that if, among several brothers, one has a son, that son was the son of all. To this extent, that datta homam was not essential when the adoptive father and son were of the same gotra, they thought they might safely adhere to the decision in Singamma v. Vinjamuri Venakatacharlu (5).

The rule, therefore, may be stated in this form. The ceremony of datta homam is essential to validate an adoption amongst Brahmins unless the adoptive father and son belong to the same gotra. Apart from all the considerations there is this justification for it, that when it is sought to introduce a stranger into a family it is desirable that all the religious ceremonies should be performed so as to ensure the requisite publicity for the adoption. It may be said that there is a tendency in these days towards dispensing with religious ceremonies, but that is no reason why we should seek in this case to depart from what must be recognized as an established rule of Hindu Law. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was instituted on the 11th March, 1920 by the plaintiffs who are the appellants in this appeal claiming certain lands in Mouza Indarpur Kochaisa against the defendant No. 1 who is the superior landlord of the interest in suit.

The land in suit originally belonged to one Deochand Singh who died in or about the year 1882. Deochand Singh had two sons Prabhu and Bigan, the former being married to Musammat Deomurat Kuer and the latter to Musammat Marno Kuar. Both these sons, it is now found, predeceased their father and upon the death of Deochand in 1882 some question appears to have arisen as to the possession of this property. The two widows of Prabhu and Bigan, who had survived their husbands, were also alive at the death of Deochand. Upon that event the property would, in the ordinary course, go to Deochand's heirs and the widows would not be entitled to any interest therein because their husbands had predeceased Deochand. The only right which they would have in the property, if any, would be the ordinary Hindu widow's right to maintenance. One thing is quite clear in this case and that is that the widows were put in possession of the property and remained in possession for a number of years and one of the questions, which was in issue at the trial of this case, was whether the property which was acquired by the two widows in 1882 was acquired by them as their stridhan or, as the plaintiffs alleged, whether they were merely allowed to remain in possession of the property during their joint lives by way of maintenance. I may add that the property is a very small one being valued in the plaint at something under Rs. 1,000. The heirs of Deochand were somewhat distant collateral relations and presumably had other property of their own. They were no longer joint with him. There is, therefore, nothing surprising in the fact that these two ladies should have been allowed to remain in possession of the whole of the property left by their father-in-law by way of maintenance after his death. That was the case of the plaintiffs. If that case is made out then there can be no doubt that the plaintiffs ought to succeed in this suit. It is necessary to add what happened subsequently. Musammat Marno Kuar, the widow of Bigan predeceased her sister-in-law Musammat Deomurat Kuar. Deomurat Kuar sometime before the year 1907 after the death of Marno Kuar appears to have parted with her interest whatever it may have been in this property to the landlord the present defendant. Subsequently about the year 1907 there was some further question as between the heirs of Deochand and a sister-in-law of Deomurat on the one hand and the landlord, the present defendant on the other and an arrangement was entered into whereby the landlord was allowed to remain in possession. He appears to have acquired the property from Deomurat because she was not able to pay her rent. It does not appear that an actual suit was brought nor was any rent decree passed. However that may be he got possession of the property. Now the question which arises in this appeal depends upon the determination of the question whether Deomurat Kuar was in possession of the property merely by way of maintenance or whether she was in possession of the property by adverse possession as against the heirs of her father-in-law. If she acquired adverse possession after her father-in-law's death then no doubt the property would become her stridhan. The authority for that proposition is to be found in the decision of Kashi Ram v. Amri (1). The facts of that case were very similar to the present and it was held there relying upon a decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Indar Bahadur Singh v. Ranee Janki Koer (2) that property acquired by a Hindu lady by adverse possession becomes her separate stridhan property. As a general proposition that, however, required some limitation for if the property is acquired by a Hindu widow claiming as the widow of her deceased husband then, no doubt, according to the ruling of their Lordships in the case of Lajwanti v. Safa Chand (3), the property becomes an accretion to her late husband's estate and on her death would pass not to her heirs but to the heirs of her deceased husband. Although in the present case there was no specific finding that these two widows had come into the property in lieu of maintenance with the consent of the heirs of Deochand nevertheless that was the case put forward by the plaintiffs in their plaint. As against that the case put forward by the defendant was that this property had been acquired by them as stridhan and, of course, it would follow that if the property were in fact their stridhan any alienation of that property to the landlord would be binding not only against the heirs of Deochand who would have no right to it but against the whole world. On the other hand if the land in suit were merely the property of the widows given to them for their lifetime by way of maintenance then the only interest they had in it and certainly the only interest which they could alienate would be their interest for life. The result would, therefore, be in the event of this being their life-interest only that the alienation made to the landlord, the present defendant, would enure to his benefit only during the lifetime of the widows or the survivor of them.

Although as I have just stated there was no specific finding that the property was granted to the widows by way of maintenance still there was an issue raised whether the property was stridhan or not, and it was found by the Trial Court and the finding was upheld by the First Appellate Court that this property was not the stridhan of the widows. It seems to me, therefore, to follow upon that finding that the only interest which the widows could have was the interest asserted by the plaintiffs, namely, that of maintenance only. Although this interest was alienated still that alienation would not be binding upon the heirs of Deochand who would acquire a vested right in the property after the death of the widows and the question, therefore, which becomes important is whether the widows or the survivor of them died within 12 years of the present suit. If Deomurat who was the surviving widow died more than 12 years before the suit then there can be no doubt that the defendant would have acquired adverse possession against the plaintiffs. It is found as a fact, however, in the case that she died within 12 years of the suit and, therefore, in my opinion, the suit is not time-barred.

It is argued by the learned Government Pleader on behalf of the respondents that there was nothing really to show on the evidence in this case whether the widows had acquired this property by virtue of their right to maintenance or whether they had acquired it by adverse possession, that is to say, by some title asserted by them which had not been interfered with by the person entitled to inherit the property. But it is clear that if they were asserting an adverse title other than a title as widows of their deceased husbands they would be asserting a title which after 12 years would give them a right to hold property as part of their stridhan, but in the face of the finding of the lower Appellate Court that this was not their stridhan, it seems to me that we are bound to come to the conclusion that the only manner in which they would have acquired the property was as maintenance. In this state of affairs it seems to me that the appeal must succeed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set side and a decree will be entered in favour of the appellants declaring their title to the property and their right to recover possession. The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs throughout.

Foster, J.—I agree.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 42, 45—Suit to declare electoral rolls illegal and for injunction restraining election, nature of—Writ of mandamus*—District Judge, jurisdiction of.*

A District Judge has no jurisdiction to make any order which would be in the nature of a mandamus in a suit under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act. That jurisdiction has been given only to the High Courts mentioned in the section and it can only be exercised within the local limits of their Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction. [p. 476, col. 2; p. 477, col. 1]

Plaintiff filed a suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council and the Collector of a District praying for a declaration that the preparation and publication of the lists for voters for a certain District Board constituency was illegal, void and ultra vires and that no valid election to the District Board could be held under those lists; he also prayed for an injunction restraining the Collector himself or by his subordinates from holding any elections to the District Board under the alleged illegal lists:

Held, that the suit fell within the purview of s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act and that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to grant an interim injunction in the terms prayed for by the plaintiff. [p. 476, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Surat, in Suit. No. 57 of 1924.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kanga, (with him Mr. S. S. Patkar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit against the Secretary of State for India in Council and the Collector of Surat asking for the following reliefs:—

(1) That it may be declared that the preparation and publication of the lists for voters for all general and Muhammadan constituencies of the District Local Board of Surat was illegal, void, ultra vires, and no valid election of the members of the District Local Board of Surat for the term commencing on and from the 1st day of January 1925 could take place under the said lists.

(2) For an injunction restraining the Collector of Surat from himself or by his subordinates holding elections of members of the District Local Board of Surat for the term commencing on and from the 1st January 1925 under the alleged illegal lists.

He then applied to the District Judge for an interim injunction.

After hearing arguments the Judge, while holding that he had no jurisdiction to grant the injunction, said:—

"Now the only effective relief which the plaintiff has prayed for is the injunction restraining the Collector from himself or through his subordinates holding elections of members of the District Local Board. What the plaintiff seeks is in substance a writ of mandamus or a writ in the nature of quo warranto. It is a high prerogative writ of a very extensive remedial nature. If this Court has power to grant the writ, then undoubtedly it would be proper to make this rule absolute by granting the plaintiff a temporary injunction in the terms prayed for. The writ such as is claimed by the plaintiff is principally used for public purposes and to compel the performance of public duties. This is not a suit under any specific provisions of any specific Act; nor is it a suit for the declaration of the plaintiff's right to vote and stand as a candidate for election which would be a suit of a civil nature [Subhapat Singh v. Abdul Gaffur (1)]; nor is it a suit to establish any legal character to which the plaintiff is entitled under the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The present suit is, in my opinion, a suit of the nature contemplated by the provisions of s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act."

This is a perfectly correct exposition of the substance of the plaintiff's claim and the Judge was clearly right in holding the suit was of the nature contemplated by s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act. The plaintiff's Pleader, however, in arguing that that decision was wrong seeks to lead the Court away from the real issues in the case by asking us to consider not the relief claimed by the plaintiff but the statement in his plaint with regard to his own personal right to be put on the list of voters, although no relief is claimed in respect of such right. We are not concerned in this case with the question whether the plaintiff is entitled to vote, whether his name has been placed on the wrong list of voters, or whether his name has been omitted from the list in which he says his name ought to be. He sues as a member of the public for a declaration that the Collector in the performance of his duties with regard to the District Local Board elections has not performed his duties in the proper way, has done that which he ought not to have done, or has left undone that which he ought to have done, and that in consequence of such illegal action the defendant should be restrained from holding the elections. Section 42 of the Specific Relief Act, therefore, has no application whatever to this case. The only section which can possibly apply is s. 45. There can be no doubt that the District Judge has no jurisdiction to make any order which would be in the nature of mandamus in a suit under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act. That jurisdiction has been given only to the High Courts mentioned in the section, and it can only be exercised within the local limits of their Ordinary Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 60, 63—Mortgage—Redemption—Covenant permitting mortgagee to continue in possession after redemption—Clog on equity of redemption—Grove, whether accession—Grove planted with consent of mortgagor—Mortgagor, whether bound to pay cost of planting grove.

Conditions which prevent or impede the right of the mortgagor to obtain possession of the mortgaged property even after redemption, if entered into at the time when the mortgage is made, must be taken to operate as a clog on the equity of redemption. On the other hand, a subsequent contract which modifies the right of redemption may not amount to such a clog. [p. 478, col. 1.]

A covenant contained in a mortgage-deed under which the mortgagee even after redemption is entitled to retain the property on payment of a fixed rent operates as a clog on the equity of redemption and is unenforceable in a Court of Equity. [ibid.]

A contract for the grant of a lease does not run with the land and cannot bind the representatives of the original parties thereto. [p. 478, col. 2.]

A grove as a grove is an accession to the mortgaged property within the meaning of s. 63 of the Transfer of Property Act and is incapable of separate possession and enjoyment. In order to be enjoyed as a grove a grove has to be maintained and the fruits and the produce of it are to be enjoyed. This cannot be done without detriment to the land on which the grove stands. Therefore, where a grove is planted by a mortgagee on mortgaged land with the consent of the mortgagor, the mortgagee is entitled to insist that at the time of redemption the mortgagor must take the land with the grove and pay to the mortgagee the cost of planting the grove. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 21st December 1922.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Sulaiman, J.—This is a plaintiffs' appeal arising out of a suit for redemption of a mortgage, dated the 18th of February 1878, executed by the predecessors-in-title of the plaintiffs in favour of the ancestors of the defendants. The mortgage was for a sum of Rs. 160 and was usufructuary. Among other conditions it provided that the mortgagees would be entitled to appropriate the profits in lieu of interest and that at the time of redemption there would be no accounting between the parties. There was a further provision that if in Jeth of any year the principal sum was paid then the property would be redeemed. There was a clause that even after redemption the mortgagees would not be ejected but they would hold on the land as lessees on payment of annas 8 per bigha annually. There was a further provision that the mortgagees would be entitled either to cultivate the land or to plant a grove on it. The mortgagees sometime after the mortgage, it is not quite clear when but at least more than 25 years before the suit, did plant a grove consisting of numerous fruit trees like mangoes, jamun, mahua, guava, etc., as well as a large number of shisham trees.

The plaintiffs claimed that they were entitled to actual possession on payment of the principal sum only. The defendants contested the claim and pleaded that even after redemption they were entitled to hold on payment of the fixed rent. They further claimed that if possession was to be given to the plaintiffs they must get full compensation for the grove which stands on the mortgaged land.

The Court of first instance was of opinion that in spite of the clause entitling the mortgagees to remain in possession as lessees, the plaintiffs were entitled to actual possession of the land but that they must pay compensation. It, however, assessed the compensation on the actual costs incurred which it fixed at Rs. 100. On appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the view of the First Court that the plaintiffs were entitled to actual possession of the land but thought that the compensation awarded was not fair. The value of the grove, in his opinion, ought to have been taken into account. He accordingly remanded the case and after the findings were returned he fixed the compensation at Rs. 1,800.

The plaintiffs have come up in appeal to this Court and the defendants have filed cross-objections. In fact both the parties had also filed an appeal and cross-objections in the lower Appellate Court.

On the appeal and the cross-objections two points arise for our determination. The first is whether the plaintiffs are entitled to actual possession of the leased land on redemption or whether the mortgagees should be allowed to retain possession as lessees even after the redemption. The second point is whether the plaintiffs are bound to pay any compensation and if so how much.

As to the first point it seems to me that the condition that even after redemption the mortgagees would hold on the land, was a clog on the equity of redemption. Conditions which prevent or impede the right of redemption even after redemption, if such conditions are entered into at the time when the mortgage is made, must be taken to be a clog on the equity of redemption. On the other hand a subsequent contract which modifies the right of redemption may not be such a clog. Although the principle underlying the rule of a clog on redemption is very old yet it still prevails and will not permit any device or contrivance, being part of the mortgage transaction or contemporaneous with it, to prevent or impede redemption. It follows that any covenant under which some right to retain possession is reserved to the mortgagee even after the property is redeemed is a clog on redemption as it both prevents and impedes redemption. That such a clause amounts to a clog on redemption is covered by authority. In the case of Mahomed Muse v. Jijibhai Bhagvan (1), which was followed by a learned Judge of this Court in the case of Sheo Singh v. Birbahadur Singh (2) and has been subsequently followed by the Madras High Court in the case of Pamurlapati Ankivedu v. Samurlapati Subbiah (3), a covenant under which the mortgagee even after redemption was entitled to retain the property on payment of a fixed rent was considered to be a clog on the equity of redemption and unenforceable in a Court of Equity. I am accordingly of opinion that the clause cannot bind the mortgagors' representatives and that, therefore, if they have paid the entire amount due, they are entitled to take possession of the land unencumbered of any contract for the grant of perpetual lease.

(1) 9 B. 524; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 349.
(2) 6 Ind. Cas. 707.
(3) 12 Ind. Cas. 382; 35 M. 744; 10 M. L. T. 256; (1911) 2 M. W. N. 231; 21 M. L. J. 1010.

There is another ground on which the clause allowing the mortgagees to remain in possession as lessees is not enforceable. There was no perpetual lease granted at the time when the mortgage was made and the clause can at best amount to a contract for the grant of a perpetual lease after redemption. It is apparent that if owing to failure of the mortgagors to redeem within 60 years there was no redemption, the perpetual lease would not come into existence. As a mere contract for the grant of a perpetual lease after an uncertain period of time, if any at all, the clause is no longer enforceable because the original parties to it are all dead and the present plaintiffs and defendants are their representatives. A contract for the grant of a lease does not run with the land and cannot, therefore, bind the representatives of the original parties thereto.

The next question involves a consideration in the first instance of the question as to whether the grove is an accession within the meaning of s. 63 of the Transfer of Property Act and whether, if an accession, it is or is not capable of separate possession or enjoyment. I am of opinion that the grove as a grove is both an accession and is incapable of separate possession and enjoyment. The grove in order to be enjoyed as a grove has to be maintained and the fruits and produce of it are to be enjoyed. This cannot be done without detriment to the land on which the grove stands. On the other hand if the grove were to be cut down the timber can be removed and is capable of separate enjoyment. The case, therefore, in my opinion is a case of an accession which has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagees, and if it is to be put to its full use, it is incapable of separate possession or enjoyment without detriment to the principal property. I have already referred to the clause in the mortgage-deed under which express power or consent was given to the mortgagees to plant a grove if they liked. In pursuance of that assent of the mortgagors the mortgagees have planted a grove which they were perfectly entitled to do. It is immaterial whether the assent was obtained previously or whether it was obtained just at the time when the grove was being planted. There was clearly an original assent given to the mortgagees within the meaning of s. 63. It follows, therefore, that the grove as a grove has been acquired at the expense of the mortgagees, is not capable of separate enjoyment, and its accession has been made with the assent of the mortgagors. Under these circumstances the mortgagees are entitled to insist that the plaintiffs-mortgagors must take the land with the grove and pay to the mortgagees the costs thereof.

The learned Advocate for the appellants contends that the Full Bench case of Raghunandan Rai v. Raghunandan Pande (4) is an authority for the proposition that a grove is capable of separate enjoyment. It is urged that unless it be supposed that that was held by the Full Bench it is not easy to see how the decree in that case could have been passed under which the mortgagor did not get the grove or timber but the mortgagee was allowed to remove the timber and appropriate it. It is urged that if the Full Bench had thought that a grove is incapable of separate enjoyment, then in the event of there being no assent of the mortgagors, the accession ought to have gone to the mortgagors with the land under the first paragraph of s. 63. The learned Judges who formed the Full Bench, however, have nowhere said that a grove as a grove is capable of separate enjoyment. I am not, therefore, bound to assume that this must have been their view simply because a contrary result might appear to logically follow from a contrary hypothesis. That decision might have been based on the broad equitable ground that mortgagors are at best entitled to have the land restored in its previous condition and without the acquired accession which can be removed without detriment to the land. The Full Bench case is distinguishable from the present case because in that case the alleged contract that the mortgagee would be entitled to plant a grove, which had been pleaded in the written statement, was not proved to the satisfaction of the Court below nor pressed before the Full Bench. In my opinion the present case comes exactly within the second clause of s. 63 and the plaintiffs, therefore, are bound to take the land with the grove and pay for it.

As regards the amount of compensation the learned Judge has fixed Rs. 1,800 as a proper estimate. He has calculated the total amount that would have been spent for all these years in rearing up this grove and he has come to the conclusion, to use his own words, that "it is impossible to make a very accurate estimate of the expenditure which the defendants have incurred, but it seems to me that a sum of Rs. 1,800 would be a fair estimate. As I have already remarked the expenditure was incurred upon the faith of a promise made by the plaintiffs. If the present value of the grove is Rs. 2,300 it is a fair estimate to say that Rs. 1,800 was the capital spent upon it." It is clear, therefore, that his estimate of Rs. 1,800 is of the total amount spent on the grove and does not include the value of the timber or the interest on the amount spent. It may be that in calculating the amount the learned Judge has included some interest though not full interest because the profits made by the mortgagees had been practically very little. The learned Judge had in his mind the principles which ought to govern the calculation of the estimate and, in my opinion, his estimate must be accepted as a finding of fact.

I would, therefore, dismiss both the appeals and the cross-objections.

Mukerji, J.—I entirely agree with my learned brother that both the appeal and the cross-objection must be dismissed.

As pointed out by my learned brother there are two points in the case; (1) whether the agreement that the mortgagees were to continue in possession of the mortgaged land inspite of the receipt of the mortgage money was a clog on redemption and, therefore, must be disregarded; and (2) whether the mortgagors should get the trees without payment?

In pursuance of an agreement in the mortgage-deed the mortgagees planted the grove. The question is whether inspite of their planting the grove, the agreement that the mortgagees were to continue in possession must be treated as unenforceable in law. The principle on which the doctrine of clog on redemption is based has its origin in the Law of England, but it has been recongnized by British Indian Legislature and although the English Law as such is not applicable to this country, the law enacted in India is to be enforced. That law is to be found in s 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is significant that the usual words to be found in so many sections of the Transfer of Property

(4) 61 Ind. Cas. 812; 19 A. L. J. 573; 43 A. 636.

Act, namely, 'in the absence of a contract to the contrary' do not find any place in s. 60 of the Transfer of Property Act. The rule enacted thereby is this. Whenever the principal mortgage-money has fallen due the mortgagor on payment to the mortgagee may require the latter (a) to deliver the mortgage-deed, (b) to deliver possession, (c) to re-transfer the property. This s. 60 came in for interpretation by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Mohammad Sher Khan v. Swami Dayal (5) and their Lordships remarked that the language of the section was unqualified. It seems to me to be clear both on the language of the law and on authority that any agreement contained in the mortgage-deed which prevents the mortgagor from acquiring possession of the property on payment of the mortgage-money is not enforceable, and must be disregarded. The mortgagor has an absolute right to get back the property on payment. Of course, where there is a subsequent transaction which extinguishes or modifies the right to redeem which the mortgagor possesses, the matter would be different. Such a case is provided for by the second paragraph of s. 60. The first question, therefore, must be answered in favour of the mortgagors.

The second question is whether the mortgagors ought to have the grove without payment. Section 63 is the law on the point. The grove is an accession and, therefore, under the general law as enacted in para. 1 of s. 63, it ought to go with the land to the mortgagors. There are, however, certain exceptions enacted. The first one is that where the mortgagee has spent money to acquire an accession and the accession is capable of separate enjoyment without detriment to the principal property, the mortgagor cannot have it without paying for the same. The question is whether a grove is a property which is capable of separate enjoyment. If it be capable of separate enjoyment without detriment to the principal property the mortgagor must pay for it if he wants to get it. There can be no doubt that there are two uses of the grove. A grove involves the right to maintain the trees on the spot. It also includes a right to remove the timber. Of the two rights that exist in the holder of the grove one is capable of separate enjoyment and the other is not. If the owner of the grove wants to enjoy it with the trees standing on the spot he cannot enjoy the trees as apart from the land. On the other hand, if he wants to cut down the trees he can separately enjoy the timber. That being the case, it must be taken that the question is not capable of an answer without losing sight of the fact that a grove can be put to two uses. It is no doubt open to the person occupying the grove to say that he would not enjoy it as a grove but he would enjoy the timber. In the latter case it would be open to the mortgagee to remove the timber if the mortgagor is not willing to pay for the same. This was held by me to be the law in Ram Brichh Singh v. Chhakauri Singh (6) decided on the 27th of November 1924. A similar view was taken in the Full Bench case of Raghu Nandan v. Raghu Nandan (4).

In this particular case, the mortgagees say that they are not disposed to cut and remove the timber and they want to enjoy the grove as a grove. Now the question is whether they can do so, if the mortgagors are unwilling to pay for it. I agree with my learned brother that the mortgagees cannot enjoy the grove apart from the land itself. That being the case the grove must go with the land. I have already stated that here the mortgagees are unwilling to cut and remove the timber.

The next question is whether we can compel the mortgagors to pay for the grove, that is to say the trees as they are standing on the spot. There are two cases in which the mortgagor can be compelled to pay for the accession, namely, (1) where the accession is necessary for the preservation of the property and (2) where the accession was acquired with the assent of the mortgagor. This is a case in which the accession was acquired with the assent of the mortgagors. The mortgagors not only said that the mortgagees might plant a grove but they promised that they would not take back the land at all. In the circumstances the mortgagors must pay compensation.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL No. 37 OF 1924.

December 1, 1924.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Crump.

KOKAMAL MADHORAM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

GULABSING GURUDATSING—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VI, r. 17—Amendment of pleadings—New cause of action, whether can be put forward.

The most important rule relating to the amendment of a plaint is that a plaintiff cannot by amendment be allowed to substitute one plaint for another. However leniently the rules regarding the amendment of pleadings in this country should be construed to prevent a failure of justice, it would impede the administration of justice if this particular rule were not strictly observed. [p. 483, col. 2.]

Plaintiff sued as a principal on a contract alleged to have been made with him by the defendants for the import of certain goods on c. i. f. terms. During the course of the trial the plaintiff wanted to sue as the defendants' agent who had on the receipt of the shipping documents cleared and delivered the goods to the defendants:

Held, that the claim which the defendants wanted subsequently to put forward was based on an entirely new cause of action and that the plaintiff could not be allowed to put forward that claim in the suit as originally brought and that consequently the suit must be dismissed. [ibid.]

Appeal from the decree of Mr. Justice Fawcett.

Mr. Coyajee, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kemp, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit in the Court of Small Causes, Bombay, alleging that the defendants requested him to order out aniline dyes on certain terms as to commission.

On the account which subsisted between the plaintiff and the defendants with regard to that transaction he claimed Rs. 1,061-2-6 with interest Kartak Sudi 1, 1977, to Aso Vad 30, 1978, amounting to Rs. 145-1-6.

The defendants applied to the High Court for a transfer on the strength of an affidavit in which they alleged—

(1) that the defendants did not request the plaintiff to order out goods to them;

(2) that defendants intended for goods from an Italian firm La Iridescente;

(3) that the said firm supplied the goods to the defendants through the plaintiff as agent of the firm;

(4) that plaintiff had no right to sue in his own name since he was the agent of a disclosed principal;

(5) that the defendants had a claim against the said firm for shortage and late delivery amounting to Rs. 4,000 against the balance of price of the goods supplied. To ascertain the amount an account would have to be taken of all the goods supplied from time to time;

(6) that the defendants counter-claimed against the plaintiff for such amount as would be found due on taking such account.

The plaint, though undated, must have been filed in 1922.

On June 19, 1923, an order was made for a transfer of the suit to the High Court on the defendants depositing the amount of the claim and Rs. 400 for costs in Court.

Affidavits of documents were filed by both parties and on August 13 the defendants took out a summons for an order that the preliminary issue "whether the suit as framed by the plaintiff was maintainable" should be determined immediately.

Lengthy affidavits were filed and on August 20 the Chamber Judge, after hearing Counsel, directed that the suit should be set down for trial on September 17. Why this suit should have been given preference over the numerous older suits then waiting for trial is not apparent? The case was eventually heard for eight days before Fawcett, J., from January 18-29, 1924.

The following issues were raised:—

1. Whether the defendants' contract for certain aniline dyes out of which the suit has arisen was with the plaintiff or the firm of La Iridescente?

2. Whether the plaintiff's suit is merely in respect of the amount of custom duty and expenses incurred on those goods or is in respect of the balance of the whole account of those goods from the beginning?

3. Whether in clearing those goods the plaintiff acted as agent of the defendants?

4. Whether in the event of its being held that the plaintiff was the agent of La Iridescente either in the transaction of clearing the goods or of the sale thereof, the plaintiff can maintain the suit?

5. Was struck out?

6. In the event of its being held that the suit is maintainable whether it was a term of the contract that the goods should be immediately shipped and delivered to defendants before Divali 1976 (October 1920)?

7. Whether the defendants directly or indirectly agreed with the plaintiff that the latter should supply the dye known as Kongo Red 12-B to the defendants and if so, at the price charged by him?

8. Whether the plaintiff had been guilty of late delivery?

9. In the event of its being held that goods were delivered late, are the defendants liable for the higher customs duties that had to be paid on account of such late delivery?

10. Whether the defendants are entitled to damages and if so to how much, on account of the late delivery after the goods arrived in Bombay Harbour?

11. General issue.

The learned Judge in the early part of judgment pointed out the difficulties which had arisen, first owing to the erroneous statements in the plaint, and, secondly, to the fact that there was no formal written statement on the record and no counter-claim.

However he allowed the plaintiff to go on without amending his plaint, and allowed the defendants to pursue their counter-claim without its being specifically stated in the pleadings, and observed that some rule should be framed to secure improvement in such matters, when a suit was transferred from the Small Causes Court.

The difficulties which had arisen could have surmounted if the proper proceedings had been taken in Chambers. When the summons of August 13 was before the Judge the plaintiff could have applied for a proper written statement and counter-claim, while the defendants could have asked on the strength of the documents then before them for an amendment of the plaint.

The important documents were:—

(1) Letter dated August 10 from La Iridescente to the defendants offering certain goods.

(2) Letter dated August 15 from defendants to La Iridescente accepting certain goods out of those offered and asking for five Congo Red 12-B Lion cases to be included. The letter concludes: "As arranged between us you (La Iridescente) will arrange with Mr. Gulabsingh (plaintiff) to clear the goods on arrival and deliver the same to me against payment."

(3) Sale note by La Iridescente to the defendants of the goods accepted by the defendants with the following addition: "Congo Red 12-B Lion is on special contract with Mr. Gulabsigh, therefore. I have passed these orders to him and shall request him to execute same at equal price and terms as 111 B 405 quality (Rs. 4-10 per lb.)"

On a reference to the account annexed to the plaint it will be found that it contains no item relating to Congo Red 12-B. As a matter of fact plaintiff sent six cases of this number to the defendants at Agra.

It is difficult to find any justification for the inclusion of issue No. 7 in the suit. The plaintiff had actually brought a suit in the Small Causes Court against Khimchand, who was acting as defendants' agent when the sale note of August 18 was received for the balance of Rs. 83 due on this transaction. The defendants contended that the price was Rs. 4-10-0 per lb. and not Rs. 5-2-0, and claimed in this suit to set off Rs. 203 as shown in their account of August 30, 1920, referred to by the Judge at page 89, line 13, of the Printed Book, which, however, I cannot find in the index to Exhibits at the beginning of Part III.

It was sufficiently embarrasing to deal with a plaint which had to be abandoned, and with a counter-claim which was not made in proper form and without any particulars. To deal with an item which had nothing to do with the plaintiff's claim, and of which no mention was made in the pleadings could only tend to increase the embarrassment.

It must first be noted that the plaintiff's claim was for the balance due on an account for goods supplied to the defendants at their request.

That claim failed entirely. As the Judge finds and as Exs. B, C, and A clearly show the goods were supplied to the defendants by La Iridescente. The plaintiff, however, without any amendment was allowed to continue the suit on the footing of his being an agent of the defendants to clear the goods which they had ordered from La Iridescente. Defendants wanted to show that plaintiff was the agent of La Iridescente and not of the defendants and with this object desired to cross-examine on this question. The cross examination was disallowed on the ground that the contention was absurd in view of the agreement evidenced by Ex. C, that with the consent of the defendants, the plaintiff should clear the goods on arrival and deliver them to the defendants on payment.

At first sight it would seem clear that La Iridescente were to arrange with plaintiff to clear the goods as they arrived and deliver them to the defendants on payment, in which case the plaintiff would be the agent of La Iridescente. Mr. Kemp has pointed out that the contract was on c. i. f. terms and, therefore, La Iridescente had only to hand over the documents to the defendants in exchange for the price. This may have been the intention, but Ex. C says that first the agent of La Iridescente was to arrange with plaintiff to clear the goods and to deliver them to the defendants on payment. Consequently defendants should have been allowed to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses to ascertain what actually happened.

But to my mind it was a fatal error on the part of the learned Judge to allow the plaintiff to continue the suit on the original plaint. The written statement of the defendants was a complete answer to it, but by a continuance of the proceedings defendants were eventually barred from pressing any claim they may have had against La Iridescente for damages under the contract incurred owing to late delivery. It may be said that they might have filed an action against La Iridenscente, but the plaintiff was suing on the contract himself and consequently as long as the plaint was on the file they were justified in claiming damages against him.

Now the learned Judge might have allowed the amendment, but instead of doing that he allowed issues to be raised as if the plaint had been amended; but we cannot re-construct from the issues, the pleadings as they should have been framed before issues were raised or evidence led. We must consider ourselves whether the plaint could have been amended according to the rules which are usually observed by the Court when an application for amendment is made. The most important rule is that a plaintiff cannot by amendment be allowed to substitute one plaint for another, and the plaintiff would have had to do this for an amendment to have been of any use to him. He sued as principal on a contract alleged to have been made with him by the defendants for the import of certain goods on c. i. f. terms. He would then have been entitled to recover the price of the goods in exchange for the documents. No question would arise with regard to the payment of custom dues or landing charges. He wants now to sue as the defendants' agent who has on receipt of the shipping documents cleared and delivered the goods to his principal. That is obviously a claim based on an entirely different cause of action, and the plaintiff should have been told to file a fresh suit, and the present suit should have been dismissed.

This is the order we must make now. We regret it, but the only other alternative would be to direct fresh pleadings to be drawn, and to send this case back for retrial, when the evidence which we think was wrongly excluded would have to be recorded. We do not think we are justified in imposing this burden on the defendants apart from the fact that we have no desire to depart from the rule referred to above. However leniently the rules regarding the amendment of pleadings in this country should be construed to prevent a failure of justice, it would certainly impede the administration of justice if this particular rule were not strictly observed.

The history of this case is a lamentable example of what can happen when it is disregarded altogether, and a plaintiff, even without an amendment, is allowed to go to trial on some cause of action which cannot be ascertained from any definite source. The defendants are not wholly free from blame. They claimed a set-off for the small sum of Rs. 203 on a contract which was entirely outside the suit. It could only have been dealt with as a counter-claim, but from the record a considerable amount of evidence was taken on it, and the Judge has devoted a considerable portion of the judgment to the discussion whether the plaintiff could charge the defendants Rs. 4-10-0 or Rs. 5-2-0 for the six cases of dyes which he sold them.

We think, therefore, that the plaintiff must pay to the defendants only half their costs in the Court below, and all their costs of the appeal.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 12—Appeal—Limitation—Time spent in obtaining copies of decree and judgment, deduction of—Copies, when to be applied for.

Having regard to the provisions of s. 12 of the Limitation Act an appellant would be within time, if his appeal is filed within the total amount of periods granted to him, viz., the initial period granted by Sch. I to the Act, plus the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, plus the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment. If, however, any of the two periods requisite for obtaining copies overlap each other, one of the overlapping periods will have to be left out of account. [p. 484, col. 2.]

Under the provisions of s. 12 of the Limitation Act it is open to an appellant to make an application for obtaining a copy of the judgment within the period of limitation as extended by the time spent by him in obtaining a copy of the decree and vice versa, and in such a case he is entitled to deduct from the period of limitation prescribed for the appeal the time spent in obtaining a copy of the judgment as well as the time spent in obtaining a copy of the decree. Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Allahabad, dated the 16th December 1922.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Zamirul Haq, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question for determination in this appeal is whether the appeal presented before the lower Appellate Court was within time. That Court dismissed the appeal on the ground that it was time-barred.

The facts briefly are these:—The decree sought to be appealed against was passed on the 22nd of September 1922. The appeal was filed on the 27th of November 1922. A copy of the judgment was applied for on the 23rd of September 1922 and a notice was given of the copy being ready on the 23rd of October of the same year. The decree was for partition and had to be engrossed on a stamped paper. The successful plaintiff did not provide the stamp paper till a very late date. On the 15th of November 1922 an application was made for a copy of the decree to be appealed against. As a matter of fact, the decree was not signed by the learned Subordinate Judge who passed it till 25th of November 1922. A copy was made of the decree on the same date and was handed over to the appellant. 26th of November was a Sunday. As we have already stated the appeal was filed on the 27th of November 1922.

The learned Judge, in dismissing the appeal as time-barred has, not given his reasons very clearly, as we take it, it appears that he was of opinion that an application for a copy of the decree ought to have been made while the period of limitation initially granted by the First Schedule of the Limitation Act was yet unexpired.

To find out whether the appeal before the lower Appellate Court was within time or not, we have to look for guidance to s. 12 of the Limitation Act. Under that Act we have got three periods for computation of limitation.

The first period is the initial period granted by the several Articles of Sch. I; the second period is granted by para. 2 of s. 12 which says that the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree will be excluded, then the third period is granted by para. 3 of the same section; the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment on which the decree is founded shall also be excluded. Giving the language its general and ordinary meaning, it would appear that an appellant would be within time, if his appeal is filed within the total amount of periods granted to him, namely, the initial period granted by Sch. I plus the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the decree, plus the time requisite for obtaining a copy of the judgment. Of course, if any of the two periods requisite for obtaining copies overlap each other, one of the overlapping periods will have to be left out of account.

The authorities on the point do not seem to be quite agreed. In Din Dayal v. Rameshar (1), it was held by Mr. Kanhaiya Lal (as Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal then was) that it was open to an appellant to make his application for the second copy within the period of limitation as extended by his obtaining the first copy. The same view was taken in Rajani Nath Kapali v. Kali Mohan Das Kapali (2). Coming to our High Court, in Mool Raj v. Niadar Mal (3), it was remarked that an appellant was bound to apply for a copy of the decree and a copy of the judgment at one and the same time at any rate, within the initial period of limitation. So far as we have been able to examine actual dates involved in the case, the appeal was entirely time-barred at the date it was presented. In these circumstances it was not necessary for their Lordships to say that it was incumbent on an appellant to apply for copies at one and the same time and within the period provided by the First Schedule. Indeed, there is no clear provision of law to that effect to be found in s. 12 of the Limitation Act. There can be no doubt that on the merits, the decision of this Court was perfectly right.

Coming back to the facts of the case before us the appellant had 30 days plus 31 days plus 11 days total 72 days from 22nd of September 1922 within which to appeal. The appeal, filed on the 27th of November 1922, was well within these 72 days. The appeal was, therefore, presented within the period of limitation.

We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand the appeal to the lower Appellate Court for disposal according to law. The costs in this Court will be paid, at all events, by the respondents. The costs in the Court below will be within its discretion. The costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL No. 91 OF 1924.

December 6, 1924.

Present :—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Crump.

IBRAHIM FAZALBHOY JOOMABHOY & Co.—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS

INTERNATIONAL BANKING CORPORATION—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 33—Goods ordered by Company—Bill of Exchange drawn on Agent of Company—Acceptance "for and on behalf of the Company", effect of—Agent, personal liability of.

The alleged acceptance of a Bill of Exchange must, if possible, be construed ut res magis valeat and not ut res magis pereat. Where, however, the proper construction is clear on the face of the document, there is no room for the application of this principle. [p. 487, col. 1.]

Company management is different in India to what it is in England and in the great majority of Companies the entire management rests with the Secretaries and Agents according to the terms of their agreement with the Company subject to the supervision of the Directors. [p. 488, col. 1.]

A certain Company indented certain goods from a firm in England and it was arranged that the latter firm should draw Bills of Exchange on the Company in respect of the said goods. Some of the bills in respect of the goods so indented for by the Company were drawn on the defendants who were the Secretaries and Agents of the Company. The bills were sent by the plaintiff Bank to the Company for acceptance and were accepted by the defendants "for and on behalf of the Company." In a suit by the plaintiff Bank to recover the amount of the bills from the defendants:

Held, that the form of acceptance adopted by the defendants clearly excluded the personal liability of the defendants in respect of the bills and that the plaintiff was not entitled to a personal decree against the defendants on the bills. [p. 488, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal from the decree of Mr. Justice Kemp.

Mr. B. J. Desai (with him Mr. Munshi), for the Appellants.

Mr. Coltman (with him Mr. M. C. Setalvad), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs stated that they were the payees and holders in due course of seven Bills of Exchange drawn in London by Alfred Mumford and Co., Ltd., addressed to the defendant firm of Fazalbhoy Joomabhoy & Co., personally and without qualification as on various dates and amounts all payable sixty days after sight. The defendant firm of Fazalbhoy Joomabhoy & Co., accepted all the bills as payable at the plaintiff Bank and signed their acceptances "for or on behalf of the Eastern Commercial Corporation."

The plaintiffs claimed that such words did not affect the firm's personal liability. The bills were all dishonoured by non-payment on their due dates.

Fazalbhoy Joomabhoy, a partner in the defendant firm, died on July 15, 1922, and the plaint was amended by making defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 3, his heirs and legal representatives, together with defendants Nos. 4 and 5, the remaining partners, the defendants on the record. The plaintiffs prayed that the defendant firm (this was wrong, as the individual partners were sued after the amendment) should be ordered to pay the sum of Rs. 58,774-13-9, the total of the bills, with interest at eight per cent. on the various amounts from the respective due dates and notarial charges. In the written statement it was pleaded that the plaintiffs were not the holders in due course of the seven Bills of Exchange and that defendants were not liable on those bills.

Defendants were Secretaries and Agents of the Eastern Commercial Corporation Limited a Joint Stock Company and as such had power to draw, accept, endorse, negotiate and sell Bills of Exchange and hundies.

The Corporation had indented from Messrs. Alfred Mumford & Co., for several lots of goods by several indents and it was arranged that the latter firm should draw Bills of Exchange on the Corporation in respect of the said goods.

Some of the bills in respect of goods so indented for by the Corporation were drawn on Fazalbhoy Joomabhoy & Co. After the bills were received in Bombay, they were sent by the plaintiff Bank to the Corporation for acceptance. The Corporation, on September 2, 1920, returned the seven bills in suit duly accepted by them along with other bills drawn on the Corporation. The defendants said the bills in suit were accepted on behalf of or on account of the Corporation and the terms of the acceptance excluded the personal liability of the defendants, and amounted to a distinct disclaimer by the defendants of any personal liability and gave the plaintiff Bank sufficient notice thereof. They relied on the law or the custom of merchants in Bombay for the contention that when a bill was drawn or accepted "for or on behalf of" a Joint Stock Company by its Secretaries and Agents, that expression was meant to signify that the bill was drawn or accepted on behalf of or on account of the Company, and excluded the personal liability of the Secretaries and Agents so signing on behalf of the Company. After the plaint was amended defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 5 put in a written statement in identical terms.

At the trial the following issues were raised:—

(1) Whether plaintiff Bank were holders in due course for value?

This was admitted by defendants' Counsel.

(2) Whether acceptance of defendants was on account and on behalf of the Eastern Commercial Corporation, Ltd.?

The answer was, the defendants have accepted the bills and are liable as acceptors.

(3) Whether according to custom and usage in Bombay signature of one Agent for or on behalf of the Joint Stock Company does not signify the bill is due or accepted on behalf of the Company?

(4) Whether the said form of acceptance and signature on the bills in suit is not by law or usage a distinct disclaimer of defendants' personal liability?

The answer to these two issues was that evidence of the mercantile usage sought to be proved did not affect the case.

Accordingly the defendants were held liable for the amount remaining due on the bills.

No oral evidence was led and the only documents exhibited were the drafts, a statement of advances made against the drafts, and a statement of accounts.

The Judge says that it was admitted that the bills were drawn against certain yellow metal sheets consigned to the Corporation, and that there were prior consignments, the bills in respect of which were drawn on the Corporation. It is unfortunate that a specimen of one of these bills was not exhibited. But in the absence of any evidence we may assume that the bills in suit were drawn on the defendants by inadvertence, and that the defendants accepted them in the way they did under the belief that they were drawn as usual on the Corporation. They could not possibly have intended to accept the bills themselves.

Under s. 33 of the Negotiable Instruments Act no person except the drawer of a Bill of Exchange can bind himself by an acceptance.

On the face of the bill we may say at once that there was no acceptance by the defendants' firm on whom they were drawn; the acceptances were by the Corporation as strangers to the bills, and the plaintiff Bank should have at once noticed the defect and taken such steps as were possible to get it remedied.

The learned Judge remarked that the sole question was whether there was any acceptance by defendants, or did they intimate by the term of their signature that they were not accepting. An acceptance on the Company's name of a bill drawn on themselves would not be an acceptance at all.

We agree and we also admit the principle to be followed in such cases as this, that we should construe the document if we possibly can ut res magis valeat and not ut res magis pereat. But if the proper construction is clear on the face of the document there is no room for applying the principle. Were these bills accepted in the Company's name? Counsel was asked in the course of the argument how a bill drawn on the Company would have been accepted, and he had to admit the bill would have been accepted in exactly the same way as the bills in suit. It is difficult to see, therefore, how there is any room for ambiguity. If the defendants, when accepting a bill drawn on the Company, accepted it in this form, that form must be taken as excluding their own personal liability, and yet when they accept a bill drawn on themselves in the same form it is argued that they have not excluded their personal liability. The same words cannot have a different meaning according as the bill is drawn on the Company or on the defendants. Counsel would be forced to admit that the defendants were liable personally on the other bills drawn on the Company and accepted by them.

The Judge mainly relied on the cases of Mare v. Charles (1) and Herald v. Connah (2). Neither of those cases by itself would support his conclusion, but he appears to have considered that their cumulative effect would be sufficient. In the first case a bill was drawn on one William Charles and accepted by him as follows: "Accepted for the Company. Payable at the Union Bank, William Charles Purser." Lord Campbell, C. J., pointed out that if the words of an instrument could reasonably bear an interpretation making it valid, they must construe them so as to make it valid, and William Charles must be taken to have intended to accept and not to refuse a bill drawn on himself. Unless he accepted the bill drawn on him personally in the sense that he rendered himself personally liable, he did not accept at all. On any other construction what he wrote on the bill must have amounted to a refusal to accept it. But it was clear he intended that the bill should not be dishonoured but accepted and they must construe what he had written ut res magis valeat. For, no person could, by accepting a bill drawn on another, alter the contract between the drawer and drawee. There must be a distinct disclaimer of personal liability, e. g., where the defendant signed "per proc," and those words were by mercantile usage equivalent to a signature of the person for whom the "per procurator" signed.

In Herald v. Connah (2), a Bill of Exchange was drawn on Henry Connah, General Agent of L'Unione Compagna D'Assinagione and was accepted thus: "Accepted, payable at 8 York Street, Manchester, on behalf of the Company, H. Connah." The judgment of Bramwell B. is instructive as showing that owing to the special circumstances of the case, notably the fact that the Company was carrying on business abroad, the Court was determined if possible to make the defendant liable. He said:

"We must look to the instrument itself, and see what the parties intended, as that intention appears on the face of the document...I agree with the remark that has been made, that it may be there is no valid acceptance; but it is to be presumed in favour of a valid acceptance, unless the acceptor unmistakably notifies that he is not accepting in accordance with the effect of the draft...Now I hold that the right way for a person who is accepting for another, to notify that he is so accepting, is for him to use such words as 'accepted for' or 'per proc.'...The natural meaning of the words 'on behalf of' is that the defendant accepted as between himself and the Company for their account, but that he did accept it.'

The learned Baron would, I presume, have held that defendants in this case had excluded their personal liability. But whatever authority those cases may have had before 1882, the question with regard to the liability of a person signing a bill is set at rest in England by s. 26 of the Bills of Exchange Act:—

"(1) Where a person signs a bill as drawer, indorser, or acceptor, and adds words to his signature, indicating that he signs for or on behalf of a principal, or in a representative character, he is not personally liable thereon; but the mere addition to his signature of words describing him as an Agent, or as filling a representative character, does not exempt him from personal liability."

(2) (1876) 34 L. T. 885.

Section 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 is much to the same effect, only it enacts when an Agent is liable personally.

It is doubtful, however, whether these sections really apply when the question is whether the acceptance on the document is the acceptance of the drawee. Just as Bramwell, B. in Herald v. Connah (2) took into account that the bill was drawn on a foreign Company, so in this case we have to consider the circumstances in which these bills were accepted so as to ascertain whether the defendants must be taken to have intended to accept and not to refuse a bill drawn on them, or whether they have unmistakably notified that they were not accepting in accordance with the effect of the draft. It seems unfortunate that the Judge did not allow evidence with regard to the status of "Secretaries and Agents" to a Joint Stock Company in India. But it may be taken as common knowledge that Company management is different in India to what it is in England and that in the great majority of Companies the entire management rests with the Secretaries and Agents according to the terms of their agreements with the Company subject to the supervision of the Directors. When, therefore, the defendants used the form of signature which they used when acting as Secretaries and Agents for the Corporation, and especially when accepting the prior bills drawn on the Company, can it be a reasonable interpretation that they intended to make themselves personally liable for the bills, and is it not perfectly clear that they unmistakably notified that they were not accepting in accordance with the effect of the draft? I may put it in another way. If the plaintiffs had taken the bills to their Solicitor after acceptance and asked him whether the bills had been duly accepted, he must inevitably have advised them that the acceptances were not in order. Whether the signature is a repudiation of personal liability is one for the Court to decide. But the learned Judge concludes by saying that the defendants cannot avoid the conclusion to be drawn from the statement in their letter of September 2, 1920, which contains these words: "We are herewith sending you the above draft duly accepted by us," that the acceptance whether by the Company or by themselves is a good acceptance. The letter was annexed to the original written statement of the defendants but was not exhibited at the hearing nor was it relied on during the argument before us. Clearly it does not carry the case any further as the letter is signed in the same form as the acceptances. Fully recognizing that we should, if we possibly can, give effect to the principle of construing these acceptances ut res magis valeat, we are constrained to hold that there was no acceptance by the defendants of the bills in suit.

Appeal allowed and suit dismissed with costs in both Courts.

FIRM JHANDU LAL-MITTHU LAL —PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

Musammat WILAYATI BEGUM AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), s. 76 (b)—Bill of Exchange accepted by drawer—Presentment, whether necessary—Presentment before maturity, validity of—Endorser, whether can waive presentment—Promise to pay, effect of.

A Bill of Exchange comes to maturity on the expiry of the period of grace and no presentment of the bill is valid unless it is made after the bill has reached maturity. [p. 489, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where a person is himself the drawer and the acceptor of a Bill of Exchange it is open to a holder of the bill to treat it as a promissory note and the drawer would be liable on the bill whether there was presentment of the bill or not. [p. 489, col. 2.]

All the provisions relating to the presentment of a Bill of Exchange are made for the protection and benefit of the party who is liable on the bill and it is open to such a party to waive a presentment for payment. [ibid.]

Where a Bill of Exchange is presented to an endorser before it reaches maturity and he makes an oral promise to pay the bill after a certain period of time, the presentment itself is not valid but the promise by the endorser to pay the money can be treated as an undertaking to pay without any further presentment of the bill and presentment is consequently unnecessary in such a case. [p. 490, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 17th September 1921.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, Dr. K. N. Katju, Messrs. S. B. Johari and B. Dayal, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Muhammad Ulla and N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit which was brought on a hundi. The document in suit is printed at page 27 of our record and it appears that it was drawn on the 25th September 1918 by a person named Muniruddin. Muniruddin drew on himself and also accepted the hundi on the date just mentioned. He afterwards delivered it to a person named Muhammad Hussain who negotiated it with the plaintiff firm and obtained cash therefor. The amount of the hundi was Rs. 8,500.

The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought by the plaintiff firm against the legal representatives of Muhammad Hussain who is dead and against the drawer and acceptor, Muniruddin.

In the Court below the suit has been decreed against Muniruddin but it has been dismissed as against the representatives of Muhammad Hussain. The basis of the judgment is this, namely, that there was no proper presentment of the bill for payment so as to render Muhammad Hussain liable as an endorser.

The plaintiffs now appeal, and the argument is that the decision of the Court below is wrong.

We may mention here that an application has been made to this Court to admit additional evidence in the case in the shape of a letter. This application is made for the purpose of proving to the Court that the bill in suit was an accomodation bill; in other words, that Muniruddin drew and accepted the bill without valuable consideration. He did so merely for the purpose of enabling Muhammad Hussain to raise money on it.

It is stated that this evidence only became available after the suit had been decided in the Court below.

After hearing the arguments in the case, however, we are of opinion that there is no necessity to admit any additional evidence in the case. Whether the bill was an accomodation bill or not does not appear to us to make any difference to the legal situation of the parties.

We have now to consider what took place in the matter of presentment for payment. The hundi was declared to be payable 359 days after the 25th September 1918. It, therefore, came to maturity on the expiry of the period of grace, that is the third day after the 19th September 1919, that is to say, on the 22nd September 1919.

Now the only evidence regarding presentment is to be found in the statement of Chandan Lal who is a partner in the plaintiff firm, and according to Chandan Lal's story he presented the bill for payment to the drawer Muniruddin and also to the endorser Muhammad Hussain on the 19th September 1919.

We agree with the learned Judge of the Court below that this was not a good presentment in law for no presentment is valid unless it is made after the bill was reached maturity. The bill had not reached that stage on the 19th September 1919. There was, therefore, no valid presentment.

As against Muniruddin we think the Court below was right in granting a decree for, in any view, it appears to us that he was liable whether there was presentment or not. In the form in which the bill was drawn, Muniruddin himself being drawer and acceptor, it was open to the holder to treat the document as a promissory note, and we have the further fact that Muniruddin has not appealed against the decree of the Court below.

There remains the question of the liability of the endorser Muhammad Hussain.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad who appears on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant relies upon the terms of s. 76 (b) of the Negotiable Instruments Act. This section and clause lay down that no presentment for payment is necessary, as against any party sought to be charged therewith, if he has engaged to pay notwithstanding non-presentment.

There can be no doubt that a party to a Bill of Exchange can waive a presentment for payment as all the provisions relating to presentment are made for the protection and benefit of the party liable.

In support of his argument, Mr. Iqbal Ahmad relies upon the statement of Chandan Lal, which is uncontradicted and which we have no reason to disbelieve. Chandan Lal's statement is that on the 19th of September he went first of all to the house of Muniruddin with the hundi. He showed the hundi to Muniruddin and asked for payment. Muniruddin told him to go to Muhammad Hussian saying that he did not think that Muhammad Hussain would be likely to pay as sales were slow and the money was locked up in business.

Chandan Lal says that he then went to

Muhammad Hussain with the hundi and said :—

"Please pay this mony, I have come here after seeing Muniruddin ; he (Muhammad Hussain) said, the money is not procurable at present, you may charge interest at the rate of 13 annas per cent. I shall pay the money in a year or six months when it is received."

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad contends that if this evidence is believed it is sufficient proof of a waiver of presentment for payment on the part of the endorser, Muhammad Hussain.

On the other hand, it is argued on behalf of the respondents that cl. (b) of s. 76 cannot be applied in the light of this evidence because it is not made to appear that Muhammad Hussain engaged to pay "notwithstanding non-presentment." The contention of the learned Advocate for the respondents is that unless the fact of the engagement is disclosed in the endorsement made in the present case the evidence before us could not be treated as evidence of an engagement to pay notwithstanding non-presentment.

It seems to us that this is putting too narrow a construction on cl. (b) of s. 76, and we think that if there is reliable evidence before us of a parol promise on the part of the endorser to pay the note that is sufficient. We think we may fairly say that when Muhammad Hussain informed the holder that he would pay the money in a year or six months when he had it available, that was an undertaking to pay without any further presentment of the bill.

We are of opinion that the plaintiff firm ought to succeed in this appeal and that a decree should have been passed also against the legal representatives of Muhammad Hussain. We, therefore, allow this appeal and substitute for the decree of the Court below a decree against all the defendants with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale. It is, of course, to be understood that the decree, in so far as it concerns the legal representative of Muhammad Hussain, can be executed only against the assets of Muhammad Hussain in the hands of these persons.

VAMAN JANARDAN KASHELIKAR—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 122, 123, 126—Deed of gift—Execution—Attestation—Acceptance—Revocation before registration, validity of—Registration, subsequent, effect of.

Per Full Bench (Shah, A. C. J. and Mulla, J., dissenting).—Where a gift of immoveable property has been effected by means of an instrument signed by the donor and duly attested and accepted by the donee, it is not competent to the donor to revoke the gift before the instrument is registered. [p. 503, col. 2; p. 504, col. 2; p. 508, col. 1.]

Per Shah, A. C. J. and Mulla, J.—It is competent to a donor to revoke a gift of immoveable property before the instrument is in fact registered and the subsequent registration of the instrument against the wishes of the donor does not make the revocation ineffective. [p. 495, col. 2.]

Per Shah, A. C. J.—The essentials of a completed gift are that a transfer of the property should be made voluntarily and without consideration by an instrument which is signed by or on behalf of the donor and attested by at least two witnesses and which is registered, that is, registered in British India under the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents and that it should be accepted by the donee. Until all these conditions are fulfilled the gift is incomplete. So long as the transfer is incomplete it is open to the donor to resile from it and to cancel what he may have done. The gift is incomplete according to law so long as the document is not registered, and it is open to the donor to revoke it before it is completed. [p. 495, col. 2.]

Per Mulla, J.—The registration prescribed by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act is not mere evidence of the gift but is part of the gift itself. It is a necessary part of the proposition that a gift has been effected. It is not mere evidence to prove that there has been a gift, but it is a fact to be proved to constitute the proposition that there has been a gift. [p. 503, col. 2.]

Section 126 of the Transfer of Property Act applies only to a "gift", that is, a gift made in the manner prescribed by s. 123 of the Act. Where there is no such completed gift s. 126 has no application. [p. 507, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 224 of 1921, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge at Rajapur, in Civil Suit No. 226 of 1920.

ORDER OF REFERENCE TO A FULL BENCH.

Shah, Actg. C. J.—The facts which have given rise to this appeal are these:—

Plaintiff No. 1, Sakharam Keshav Kalkye, executed a deed of gift in favour of defendant No. 1 on September 17, 1917, in respect of his several moveable and immoveable properties. At that time plaintiff No. 1 had no son. Soon after this deed of gift, defendant No. 1 attempted to go and live with plaintiff No. 1. There was a dispute between the parties and criminal proceedings were initiated on September 30, 1917, by plaintiff No. 1 against defendant No. 1 for criminal trespass. The deed was presented for registration by defendant No. 1 on September 26, 1917, but plaintiff No. 1 did not appear before the Sub-Registrar and the Sub-Registrar refused to register the deed, on October 3, 1917, treating the conduct of plaintiff No. 1 as being equivalent to a denial of the execution of the document. Defendant No. 1 appealed to the Registrar. During the course of the hearing before the Registrar plaintiff No. 1 appeared but resiled from his action and denied execution. The Registrar ordered it to be registered in November 1917 and accordingly it was registered on December 18, 1917. Subsequently plaintiff No. 1 adopted plaintiff No. 2 and both of them filed the present suit on August 7, 1920, to set aside the deed of gift and for possession of the property described in the plaint, alleging that the deed of gift was invalid and that it was fraudulently obtained from plaintiff No. 1 who was a weak-minded man. Defendant No. 1 pleaded that plaintiff No. 1 had executed the deed willingly and with full knowledge of the contents of the document and that it was not obtained by any undue influence or in a fraudulent manner and that as the deed was registered, the gift was valid. On these pleadings issues were framed, but after examining the parties, the Trial Court framed a preliminary issue in these terms: "Is the gift deed valid as its registration took place without the consent of the donor"? The learned Trial Judge found in the negative on this issue and also recorded findings on Issues Nos. 1, 3 and 5. Issues Nos. 1 and 3 related to the adoption of plaintiff No. 2 with which we are not concerned. But as a result of the finding on the preliminary issue the learned Judge held that the plaintiffs were entitled to cancel the deed of gift and accordingly passed a decree in favour of the plaintiffs.

Defendant No. 1 appealed. The First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers found that the deed of gift relied upon by the defendant was not invalid on the ground of the absence of consent of the donor to its registration. He accordingly reversed the decree of the Trial Court and remanded the suit for trial on the merits.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court from this order of remand. It is urged in support of the appeal that is not merely a question of want of consent to the registration on the part of plaintiff No. 1 and that in fact it is a case of revocation of the gift before the document was registered. In support of this his conduct immediately after the deed is relied upon as showing that it indicated revocation of the gift on his part. Further it is urged that it was competent to plaintiff No. 1 to revoke the gift before it was completed, and that the gift would not be complete until the document was in fact registered whether with or without the consent of the donor. In support of this contention reliance is placed upon the decision in Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (1).

On behalf of the respondents it is urged that plaintiff No. 1 did not in fact revoke the gift, that it was not competent to him to revoke it, and the fact that the document was ultimately registered makes it effective as from the date of the document, that is, from September 17, 1917. Several decisions have been relied upon by Mr. Shingne in support of the contention that the consent of the donor to the registration is in no way essential and that the registration, when it is effected in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, whether with or without the donor's consent, becomes effective against the donor. The decisions relied upon in support of this proposition are Khushaba v. Chandrabhagabhai (2), Parbati v. Baijnath Pathak (3) and Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi (4). In addition to these cases I may also refer to the decision in Bhabatoosh Banerjee v. Soleman (5) and the differing judgments in Parbati v. Baijnath Pathak (3) which were considered in appeal in the case Parbati v. Baijnath Pathak (6). As regards the decision of this Court in Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (1) it is contended by Mr. Shingne that it does not lay down the law correctly, and that the ratio decidendi of that case is not consistent with the reasoning underlying the other cases above referred to, and that the question as to whether it is competent to a donor to revoke the gift before the document is registered may be considered by a Full Bench.

As regards the first question as to whether in fact this is merely a case of not consenting to the registration or a case of real revocation of the gift before the document was in fact registered, we have come to the conclusion that it is a case of revocation before the document was in fact registered. This position was not seriously challenged by Mr. Shingne though not conceded. The criminal proceedings which were immediately initiated by plaintiff No. 1 and also his refusal to consent to registration clearly indicate that he wanted to revoke the gift and did in fact do so. I may mention that in the lower Courts this question has not been considered. The case has been considered on the basis whether the absence of the donor's consent to registration is sufficient to invalidate the gift. If it were merely a case of absence of such consent, I shoutd not feel any difficulty in following the current of decisions above referred to. But when the donor goes further than merely withholding his consent to registration so as to justify the inference of revocation before actual registration, a difficult question arises, viz., whether the revocation is effective in law in view of the fact that the document has been subsequently registered.

"Gift" is defined by s. 122 of the Transfer of Property Act, and s. 123 provides that for the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor and attested by at least two witnesses. In the present case the instrument was executed on September 17, 1917, and the gift would be complete when the document is registered. If the gift is not complete until the document is registered, it is clear to my mind that it would be open to the donor to revoke it before registration. An incomplete gift can, of course, be revoked by the donor at any time: See Standing v. Bowring (7). In the words of Batty, J., in Joitaram v. Ramkrishna (8) "the essential to the validity of a gift seems to be...that the donor should have done all he could do to complete the gift." The gift would be incomplete so long as registration is not effected. It is quite true that the law of registration does not require that the executing party must be a consenting party at the time of registration. It may happen at the time of registration, according to that law, that either the donor's consent may be given on his behalf by some one else or registration may be ordered in spite of his not consenting to the registration. These positions are possible under the Indian Registration Act. All that the cases which I have referred to decide is that it is not essential to the validity of the gift of immoveable property that the registration of the deed by which such gift is effected should be either at the instance of or with the consent of the donor. That was the only point decided in Parbati v. Baijnath Pathak (3). In Venkati Rama Reddi's case (4) the question decided by the Full Bench was whether a deed of gift registered by the donee after the death of the donor without the consent of the legal representative of the donor was valid. That is practically the point decided in Khushaba v. Chandrabhagabai (2); and in effect nothing more is decided in Bhabatoosh Banerjee v. Soleman (5). I accept the conclusion reached in these cases that it is not essential to the validity of a gift of immoveable property, to which s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act applies, that registration should be effected with the consent of the donor. But I do not think that the question whether the donor can revoke the gift before the document is in fact registered arose or was considered in any of these cases. The question was considered by this Court in Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (1) and it was held that until the document was in fact registered the gift was inchoate and that it was open to the donor to revoke it before it was completed by registration. It is true that in that case the deed was not in fact registered before the dispute arose: and to that extent it can be differentiated from the present case. The question is whether the ordinary rule applicable to the law of gift that until the gift is completed, it is open to the donor to revoke it is in any way affected by the provisions of the Indian Registration Act under which it is possible that the document can be registered without the consent of the donor at the time of the registration. I do not think that it would be right to apply the provisions of the Indian Registration Act in that way to the rules relating to the law of gift. It is a Statute relating to the registration of documents generally, and has no direct connection with the law of gift. When the law provides that a gift of immoveable property can be effected only by a registered instrument, the stage of completion of the gift is marked by the actual registration. Up to that time it is open to the donor to revoke the gift. It does not matter to my mind whether registration in fact is ordered at the instance of the donor or against his wishes. It is open to the donor to revoke the gift before it is complete, and it is difficult to see how that rule can be affected by the mere fact that registration is possible according to the Indian Registration Act without the consent of the donor, and further that registration, when it is effected, makes the document effective as from the date of its execution. In such cases the question must be whether the donor has merely witheld his assent to the registration or has gone beyond that stage and revoked the gift. Where he has merely withheld his consent and has done nothing more to indicate that he revokes the gift, the cases which I have already referred to would apply. But where he goes beyound that stage and indicates a clear intention on his part to revoke the gift the revocation should be and would be effective despite the fact that registration is subsequently ordered according to the rules of the Indian Registration Act. It is quite true that in Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (1) the act of revocation was absolutely unequivocal and beyond question. In the present case it is not so clear. The present suit was filed long after the registration was in fact effected. But the principle is the same as to whether it is open to a donor to revoke a gift before the document is in fact registered. If it is open to a donor to revoke the gift before registration, it must be determined on the circumstances of each case whether in fact he has revoked it before that stage is reached. In the present case the lower Courts have not appreciated this difference between revocation and mere absence of consent to registration. The difference would be real in many cases; and the question of law that arises for consideration in this appeal is of practical importance. I find it difficult to hold that the ratio decidendi in Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (1) conflicts with the other cases I have referred to in this judgment. But there are observations in the various judgments indicating that the power to revoke before registration would be ineffective when the document is in fact registered and takes effect according to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act as from the date of its execution. This point was not considered and decided in Subba Rama's case (1) but the ratio decidendi of that case is in favour of the view that it is open to the donor to revoke the gift, and that the revocation cannot be affected by the subsequent registration of the donee contrary to the wishes of the donor. Under the circumstances I think that the following questions should be referred to a Full Bench for decision:—

(1) Was it competent to the donor to revoke the gift of immoveable property before the instrument was in fact registered?

(2) If so, whether, the subsequent registration of the document against the wish of the donor makes the revocation ineffective?

Fawcett, J.—In my opinion there is a conflict of view, which vitally affects the decision of this appeal. The first view is that, when an intending donor has executed a deed of gift, attested by at least two witnesses, he has (so far as he is concerned) done all that he need do towards completing the gift, inasmuch as the subsequent registration can be effected without his co-operation and even against his consent, therefore, the doctrine that a donor can revoke an incomplete gift has no application to such a case, and he has no locus pœnitentiæ between the time of execution of the document, and the time of its registration.

This view has, it seems to me, been clearly adopted by the High Courts of Madras and Allahabad in Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama (4) and Parbati v. Baijnath Pathak (3). Both of these cases dissent from Ramamirtha Ayyan v. Gopala Ayyan (9) where the exact point now before us arose, as stated in the passage from the lower Appellate Court's judgment which is cited at page 434, and both of these decisions hold that the law was not correctly laid down in that case. The Allahabad decision also expresses agreement with the judgment of Chamier, J., who expressly rejected this theory of the donor having a locus pœnitentiœ prior to registration of the instrument: See Parbati v. Baijnath Pathak (3).

Though the remarks on the point are perhaps obiter dicta yet the following passge from Batchelor, J.'s judgment in Kushaba v. Chandrabhagabai (2) distinctly favours the same view (page 444*) :—

"It must be remembered moreover that here the donor had done all that it was required of him to do in order to make the gift, and the subsequent registration could have been effected without any co-operation on his part. Further the deed of gift was registered afterwards, and on registration it operated as from the date of execution; and this, we think, is an answer to the technical objection that there was no acceptance of a registered instrument."

The second view is that adopted by this Court in Subba Rama v. Venkatasubha (1) and the Madras High Court in the overruled case of Ramamirtha Ayyan v Gopala Ayyan (9), viz., that the gift is incomplete until the deed has been registered, and the donor can revoke the gift prior to registration.

There being thus two contrary views adopted by different Benches of this Court, and the point being of general importance. I think it should be referred to a Full Bench and concur in the Reference proposed by the learned Chief Justice.

I am inclined at present in favour of the first view. It seems to me that, when the donor has executed a deed, which will be effectual to vest the gift in the donee if it is registered and if the donee accepts the gift, then the stage of an inchoate or incomplete gift has been passed, registration being a subsequent operation independent of his consenting to it. It is an entirely different case to one of a gift resting merely in promise or unfulfilled intention, which under English Law can be revoked at any time: Cf. Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XV, Art. 852 at page 428. I also think that, if the Legislature had intended that a donor should have such a locus pœnitentiœ provision would have been made for it, before saying in s. 126 of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, "save as aforesaid, a gift cannot be revoked." I do not think the argument used in Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (1) that a donor can revoke a gift which is not accepted by the donee and is, therefore, an inchoate gift, is conclusive against the application of s. 126 to an incomplete gift in the sense of a gift by an instrument which has not been registered. English Law lends no support to the view that a donor can revoke a gift that is otherwise complete, before the donee knows of it: and accepts it: the case of Standing v. Bowring (6) in fact decides that he cannot. So far as I am aware, there is no authority to the contrary in India: and, therefore, the statement of Macleod, C. J. that "if the donee has not accepted the gift, clearly it is not complete, and the donor can revoke it" is open to serious criticism: Cf. Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XV, Art. 830 at page 418. But even supposing s. 126 refers only to complete gifts, in the sense of gifts fully effected in the manner stated in s. 123, my present opinion, for the reasons already given, is that there is no locus pœnitentiœ for the donor between execution and registration. I may add that under English Law a deed of gift, which has been formally sealed and delivered, cannot ordinarily be revoked, even though it still remains in the possession of the executing party (Halsbury's Law of England, Vol. XV, Art. 831 at page. 418). In the present case the donor went further and handed over the instrument to defendant No. 1, who presented it for registration. It is not, therefore, a case, where it can be said the donor omitted to do anything which was necessary to be done in order to transfer the property and render the gift binding upon him, to use the language of Turner, L. J , in Milroy v. Lord (10) cited in Behari Lall Ghose v. Sindhubala Dassi (11). It might have been different, if he had not parted with possession of the instrument, for in that case it could not have been presented for registration without his consent. The necessity of registration supplies a reason for saying that the English rule mentioned at the beginning of this paragraph cannot properly be applied in India.

I agree with my learned brother that in the present case the evidence clearly shows that the donor revoked the gift before the document was registered, and as to the form of the two questions to be referred to the Full Bench for decision.

JUDGMENT OF THE FULL BENCH.

Shah, Actg. C. J.—The questions arising on this Reference have been fully and ably argued on both sides. I have already indicated in my referring judgment the view to which I was inclined then, and my reasons for that view. It is not necessary to repeat the facts. I have considered the arguments on both sides and after giving my best consideration to the arguments, my opinion is that question No. 1 should be answered in the affirmative, and question No. 2 should be answered in the negative.

I shall briefly state my reasons for this view in the light of the arguments which have been urged before us. Chapter VII of the Transfer of the Property Act deals with gifts, and s. 122 defines "gift" as "the transfer of certain existing moveable or immoveable property made voluntarily and without consideration by one person called the donor, to another, called the donee and accepted by or on behalf of the donee." It further provides that "such acceptance must be made during the lifetime of the donor and while he is still capable of giving. If the donee dies before acceptance, the gift is void."

Section 123 provides that "for the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and attested by at least two witnesses." In the case of moveable property, the transfer may be effected either by a registered instrument signed as aforesaid or by delivery.

In the present case, we are concerned with a gift of immoveable property and it seems to me to be the clear effect of these two sections that until the document is registered the gift is incomplete in law even though the other two conditions as to the instrument being duly signed and attested and as to acceptance are satisfied. The essentials of a completed gift, according to these sections, appear to be that a transfer of the property is made voluntarily and without consideration by an instrument which is signed by or on behalf of the donor and attested by at least two witnesses, and which is registered, that is, registered in British India under the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents, and that it is accepted by the donee. Until all these conditions are fulfilled, according to my reading of the section the gift is incomplete.

To illustrate my meaning with reference to the essential nature of registration to complete a gift, I may put it in this way. If a document has been executed by the donor, and attested by two witnesses, and delivered to the donee, but neither party takes the trouble to get it registered according to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, and the document remains unregistered, the gift, in my view, is incomplete, and does not take effect. The donor continues to be the owner and the donee would had no rights in the property even though the instrument is duly signed and attested and though the transfer is accepted by the donee.

The next step which I take is that so long as the transfer is incomplete, it is open to the donor to resile from it, and to cancel what he may have done. The gift, in my view, is incomplete according to law so long as the document is not registered, and it is open to the donor to revoke it before it is complete. It is a recognised rule of the law of gift that before the gift is complete the donor can revoke it. As to when the gift can be said to be complete must necessarily depend upon the law of the land. For instance, before the Transfer of Property Act, according to the view taken in this Court, the transfer of possession was considered essential to complete a gift by a Hindu, and where transfer of possession is essential, the gift would be revocable, in spite of the delivery of any written instrument to the donee before the transfer of possession is effected. Similarly, after the Transfer of Property Act, the necessity of transfer of possession to validate a gift is dispensed with, but the necessity for an instrument in writing signed by the donor and attested by two witnesses, and registered according to the provisions of the Act, is laid down. It may be mentioned that whatever be the necessity for the transfer of possession in order to complete a gift by a Hindu before the Transfer of Property Act, the requirements of a valid gift after the Act came to be applied to this Presidency have to be determined with reference to the provisions of the Act. It is hardly necessary to refer to any authority on this point as the effect of the provisions of the Act is clear. I may mention that in Bai Rambai v. Bai Mani (12) this effect has been clearly pointed out.

In the present case, therefore, we are not concerned with the question as to whether possession of the property has been transferred or not. But we are concerned with the question as to whether there has been a transfer of property within the meaning of the Transfer of Property Act. In s. 5 "transfer of property" is defined. I may also refer to s. 9, upon which Mr. Shingne has relied, as indicating that a transfer of property may be made under the Act without writing in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by law. But in the case of a gift a writing is required by law as stated in s. 123, and it is also required to be registered.

I have already stated my reasons in the Referring Judgment for the proposition that an incomplete gift can be revoked by the donor at any time, before it is completed; or, if the use of the word 'revoke' appears inapt with reference to an incomplete gift, I would say that the donor can cancel the transaction before the transfer is effected to constitute a complete gift. The question is whether until the document is registered the gift can be said to be incomplete in the sense that it leaves the power of revocation in the donor unaffected. It is urged by Mr. Shingne for the respondents that the donor's power to revoke is at an end as soon as he has executed a document attested by two witnesses, and delivered it to the donee, and it is accepted by the donee, that the act of registration does not necessarily depend upon the volition of the executant according to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, and that the donor having done all that he need do according to law his power of revocation is at an end. Though there has been a somewhat elaborate discussion of the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, in my view of the case, it is not necessary to deal with the provisions of the Act in detail. It is clear under the provisions, and I readily accept the proposition, that for the purposes of registration, under the Indian Registration Act, it is not essential that the document should be presented by the executant for registration, or that he should be a consenting party to the registration. The document could be presented by any person satisfying the requirement of s. 32 of the Indian Registration Act, that is, by a person executing it or by any person claiming under the document. It is also clear that registration may be effected even though the executant does not consent to registration.

The question to my mind is whether the provisions of the Indian Registration Act as regards registration can affect in any way the law which would govern transactions by way of gift, or they simply regulate the registration of the document when presented for registration. The provisions of the Transfer of Property Act as contained in the definition of the word "registered" in s. 3, and in s. 4 of the Transfer of Property Act, have no effect upon the power of the donor to revoke the gift up to a certain stage which exists independently of the provisions as to the necessity for registration of deeds of gift. I do not think that by making these provisions relating to documents requiring to be registered supplemental to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, the Legislature could have meant to lay down anything more than this, that those documents were compulsorily registrable, though all of them may not require to be registered under the Indian Registration Act. The provisions of the Indian Registration Act, as I understand them, do not and cannot affect the question as to when the power of the donor to put an end to an incomplete gift ceases.

In determining the question under the Indian Law, it seems to me that all technical rules of English Law relating to deeds and delivery of deeds should be left out of consideration. At least they cannot help us in determining this question. In my opinion the question must be determined with reference to the Indian Law which is to be found for the purposes of this case in the Transfer of Property Act. The execution of the instrument and the delivery thereof without registration would not have the effect of effecting the transfer or of completing the gift

I may refer to s. 126 of the Transfer of Property Act, upon which reliance has been placed on behalf of the respondents as indicating that a gift cannot be revoked except as provided in that section. That is perfectly true. But that applies to a case of a completed gift. It does not purport to lay down any rule as to the rights and powers of the donor before the stage of completion is reached.

Reference was made in the argument to the consideration that though in the case of sales and mortgages documents are required to be registered, it is not suggested that the executants would have power to revoke up to the time of actual registration. The argument based on the analogy does not, however, seem to me to be well-founded. It is perfectly true to say, with regard to those documents, as with regard to a deed of gift that the sale is not complete or that the mortgage is not complete until the document is registered, just as a gift would not be complete until the document is registered. But the vendor who has agreed to sell the property and has executed a conveyance not registered or a mortgagor who has executed as instrument duly attested as required by law but not registered cannot be said to have the power to revoke the contract. In the case of a gift, we are dealing with a transaction which is ex hypothesi without consideration, and the right to revoke an incomplete gift in the donor or to cancel his own act before the transfer is effected is an incident of this type of transaction.

As regards the decided cases. I do not consider it necessary to refer to them in detail now. I have considered all the cases; and my view is that, so far as they lay down that it is not essential for the purposes of valid registration that it should be with the consent of the donor, I am in complete agreement with them. But I am unable to agree, so far as the observations or the decisions go to show, that as it is not essential that the donor should be a consenting party to registration, the gift is complete so far as he is concerned as soon as he has executed a document and delivered it to the donee and it is accepted by the donee and it cannot be revoked even though registration is not effected That proposition is largely based upon the rule of English Law relating to deeds and delivery of deeds. I am very conscious that on this point the weight of judicial opinion is against the view which I take. In spite of my desire to accept that view if possible, I remain unconvinced and it becomes my duty to state the opinion which I have formed. As I consider it essential that in the case of a transaction without consideration like a gift, the points arising in this case should be determined with reference to the Indian Law, and as I do not feel any doubt in my mind that a gift is revocable on account of the very nature of the transaction, until it is completed according to law, I hold that the donor has the right to revoke the incomplete gift or to resile from his act before the document is registered. To deny that right to the donor is really to import into the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act a stage in the completion of the gift which is not contemplated or provided for by the Act itself. Shortly stated, I am still of opinion, if I may say so with respect, that the reasoning of the learned Chief Justice in Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (1) is sound and correct.

As regards the second question, it must depend upon the view which one takes of the first question. It is clear that the document when registered would take effect from the date of its execution. But if it is open to the donor to cancel the transaction before the document is in fact registered, it follows that the fact of registration after revocation cannot affect the revocation.

Marten, J.—The questions referred to this Full Bench are in effect whether a donor of immoveable property can at any time before actual registration revoke a gift purporting to have been effected by a registered instrument signed by him and duly attested and accepted by the donee. It is common ground for the purposes of this reference that such an instrument in writing was in fact executed by the plaintiff and attested by two witnesses, and that it was handed to the defendant who accepted the same. It is also common ground that despite the plaintiff's protests the instrument was subsequently registered under the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, 1908.

It is, however, contended by the plaintiff in reliance on Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (1) that he had power to revoke this gift at any time before actual registration and that he did in fact so revoke it. On behalf of the defendant it is contended that this decision is opposed at any rate in principle to several decisions in other High Courts, and that it cannot be supported if the material sections of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, and the Indian Registration Act be closely investigated.

Turning then first to the Transfer of Property Act, which was applied to this Presidency in 1893, it is material to observe that in s. 3 "registered" is defined to mean "registered in British India under the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents." Next, s. 4 provides that "s. 54, paras. 2, 3, 59, 107 and 123 shall be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act.

Next, Ch. II deals with transfers of property by act of parties and it defines a "transfer of property" as meaning "an act by which a living person conveys property, in present or in future, to one or more other living persons, or to himself and one or more other living persons." Section 9 provides that "a transfer of property may be made without writing in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by law."

Then if one turns to ss. 54, 59 and 123 it will be found that in the case of certain sales or mortgages or gifts of immoveable property a registered instrument is required. Section 44 defines "sale" as "a transfer of ownership in exchange for a price paid or promised or part-paid and part-promised." It then enacts that "such transfer, in the case of tangible immoveable property of the value of one hundred rupees and upwards, or in the case of reversion or other intangible thing, can be made only by a registered instrument." It also provides that "a contract for the sale of immoveable property does not of itself create any interest in or charge on such property."

Turning next to mortgages, they are defined in s. 58. Then s. 59 enacts that "Where the principal money secured is one hundred rupees or upwards, a mortgage can be effected only by a registered instrument signed by the mortgagor and attested by at least two witnesses."

Next we come to gifts. Section 122 defines a gift as :—

"The transfer of certain existing moveable or immoveable property made voluntarily and without consideration, by one person, called the donor, to another, called the donee and accepted by or on behalf of the donee. Such acceptance must be made during the lifetime of the donor and while he is still capable of giving. If the donee dies before acceptance, the gift is void."

Stopping there for a moment, as I have already pointed out, there was an acceptance here by the defendant donee, and moreover the document itself was handed to him. So s. 122 was complied with here.

Next we come to s. 123 which runs as follows:—

"For the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and attested by at least two witnesses. For the purpose of making a gift of moveable property, the transfer may be effected either by a registered instrument signed as aforesaid or by delivery. Such delivery may be made in the same way as goods sold may be delivered."

Section 126 provides for revocation of a gift in certain specified events which have not taken place here, and it ends as follows: "Save as aforesaid a gift cannot be revoked."

The use in s. 123 of the expression "registered instrument" has led to the argument that unless and until the instrument is registered, it is no more an instrument within the meaning of the Act than it would be if it had never been executed at all. But I think the proper way to construe this section is first of all to read the definition of "registered" into the section and then see how it stands. It would then run: "The transfer must be effected by an instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and attested by at least two witnesses and registered in British India under the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents." Moreover it is important to observe that ss. 54 and 59 use the same expression "registered instrument." I think, therefore, that that expression should be dealt with in the same way in all these three sections.

Now as regards transfers by sale or by mortgage under ss. 54 and 59, it is not contended that a vendor or a mortgagor could revoke a conveyance or a mortgage at any time before registration. And there is one very good reason for that, viz., that the Indian Registration Act does not necessitate the consent of the transferor being obtained to the registration. Under part 12 of the Indian Registration Act, the Registrar has power to register a document despite the refusal of the transferor, provided he is satisfied that it has been executed. [See s. 75 (1)]. It is only if he refuses to order registration that there is an appeal to the Civil Court under s. 77.

Consequently ss. 54 and 59 of the Transfer of Property Act are construed as necessitating two things, viz., (a) a transfer executed by the transferor, and (b) registration which may be effected by either of the parties, but which does not depend on the consent of the transferor.

Why then should we adopt a different construction in s. 123? The Indian Registration Act does not require the consent of the donor to registration any more than it does that of a vendor or a mortgagor. In fact, the document in question in the present case has been registered under part 12 of the Indian Registration Act despite the donor's active opposition. It is, however, said that we ought to adopt a different construction because the transfers referred to in ss. 54 and 59 are for consideration, but s 123 refers to a transfer without consideration. I agree that in some cases this distinction may make a practical difference as to whether, quite apart from the validity of the transfer, you can obtain specific performance of any antecedent agreement for such transfer. But I entirely fail to see that it affects the validity of the transfer itself. The Act is here dealing with "transfers" and not with contracts. It indeed expressly excludes contracts of sale in s. 54 from creating any interest in or charge on land.

I wish then to emphasize this distinction between transfers or conveyances on the one hand and contracts on the other hand. They are dealt with in separate Acts, viz., the Transfer of Property Act as to the one, and the Indian Contract Act as to the other; and disregard of the distinction between the two can only result in confusion. Further, since the arguments were concluded, my brothers Fawcett and Mulla have pointed out to me that in India under s. 25 (1) of the Indian Contract Act, a voluntary agreement in writing made on account of natural love and affection between parties standing in a near relation to each other is a binding contract if registered. Consequently one might have a voluntary registered contract to transfer under s. 25 (1), which would be as equally binding as a contract to sell or to mortgage. Whether the transfer to be effected in pursuance of that contract would be validly effected or not would depend on whether the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act were duly complied with. If they were, it would be a valid transfer. If they were not, there would in the eyes of the law be no transfer, and the parties would be relegated to their rights under the contract if any. In either event, the validity of the transfer would not depend on the contract nor on the Indian Contract Act. And even as regards contracts, one might get a binding voluntary contract under s. 25 (1) and on the other hand in most cases of mortgage transactions and in some cases of sales, there would be no binding contract at all prior to the document of transfer, though there would normally be some negotiations.

The question then of an antecedent contract or consideration would seem to form no adequate basis for construing the directions as to registration in the sale and mortgage sections in the Transfer of Property Act differently from the corresponding directions in the gift sections of the same Act. In the absence, however, of any argument on s. 25 (1) I give no opinion as to whether specific performance could be obtained of such a contract. So, too, as regards mortgages, there may be difficulties in the way of getting specific performance of an agreement to lend on mortgage: see South African Territories Co. v. Wallington (13) and In re Smelting Corporation (14).

Turning then to the gift sections once more, what are the requisites for a valid voluntary transfer? We have first to see whether we have an instrument duly signed by the donor and attested. Next, if we have, then is it registered? If it is not registered, then under s. 49 of the Indian Registration Act, the document will not affect any immoveable property comprised therein, nor can it be received as evidence of the transactions. But if it is registered, then under s. 47 it is to "operate from the time from which it would have commenced to operate, if no registration thereof had been required or made, (that is, the date of the document) and not from the time of its registration."

This, again is an important point. If the plaintiff is correct, registration is really analogous to execution or attestation; and until all the three requisites are satisfied there is no complete document. If that argument is sound, then the document ought to operate from the date of registration, and not from the date of its execution. In this respect the fact that s. 4 of the Transfer of Property Act directs s. 123 to be read as supplemental to the Indian Registration Act is material. It assists the view that while the ordinary law as to transfer is stated in Ch. II of the Transfer of Property Act, the provisions as to registration are to be effected in accordance with the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, which are the governing provisions and which in no way necessitate the continuing consent of the transferor.

I am accordingly unable to agree with the judgment of Sir Norman Macleod in Subba Rama v. Venkatsubba (1), where he says (page 430*):—"Therefore, a gift is a transfer, and the transfer of immoveable property gifted cannot be effected except by a registered instrument. It must follow that the gift is incomplete until the document is registered." The answer to this contention I have endeavoured to give above, but it is more pithily expressed by Sir Edward Chamier in Parbati v. Baijnath Pathak (3), where he says (page 305†):—"Registration is not the act of the donor but the act of an officer appointed by law to register documents." No doubt in one sense a gift is incomplete until registration, just as transfers on sale or mortgage may in a broad sense be said to be incomplete before registration. But they are not incomplete in the sense that the transferor can annul the transaction. It might equally be argued that an unstamped transfer is incomplete because until it is duly stamped it cannot be put in evidence having regard to s. 35 of the Indian Stamp Act. But it could not be contended that that would enable a vendor or a mortgagor to cancel the instrument before it was stamped, and I do not see why a donor should be in a different position. Stamping like registration does not depend on the donor's will and pleasure, but rests with the assignee and the officers appointed by law for those purposes.

The above decision of Sir Edward Chamier, who subsequently became the Chief Justice of Patna, was afterwards adopted on appeal in preference to the judgment of his dissenting colleague: See Parbati v. Baijnath Pathak (6). The Allahabad Appellate Court included the Chief Justice Sir Henry Richards, and in the course of their judgment it was stated as follows (page 4*):—

"The sole question to decide, therefore, is whether or not it is necessary in order that there should be a valid gift of immoveable property not only that the instrument should be duly executed and attested in the manner provided by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, but also that the registration should be either at the instance of or at least with the consent of the donor. The section merely provides that the gift should be effected by an instrument executed by the donor, attested by two witnesses and registered. In our opinion a document registered in accordance with the provisions of the Registration Act is a registered instrument, and if the document is in fact duly registered in accordance with those provisions the gift is complete and valid. The law does not require that the registration should be at the instance of or with the consent of the donor".

Turning, again, to Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (1) there is no reference in the judgments to the corresponding sections of the Transfer of Property Act dealing with sales and mortgages. We are consequently without the advantage of knowing the exact grounds on which the learned Chief Justice would distinguish the operation of ss. 54 and 59 from s. 123. But, speaking for myself, I entirely agree with and respectfully adopt the judgment of the present Chief Justice of Madras in Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi (4) where, after setting out in detail the more material sections of the Transfer of Property Act and the Indian Registration Act, he proceeds as follows (page 208†):—

"It seems to me that the whole of this machinery for compulsory registration can only apply to cases where in substance the executant of the document or the representative of the executant does not wish to have the document registered. The enquiry will not serve any purpose except on the assumption that the executant desires to withdraw the document from registration. But if the argument to which effect is given in Ramamirtha Ayyan v. Gopala Ayyan (9) is right, in all such cases an enquiry would be wholly beside the point, because all that the donor or his representative has to say is that nothing is to be inquired into. 'I do not think the Registrar is to go at length into the question as to whether I did or did not execute this deed. It is sufficient for me to say that I decline to act upon it and I refuse to register it.' If that is right, of course, it involves this, that the whole of Part XII which is perfectly general in its terms must be confined to transactions other than transactions of gift. There is nothing to indicate any such intention on the part of the Legislature, and for my part, I see no reason at all for the distinction suggested between transfers by gift and transfers by sale. As it is pointed out in some of the text books, the effect of the decision in Ramamirtha Ayyan v. Gopala Ayyan (9) is to draw a distinction which is nowhere indicated in the Act between documents registered with the consent of the executant in the first instance and documents registered with the consent of the representatives...now that the matter has been raised directly before us, my own opinion emphatically is that it is contrary to principle and cannot be supported; and it would create hopeless difficulties and inconsistencies in the matter of registration."

The point was, however, referred to the Full Bench who agreed with the opinion expressed by Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter, and in the course of their judgment it was said (page 211*):—

"The doctrine that a donor who has left his gift incomplete cannot be compelled to complete it, has no application to a case like this; for so far as he is concerned he has by executing the deed done all that he need do, for registration can be effected even without his co-operation."

Speaking for myself, I think that the policy of the Transfer of Property Act is to substitute written documents and registration for oral evidence as regards certain descriptions of transfers. But if a written document duly registered like the one in the present case is to be liable to be upset on some alleged revocation before registration, one main object of the Act is frustrated. The argument advanced by the plaintiffs does not confine the alleged right of revocation to revocation by a written and registered instrument. If then it may be oral, there is at once an opening for a false oral story which will be easy to concoct and difficult to check—an opening which I have no doubt would be seized on with avidity by many a litigant. And as to how many years must elapse before it would be safe to accept any title depending on a voluntary transfer, supposing the Transfer of Property Act be construed in that way, I would leave to those skilled in the Indian Limitation Act to consider.

It was argued by the learned Pleader for the plaintiff that the decisions of Parbati v. Baijnath Pathak (6) and Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi (4) can be distinguished on the ground that in those cases there was merely an absence of consent by the donor to the registration whereas in the present case there was an act of positive withdrawal or revocation. But I am unable to see that in principle there is any essential difference in this particular class of case. The mere use of the word "revoke," as used in the formal questions submitted to us, implies that a gift has already been effected, and not that there is an absence of one of those continuing conditions of consent which are necessary for the efficacy of a transaction before it can be said to be completed. Consequently we are asked to treat the instrument much as if it contained an implied power of revocation in the donor prior to actual registration. If the donor wished to retain any such power, or for the matter of that a more extensive power of revocation, it could easily have been inserted in the instrument. But in fact the instrument contains nothing of the sort, nor in my opinion is there anything in the Act which on its fair construction reserves any such power of revocation in the donor, any more than it does in cases of sales or mortgages. On the contrary, s. 126, as I read it, would appear expressly to negative any such right on the part of the donor. It provides that "save as aforesaid a gift cannot be revoked."

Some reference was made to the fact that the parties are Hindus, and that under Hindu Law, as laid down in these Courts prior to the application of the Transfer of Property Act to this Presidency, possession would have been essential for a gift whether or no a writing was required. But the learned Pleader for the plaintiff evidently found it difficult to contend that prior to the Transfer of Property Act, a Hindu donor could revoke his gift before registration, provided possession had been given. Consequently there seems all the less reason for contending that he should now be given such a power merely because an instrument in writing duly attested is substituted for the possession formerly required under the Bombay decisions for the validity of a gift, and that registration is also required just as it was before if the gift was in writing. I say the Bombay decisions because subsequent rulings of the Privy Council have thrown some doubt upon the point. But I need not pursue the matter further, nor consider the question of possession in the present case which I understand is a disputed point of fact, because as I read s. 129 of the Transfer of Property Act, the validity of a gift is now determined by the Transfer of Property Act under which possession is not essential for the validity of the gift in the present case.

Reference was also made during the course of the able arguments to the English Law of gifts. One of the clearest statements I know of on that subject is the well-known judgment of Sir George Jessel in Richards v. Delbridge (15). He there points out the difference between a valid gift and a declaration of trust, and states that an incomplete gift will not necessarily be treated as a valid declaration of trust. His exact words are (page 15):—

"The principle is a very simple one. A man may transfer his property, without valuable consideration, in one of two ways: he may either do such acts as amount in law to a conveyance or assignment of the property, and thus completely divest himself of the legal ownership, in which case the person who by those acts acquires the property takes it beneficially, or on trust, as the case may be; or the legal owner of the property may, by one or other of the modes recognised as amounting to a valid declaration of trust, constitute himself a trustee, and, without an actual transfer of the legal title, may so deal with the property as to deprive himself of its beneficial ownership, and declare that he will hold it from that time forward on trust for the other person.....The true distinction appears to me to be plain, and beyond dispute: for a man to make himself a trustee there must be an expression of intention to become a trustee, whereas words of present gift show an intention to give over property to another, and not retain it in the donor's own hands for any purpose, fiduciary or otherwise."

In India, as has been pointed out to me by my brother Fawcett after the conclusion of the arguments, s. 5 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, requires a trust of immoveable property to be in writing and registered. We have heard no argument on this section, and, therefore, I give no definite opinion on it. But to me it would seem difficult to argue that the declarant has a locus pœnitentiæ or an implied power of revocation at any time after execution and before actual registration. Here, again, registration could be effected even if he actively dissented.

Kekewich v. Manning (16) is another leading case on the subject of gifts or voluntary settlements. There Lord Justice Knight Bruce had to determine whether an alleged gift or settlement was complete or merely inchoate, and he stated the question in the following terms (page 187):—

"The present case has raised, necessarily or unnecessarily, a question which on several occasions, under different aspects, and in various circumstances, has been brought before this Court, especially since the time of Lord Hardwicke—the question, namely, whether an act or intended act of bounty,—whether a gift or a promised or intended gift, was in truth a perfect act, a completed gift, resting neither in promise merely, nor merely in unfulfilled intention; or was incomplete, was imperfect, and rested merely in promise or unfulfilled intention."

Milroy v. Lord (10), which is cited in the referring judgment of Mr. Justice Fawcett, is another leading case on the subject of English gifts.

It has been argued before us that on the principles laid down in those decisions the donor here has not done all that he could do to perfect the gift, because he himself might have got it registered. But I think that would be stretching the principles of the English Law of gift much too far. If sound, the same argument might also equally apply to a document which was not stamped by the vendor. The answer to it is that it is sufficient if the donor has done all that he need do to enable the donee to get the fruits of the intended gift. The cases of In re Patrick (17) and In re King (18) would tend to show that it will suffice for a valid gift if the settlor has done what is necessary on his part for a voluntary assignment, and has thus enabled his assignees to take any further steps that may be necessary to obtain the subject-matter of the gift. Mallott v. Wilson (19) decides that the mere disclaimer by a voluntary assignee, e. g., the trustee will not render a voluntary settlement inoperative, nor give the settlor any power to revoke the gift unless an express power of revocation has been reserved in the iustrument.

(15) (1874) 18 Eq. 11; 43 L. J. Ch. 459; 22 W. R. 584.

Further, no case has been cited to us to the effect that under the English Law of gift a donor can withdraw a gift at any time before registration, supposing the land is in a county where registration is compulsory. So far as my own recollection goes, there is no such authority, nor have I any recollection of its being customary on sales to frame requisitions asking whether a donor had revoked his gift before registration, as might have been the case if the plaintiff's present contentions are sound in law. There are, however, material differences between the English and the Indian Laws of registration, as is pointed out by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tilakdhari Lal v. Khedan Lal (20). That decision does not, however, refer to s. 20 of the English Land Transfer Act, 1897, which provides that on sales of land in compulsory districts a purchaser does not get the legal estate unless and until the document is registered under that Act. Registration under that Act is quite distinct from registration under the Middlesex or Yorkshire Registry Acts. But I have not thought it necessary to refresh my memory by making any extensive search of the English Authorities on the subject, as after all the case which we have to deal with is a case of Indian land and is governed by an Indian Statute. The real question we have to decide is what is the true effect of that Statute or rather of the two Statutes, the Transfer of Property Act and the Indian Registration Act.

Summarizing then the rival arguments, I find that the plaintiff has to concede that neither a vendor nor a mortgagor can revoke a transfer at any time before registration and that even voluntary transfers do not require the active consent of the donor to the registration. Further a voluntry transfer may in some cases be in pursuance of a binding contract under s. 25 (1) of the Indian Contract Act, just as a transfer on sale or mortgage may be in pursuance of an antecedent contract. But we are asked by the plaintiff to draw a distinction in the case of certain gifts between passive and active dissent to registration, and to say that while the former is immaterial, the latter invalidates the transaction. Speaking for myself I think that this distinction is nowhere to be found in the Acts, and should not be drawn; and that on the contrary the Acts were intended to shut out the very class of evidence on which this distinction if once allowed would normally be based—I mean oral evidence.

After giving then my best consideration to the several contentions put before us in the referring judgments and at the Bar, I have arrived at the conclusion that the decision of the Division Bench in Subba Rama v. Venkatasubba (1) cannot be supported; that the correct principles are those enunciated in Venkati Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi (4) and Parbati v. Baijnath Pathak (6); and that accordingly the first question submitted to us should be answered in the negative. Consequently the second question does not arise.

Fawcett, J.—I retain my former opinion and agree with the judgment of my brother Marten.

I think there is a fallacy in the view that a gift not "completed" till the required instrument has been registered. Section 123 does not use the word "completed" but the word "effected." The distinction to my mind is that a gift may be "complete" so far as the donor is concerned, when he has executed and handed over to the donee, who accepts it, the requisite instrument; but the gift is not legally "effective" as a valid transfer for the immoveable property until the instrument had been registered.

As a similar case, I may refer to the law regarding a non-testamentary and voluntary settlement of immoveable property. Under s. 5 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, this can only be done by an "instrument in writing signed by the author of the trust or the trustee and registered." Section 78 provides that when the trusts of the settlement have been "declared by a non-testamentary instrument," they can only be revoked in exercise of a power of revocation expressly reserved to the author of the trust. If the author of the trust gave the instrument to the beneficiary and the latter got it registered, the language of s. 78 seems to me to be against the supposition that the author of the trust could revoke it before it is actually registered. If that had been intended, one would expect the word "registered" before "non-testamentary instrument": cl. (b) of s. 78.

I agree with my learned brother Marten that the fact of a gift being without consideration makes no difference. This point was discussed in Behari Lal Ghose v. Sindhubala Dassi (11) and the learned Judges say (page 439*):—"The substance of the matter is that although in contracts for sale, mortgage, lease or exchange, there is pecuniary consideration, and in a gift there is no such consideration, the right of rescission is circumscribed by the same set of circumstances."

It is to be noted that s. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act uses the same word "effected," as is used in s. 123 yet it is not contended that the mortgagor has a "locus pœnitentiæ" to resile from the transaction before the instrument of mortgage is registered. It is however, said that the case of a gift is different, because s. 25 of the Indian Contract Act allows the intending donor, in the case of an agreement to make a gift to withdraw it at his will unless the agreement has been registered, as stated in s. 25 of the Indian Contract Act. But this seems to me to beg the question at issue before us. Thus take illustruction (b) to s. 25, viz:—

"A, for natural love and affection, promises to give his son, B. Rs. 1,000. A puts his promise to B into writing and registers it. This is a contract." To my mind, the words of cl. (1) of s. 25 equally apply to a case like that before us, and the illustration might be altered by substituting for the words "and registers it" the words "and hands the document to B, who gets it registered under the provisions of the law in force for the registration of documents." It begs the whole question to assume that, unless A himself registers the document or assents to its registration, there is no valid contract.

The difference of opinion between the members of this Bench seems to turn ultimately on the question whether the requirement of registration is per se essential, irrespective of the consideration that the donor, by handing the document to the donee, has put it out of his power to prevent registration. I can see nothing in the rule as to locus pœnitentiæ laid down in Maddison v. Alderson (20) which extends the locus to such a case. On the contrary Lord Selborne's quotation from Bell's Principles at page 476, viz., "from an obligation to which writing is requisite and has not yet been admitted in an authentic shape," refers prima facie merely to the requirements of execution of a proper instrument and not to any subsequent production of the document or other act of that kind, independent of the will of the executant.

I would also draw attention to the fact that the rule of Hindu Law that a gift is not valid unless it is accompanied by delivery of possession of the subject of the gift from the donor to the donee was not construed to allow the donor a locus pœnitentiæ up to actual delivery, provided the donor had done all that he could to complete the gift: Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (22) and Joitaram v. Ramkrishna (8). This is, in my opinion, weighty authority in favour of applying the same principle to the requirement of registration, in any case where the donor has done all he need to complete the gift and by handing the instrument to the donee has put it out of his power to prevent its registration.

I would, therefore, answer the Reference as proposed by my brother Marten.

Mulla, J.—The facts which have given rise to the present Reference are shortly as follows:—

On September 17, 1917, plaintiff No. 1

(22) 11 C. 121: 11 I. A. 218; 8 Ind. Jur. 638; 4 Sar. P. C. J. 578; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 839 (P. C.).

executed an instrument of gift in favour of the defendant of certain moveable and immoveable properties belonging to him and handed it to the defendant. On September 26, 1917, the defendant presented it for registration Plaintiff No. 1 did not appear before the Sub-Registrar and the Sub-Registrar refused to register the deed. The defendant appealed to the Registrar. During the course of the proceedings before the Registrar the plaintiff appeared before the Registrar and declared his intention not to abide by the writing and denied execution. The Registrar ordered it to be registered and it was accordingly registered, on December 18, 1917. Subsequently plaintiff No. 1 adopted plaintiff No. 2 and they both filed the present suit on August 7, 1920, to set aside the alleged gift and for possession of the properties.

The questions referred to the Full Bench are :—

(1) Was it competent to the donor to revoke the gift of immoveable property before the instrument was in fact registered?

(2) If so, whether the subsequent registration of the document against the wishes of the donor makes the revocation ineffective?

The provisions of the Indian Law bearing on gifts are contained in Ch. VII of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882. "Gift" is defined in s. 122 as a "transfer of...property made voluntarily and without consideration by one person called the donor, to another, called the donee"

Section 123 of the Act is as follows :— "For the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer must be effected by a registered instrument signed by or on behalf of the donor, and attested by at least two witnesses."

By s. 126 it is provided that "the donor and donee may agree that on the happening of any specified event which does not depend on the will of the donor a gift shall be suspended or revoked...A gift may also be revoked in any of the cases (save want or failure of consideration) in which, if it were a contract, it might be rescinded. Save as aforesaid, a gift cannot be revoked."

"Transfer of property" is defined in s. 5 as meaning an act by which a living person conveys property to another living person. By s. 9 it is provided that "A transfer of property may be made without writing in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by law." The expression "registered" is defined in s. 3 as meaning "registered in British India under the law for the time being in force regulating the registration of documents." The law in force regulating registration at the date of the writing in this case was the Indian Registration Act XVI of 1908.

The point involved in the first of the two questions referred to the Full Bench is whether an intending donor who has executed an instrument of gift, attested as required by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, and handed it to the intending donee, has a locus pœnitentiæ or implied power of revocation prior to registration of the instrument, or whether after he has executed and handed the instrument as aforesaid, the plea of locus pœnitentio is barred.

The limits of the rules as to locus pœnitentiæ were thus stated by Lord Selborne in Maddison v. Alderson (21) (pages 476*, 477*):—

"It is not in England only that such a doctrine prevails; a similar (perhaps even a larger) equity is also recognised in other countries, whose equitable jurisprudence is derived from the same original sources as our own. By the Law of Scotland, 'written contracts in strict technical language are those of which authentic written evidence is required, not merely in proof, but in solemnity; as obligations relative to land; or obligations agreed to be reduced to writing; or those required by Statute to be in writing.' To constitute any such contract there must be a 'final engagement'; and as a corollary to that rule a 'locus pœnitentiæ' is given; i.e., 'a power of resiling from an incomplete engagement, from an unaccepted offer, from a mutual contract to which all have not assented, from an obligation to which writing is requisite and has not yet been adhibited in an authentic shape.' But to this 'rei interventus raises a personal exception, which excludes the plea of locus pœnitentiæ. It is inferred from any proceedings, not unimportant, on the part of the obligee, known to and permitted by the obligor to take place on the faith of the contract, as if it were perfect; provided they are unequivocably referable to the contract and productive of alteration of circumstances, loss, or inconvenience, though not irretrievable' Bell's Principles, ss. 18, 25, 26."

Portions of the passage cited above were cited with complete approval by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Mahomed Musa v. Aghore Kumar Ganguli (23) and also in Lakshmi Venkayyamma v. Venkatanarasimha Appa Rao (24). In the former case their Lordships observed that there was nothing in the Law of India inconsistent with the law as stated by Lord Selborne, but upon the contrary, that that law followed the same rule.

Reading ss. 122 and 123 together, a "gift" is a transfer which must be "effected" by registered instrument signed by the donor and attested by at least two witnesses. It follows from these two sections that a gift cannot be said to be "effected" unless the transfer which constitute the gift is itself "effected" in the manner prescribed by s. 123. "In the present case there is an instrument signed by the donor and attested by two witnesses; but before the instrument was registered, the donor declared his intention not to be bound by it, and he actually denied execution before the Registrar. The position then is this, that at the date on which the donor repudiated the transaction, there was no transfer "effected" in the manner prescribed by law and there was no valid and complete gift, in other words, there was no gift at all; see the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sadik Husain Khan v. Hasihm Ali Khan (25) where their Lordships said that "transfer" within the meaning of s. 122 meant prima facie a valid transfer. It is true that in the present case the donor did "all that he need do" towards completing the gift, namely, that he executed the writing and handed it to the donee, but it cannot be said, having regard to the language of s. 123, that because he did so, there was a transfer "effected" by way of gift, for a transfer by way of gift under that section can only be "effected" by a registered instrument. It is also true that having regard to the provisions of the Indian Registration Act, the registration could be effected without the co-operation of the donor and even against his consent and further, that on the instrument being registered, it operates from the date of its execution as distinguished from the date of registration, but it cannot be inferred from this that a transfer by way of gift had been "effected" in the manner prescribed by s. 123 before the date on which the donor drew back from the transaction. It is also true that when the donor executed and handed over the document to the donee, there was a clear intention expressed on his part to give and a clear intention on the part of the donee to take, but that does not conclude the case. The intention must be expressed in the manner prescribed by law, that is by a registered instrument signed by the donor and attested by at least two witnessess. Thus prior to the enactment of the Transfer of Property Act, delivery of possession was necessary in the case of Hindus, to complete a gift, where possession could be delivered. If a donor prior to that Act executed an instrument of gift attested by witnesses and even if he got it registered there was no gift if the transfer was not accompanied by delivery of possession, though the intention to give and to take was unequivocally expressed by the instrument the reason being that the condition prescribed by the law, namely, delivery of possession had remained unfulfilled. And the same was held of a Muhammadan gift in Sadik Husain Khan's case (25) referred to above. It seems to me that the registration prescribed by s. 123 is not mere evidence of the gift, but is part of the gift itself. It is, I think, a necessary part of the proposition that a gift has been "effected." It is not mere evidence to prove that there has been a gift, but it is a fact to be proved to constitute the proposition that there has been a gift. For the above reasons, I have come to the conclusion that at the date on which plaintiff No. 1 resiled from the transaction no transfer by way of gift had been "effected" as required by s. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act, in other words, there was no gift in law. Whether a transfer by way of gift is effected or not is a question to be determined exclusively with reference to the provisions of s. 123. You cannot split the requisites prescribed by the section into two parts, namely, (1) a writing signed and attested, and (2) registration, and say that because according to the English Law a gift is effected when the donor executes a deed of gift, there is a gift "effected" in the present case also, the donor having signed a document attested by two witnesses, and having handed it to the donee. According to the English Law, in the case of a voluntary deed, the donee is entitled to possession of the immoveable property immediately on the execution of the deed. It cannot be suggested that in cases governed by the Transfer of Property Act, a donee is entitled to possession immediately on execution of the instrument of gift and before it is registered. The present case seems to me to be pre-eminently a case in which the analogies of English Law ought not to be applied in construing an Indian enactment nor can you say that, in cases governed by the Transfer of Property Act, a transfer by way of gift may be deemed to be "effected" for the purpose of excluding the plea of locus pœnitentiæ, and not yet "effected" for the purpose of making it a valid gift. It seems to me that the distinction sought to be drawn in this case between a "complete" transfer and a "valid or effective" transfer is far-fetched, and it cannot be supported either in principle or on authority. I readily accept the proposition that a donee under an instrument of gift can have the document registered without the consent and even against the wishes of the donor, but that does not, in my view, justify the proposition that registration is not an essential part of a transfer by way of gift. The gift in the present case, when it was withdrawn, was inchoate and plaintiff No. 1 had, therefore, a locus pœnitentiæ. I do not think that the locus pœnitentiæ was barred by anything done by him subsequent to the execution of the writing. There is no such rei interventus in the present case as could raise a personal exception, which excludes the plea of locus pœnitentiæ.

Such being my view of the case, s. 126 does not apply. It applies only to a "gift," that is, a gift made in the manner prescribed by s. 123. In the present case there was no "gift" on the date on which plaintiff No. 1 resiled from the transaction.

It was contended on behalf of the defendant that s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act which relates to sales and s. 59 of the same Act which relates to mortgages are in terms similar to s. 123 and that if a vendor or a mortgagor cannot after execution of the instrument of sale or mortgage resile from the transaction before the instrument of sale or mortgage is registered, a donor also cannot resile after execution of the instrument of gift and before registration thereof. I feel myself unable to accede to that contention. The reason why a conveyance or a mortgage cannot be revoked after execution and before registration is not because registration may be effected in spite of the donor's protest but because in the case of sales and mortgages once a contract of sale or mortgage is made, neither a vendor nor a mortgagor could rescind it at his pleasure, while in the case of an agreement to make a gift, the intending donor may withdraw it at his will except in the rare cases where an agreement to make a gift is made in favour of a near relation out of love or affection and it has been registered, as provided in s. 25 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872. Even in that case the agreement, according to the view I take of the law, may be terminated by the donor at his pleasure at any time before it is registered.

There are two other sections of the Transfer of Property Act to which I may here refer. One of them is s. 9 which provides that "A transfer of property may be made without writing in every case in which a writing is not expressly required by law." The other is s. 107 by which it is provided that all leases of immoveable property other than those mentioned in the first paragraph of the section may be made "either by registered instrument or by oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession." It was argued on behalf of defendant that as no mention was made of registration in s. 9, registration did not form part of a "transfer," and the transfer in the present case was, therefore, "effected" when plaintiff No. 1 executed and handed the instrument of gift to the defendant. Now it is to be observed that just as there is no mention made of registration in s. 9 so there is no mention made of delivery of possession in that section. If the argument addressed by the Pleader for the defendant were sound, it would follow that a lease of the kind mentioned above could be made merely by an oral agreement, and delivery of possession should be treated, as registration is sought to be treated, as mere evidence of the lease as distinguished from part of the lease itself. Such a proposition is, on the face of it untenable. The fact of the matter is that s. 9 does not deal with the essentials of a transfer. It indicates only two modes of transfer, namely, a transfer in writing and an oral transfer. Transfer by delivery which is one of the alternative modes of transfer in the case of gift of moveable property is not mentioned in the section, and yet transfer by delivery is undoubtedly one of the modes of transfer. Section 9 does not purport to deal with the various modes of transfer. The modes of transfer are prescribed in ss. 54, 59, 107 and 123. Section 9 says no more than this that where a writing is not expressly required by law, a transfer may be made without writing. It simply recognises oral transfers. The marginal note to the section, namely, "Oral transfer," indicates the scope and intent of the section. Upon long consideration, I have reached the conclusion that the first question must be answered in the affirmative and the second question in the negative. Before concluding this judgment I feel I ought to say that the case was argued with remarkable ability by the learned Pleaders on both sides. Indeed, it could not have been argued better.

Kincaid, J.—I agree with the judgment given by my learned brother Marten, and would answer the Reference in the manner indicated by him.

Shah, Actg. C. J.—In accordance with the opinion of the majority, the answer to the first question will be in the negative. There will be no answer to the second question as being unnecessary.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20—Part payment—Payment by cheque—Date of payment, determination of—Partnership—Goods supplied on inspection—Dissolution of partnership—Return of goods rejected—Suit to recover price of goods retained—Liability of partners.

Where goods are sent to a partnership on inspection at a time when the partnership is subsisting, the fact of the subsequent dissolution of the partnership cannot have the effect of absolving the members of the firm at the time when the goods were sent, from liability in respect of the price of the goods, though the cause of action for a suit to recover such price may not have accrued until the return of the goods which were not required, which return takes place after the dissolution of the partnership [p. 509, col. 1.]

When a payment is made by cheque and the cheque is received as payment by the payee it operates as a payment from the date on which it is delivered to the payee though this is subject to a condition subsequent that if upon due presentation the cheque is not paid the original debt revives. [p. 510, col. 2.]

Where a payment by cheque is relied upon as an acknowledgment or part payment within the meaning of s. 20 of the Limitation Act, the date of the acknowledgment or part payment must be taken to be the date on which the cheque was delivered to the payee and not the date on which the cheque was cashed. JUDGMENT.—This is a suit to recover a sum aggregating Rs. 4,069 as the balance of the price of goods sold and delivered. The plaintiff sues two defendants, William Morley and Percy T. Andrews, who he says until January 1921 were carrying on business in partnership under the name and style of Morley and Andrews. While they were so carrying on business in partnership, he supplied at the end of October or beginning of November 1920, the goods specified in the first bill annexed to the plaint, and on the 17th November 1920 the goods specified in the second bill annexed to the plaint. Subsequently more goods were sent to the defendants on inspection. That was in the month of December. In the month of January 1921 the firm was dissolved and later some of the goods were returned. He accordingly made out against the defandants the third bill for the value of the goods retained.

The defence put forward by the defendant Morley, who is appearing in person, is a denial that he at any time had the goods or that he was ever in partnership with his co-defendant and he submits that the claims are barred by limitation.

The defendant Andrews has challenged one of the items appearing in the first bill and denies liability for the amount of the third bill, on the ground that the partnership, which he admits, was dissolved in the month of January 1921.

The points that arise for decision, therefore, fall under three different heads, first as to the orders and details of the bills, secondly, whether there was any partnership so as to make the defendant Morley liable, and lastly the question of limitation.

With regard to the details of the bills, the vouchers have been proved and there is no doubt in my mind that the details given are correct and that the goods were ordered by Andrews and were supplied.

With regard to the items specified in the third bill, I find that the goods were sent on inspection during the time that the partnership, if there was a partnership, was subsisting. The fact of the subsequent dissolution of such alleged partnership cannot have the effect of absolving the members of the firm, at the time when the goods were sent, from liability, though the cause of action may not have accrued until the return of the goods which were not required. I, therefore, find as regards the third bill that the defendant Andrews is liable, and also Morley, assuming he was a member of the firm.

With regard to the question of partnership, I do not think there can be any question upon the evidence that Morley was a partner. His case is that he was engaged in business elsewhere, and the arrangement between him and Andrews was that he was to devote such time as he could spare from his other business for the purpose of doing work in this tailoring business, which was carried on under the name of Morley and Andrews, and for that purpose he was to attend in the morning and evening. He says he was to have a half-share in the net profits and denies that he was in any way liable for the losses. The plaintiff appears to have regarded him as a partner, though there is no substantive evidence to the effect that he was a partner given by the assistants who have given evidence. But there is the statement of the defendant Andrews, and it was admitted by Morley himself not only that the business was carried on in the name of Morley and Andrews but that there was a banking accounts in such name upon which he was entitled to draw cheques. He has also admitted that he signed a lease of the business premises, though he says that he did so as a surety. His explanation as to the use of his name is that without his name no tailoring business would have been done.

I find that at the time with which I am concerned the defendant Morley was in partnership with Andrews, and as such may be liable to the plaintiff.

I now come to the question of limitation. I will dismiss at once any question of there being a continuous account, such as was before the Court in Kedar Nath Mitter v. Dinobandhu Shaha (1). It is clear from the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff that separate and distinct orders were given for the items comprised in the three bills. The bills were submitted separately and the plaintiff refers in the plaint to the causes of action which arose on the 2nd November 1920, the 17th November 1920 and the 14th May 1921, clearly treating the subject-matter of the three bills as giving rise to different causes of action.

The plaintiff alleges in his plaint that on the 6th January 1921 the defendants paid Rs. 1,000 by cheque. This is relied upon as an acknowledgment under s. 20 of the Limitation Act. In point of fact it now appears from the evidence given on behalf of the plaintiff by Balmukund Khettry and from the evidence of the defendant Andrews that the cheque was paid by the defendant Andrews to Balmukund Khettry on the afternoon of the 5th January 1921, and so far, therefore, as the cheque extends the period of limitation under s. 20, the fresh period of limitation must be computed from the 5th and not the 6th January 1921. The plaint was filed on Monday, the 7th January 1924, but if limitation should be computed from the 5th January 1921, then obviously it ought to have been filed on the 5th January 1924.

Before I deal with this, there is one small point, and that is that the first bill amounts to Rs. 1,200-11; the second bill amounts to Rs. 2,362-3. The payment was Rs. 1,000, which does not even cover the total amount of the first bill. In his plaint, the plaintiff says that the sum was a part payment of the two bills, and this appears from an entry in the plaintiff's cash book, where the payment is entered to these terms:—"Received from Messrs. Morley and Andrews in part payment of bills Nos. 1705-13 by cheque.....Rs. 1,000."

The defendant Andrews in the witness-box has stated that he gave a cheque in payment for the two pieces of serge which are to be found in the first bill and that the balance of the goods were to be returned. Nothing of the sort, suggesting appropriation by Andrews, was put in cross-examination to the plaintiff's witnesses. It seems to me rather strange that a sum not even sufficient to cover the first of the two bills should be appropriated to the two bills, in order, if necessary, to save limitation in respect of each; but nevertheless the plaintiff is in law entitled so to do unless an appropriation has been made by the person making the payment. In my opinion, there was no such appropriation by Andrews when the payment was made and the plaintiff was entitled to make the appropriation in that manner, and the entry in the cash book certainly supports him.

But the dates present a more serious difficulty in the way of the plaintiff. It has been contended that though the cheque bears the date the 5th January, and though it was paid to the manager of the plaintiff on that date nevertheless the actual payment from which the fresh period of limitation should be computed is the date of payment when the cheque was presented at the Bank. There is not before me any evidence as to the actual date when the cheque was presented and paid at the Bank, but inasmuch as it was handed over to the plaintiff's representative after-banking hours on the 5th January, I will assume that it was paid on the 6th January 1921, and this would suffice for the plaintiff's purpose, if his contention is otherwise correct. In support of this contention I have been referred to Gorden v. Bruce (2). That was a suit for money lent The plaintiff in lending the money handed the defendant a cheque for the amount. The defendant paid it into his Bank and received credit. The plaintiff's bankers paid the cheque some days later. The question there arose whether limitation ran from the date when the cheque was handed by the plaintiff to the defendant or from the date when it was met by the plaintiff's banker's and it was decided that the action being one to recover money lent limitation only ran from the date when payment was made by the plaintiff's bankers. A number of authorities were there cited in support of the proposition that a cheque, unless dishonoured, is payment, and the learned Chief Justice said in his judgment:—

"I quite agree with all the cases that have been cited, but in all of them the cheque has been treated as an acknowledgment of a pre-existing debt. Here the debt did not accrue till the payment of the cheque."

In those words lie the essential difference between that authority and the case which I have to decide. I have to consider the cheque which was paid on the 5th January from the point of view of an acknowledgment of the pre existing debt. But the matter, in my opinion, is covered by authority, by which I am bound, viz., the case to which I have already referred.

There the learned Chief Justice said:—"It seems to me clear that if a cheque be delivered to a payee by way of payment and is received as such by him it operates as payment and is an extinguishment to that extent of the debt, though this is no doubt subject to a condition subsequent that if upon due presentation the cheque is not paid the original debt revives."

It is clear that the learned Chief Justice was treating the cheque as the payment, for later on he observes:—"If I am right in the view that the cheque actually was a payment the very payment was in the handwriting of the person making the same."

The plaintiff, it appears to me, is in this dilemma, if the payment is not the cheque itself, in which case there is no doubt that the fact of the payment appears in the handwriting of the person making it, then the payment is the payment by the Bank clerk across the counter on presentation of the cheque or as otherwise may occur, and in such case the fact of the payment does not appear in the handwriting of the person who makes it

I hold that there was no acknowledgment within s. 20 of the Limitation Act, and in consequence the claims based upon the first two bills are barred by limitation, but for the reasons which I have already given as to goods comprised in the third bill, I think the plaintiff is entitled to recover, and consequently there will be judgment against both the defendants for Rs. 1,501-8, with costs on scale No. 2, interest on judgment at 6 per cent.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 1440 OF 1921:
February 24, 1925,
Present:— Justice Sir Henry Scott-Smith, KT., and Mr. Justice Martineau.

NAWAB—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
HUKAM DIN—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), ss. 12, 20, 22—Agreement to sell immoveable property—Penalty for default—Specific performance, whether should be decreed.

A party to an agreement to sell immoveable property cannot be allowed to evade specific performance of the agreement merely because the agreement provides a penalty to be paid on default.

In a suit for specific performance of an agreement to sell immoveable property the onus is upon the defendant to show that the case is one in which the Court should not exercise its discretion and grant specific performance in favour of the plaintiff.

Hukam Chand v. Nikka Singh, 15 P. R. 1908; 97 P. L. R. 1908; 27 P. W. R. 1908, followed.

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Sargodha, dated the 29th April 1921.

Mr. Gullu Ram, Lalas Anant Ram Khosla and Tirath Ram, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Zafrulla Khan, M. A. K. Janjua and Chaudhri Shahab-ud-Din, K. B., for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Sargodha, granting the plaintiff a decree for specific performance of an agreement to sell about two squares of land executed by the defendant in his favour on the 8th September 1919. The price agreed upon was Rs. 14,000. Each of the parties executed an agreement which will be found printed at pages 4 and 5 of the paper book, and each of them agreed that if he made a breach of his agreement he would pay Rs. 1,000 as damages to the othe party. The lower Court saw no reason why the contract should not be specifically enforced and followed s. 20 of the Specific Relief Act. Counsel for the appellant admits now that his client did agree to sell the land to the plaintiff for Rs. 14,000. He also admits that the defendant committed a breach of the agreement and says that he is willing to pay Rs. 1,000 as damages for that breach according to the stipulation in the agreement. He urges that this is a case where specific performance should not be enforced. Now s. 20 of the Specific Relief Act is as follows:—

"A contract, otherwise proper to be specifically enforced, may be thus enforced, though a sum be named in it as the amount to be paid in case of its breach, and the party in default is willing to pay the same."

Now there is nothing in the contract itself which shows that Rs. 1,000 was to be considered as full compensation for any breach. The case reported as Hukam Chand v. Nikka Singh (1) is very similar to the present one and there it was held that a party should not be allowed to evade specific performance merely because the agreement provided a penalty to be paid on default. In this connection also the terms of s. 12 of the Specific Relief Act must be borne in mind. The explanation to this section is as follows:—

"Unless and until the contrary is proved, the Court shall presume that the breach of a contract to transfer immoveable property cannot be adequately relieved by compensation in money."

The onus, therefore, was upon the defendant to show that this was a case in which the Court should not exercise its discretion and grant specific performance in favour of the plaintiff. Counsel has referred to s. 22 of the Act in which it is alleged that the jurisdiction to decree specific performance is discretionary and the Court is not bound to grant such relief merely because it is lawful to do so. In this case, however, there is prima facie no reason why specific performance should not be decreed. No fraud is alleged and it is not proved that the price agree upon was an inadequate one. On the contrary we have the evidence of Chaudhri Muhammad Ismail, Colony Assistant, printed at pages 24 and 25 of paper book 'A' who gave his opinion that the price of Rs. 14,000 fixed in the agreement was a reasonable one. No circumstances whatsoever have been shown to us by Counsel for the appellant which disentitle the respondent from getting the agreement in his fovour specifically enforced and we accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 11, 13, 21—Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Order for delivery of possession—Statement as to rent, admissibility of.

A statement contained in an order for delivery of possession as to the rent payable in respect of the land, is not admissible in evidence in a suit between the landlord and the tenant in which the rent payable is in dispute.

Pramatha Nath Choudhuri v. Krishna Chandra Bhattacharjee, 84 Ind. Cas. 420; 28 C. W. N. 1092; (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 1067, relied on.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, First Court, Maymensingh, dated the 24th of January 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, Third Court at Netrakona, dated the 19th of June 1917.

Babu Kalikinkar Chakravarti, for the Appellant.

Babu Paresh Lal Shome for Babu Birendra Kumar De, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal, which has been preferred by the plaintiff, arises out of a suit in which the plaintiff claimed paddy-rent from the defendant and the defendant contended that the rent that he had to pay was not paddy-rent but money-rent at Rs. 2. per year. The suit was decreed by the Court of first instance and that decree has been upheld by the lower Appellate Court.

Two points that have been urged on behalf of the appellant: Firstly, that the learned Subordinate Judge in arriving at his finding on the question as to whether the rent that was payable for the holding was paddy-rent or rent at Rs. 2 per year, as alleged on behalf of the parties, relied on a recital contained in a document Ex. 3 which is not admissible in evidence as against the present plaintiff; and secondly, that in arriving at the said finding the learned Judge has omitted to take into consideration the evidence that there is on the record relating to the payment of produce rent by the defendant to the plaintiff.

So far as the first point is concerned, the document, Ex. 3, is an order for delivery of possession. The statement to which an objection is taken appears in the schedule attached to that order in which after describing the jama it is stated that the rent for it is Rs. 2 per year. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon the case of Pramatha Nath Choudhuri v. Krishna Chandra Bhattacharjee (1) The whole law on the subject has been fully discussed in that case and although the document the subject-matter of that decision is different from the one with regard to which an objection has been taken in the present case and in that respect that case is distinguishable from the present one, it cannot be said that the present document comes under the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act relating to the admissibility of documents. The circumstances under which the statement came to be made in that document do not appear and it is not possible to say either that the statement amounts to an admission or that it is such that it comes either under s. 11 or s. 13 of the Indian Evidence Act. In our opinion the statement is not admissible in evidence in the present case.

So far as the second ground urged on behalf of the appellant is concerned it appears that there is some evidence to the effect that the paddy-rent was paid by the defendant or his predecessor to the plaintiff. What the value of that evidence is it is not for us to assess; but the learned Subordinate Judge was certainly wrong in observing in his judgment, as he has observed, that there is no evidence to prove that Askar or after him the defendant delivered produce to the plaintiff. The judgment of the learned Sudordinate Judge must, therefore, be set aside and we accordingly do set it aside and send the case back to his Court in order that the document, Ex. 3, be excluded as being inadmissible and the appeal dealt with afresh after taking into consideration the evidence to which I have referred.

Costs will abide the result.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 363—Kidnapping, what constitutes—Minor leaving guardian's protection—Intention—Offence.

In order to support a conviction for kidnapping from lawful guardianship the following are the points which require proof:—

(1) That the person kidnapped was then a minor under sixteen years of age, if a female.

(2) That such person was in the keeping of a lawful guardian.

(3) That the accused took or enticed such person out of such keeping.

(4) That he did so without the consent of the lawful guardian. [p. 513, col. 2.]

The mere fact that the minor leaves the protection of her guardian, does not put her out of the guardian's keeping, but if she abandons her guardian with no intention of returning, she cannot be held to continue in the guardian's keeping. The decision of the question in each case depends upon the facts of the case. [p. 513, col. 2; p. 514, col. 1.]

Criminal Revision against an order of the Third Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta.

Messrs. Langford James, Camell and Babu Satindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Khondkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner R. W. Valliant has been convicted by the Third Presidency Magistrate, Calcutta of an offence punishable under s. 363, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to be detained till the rising of the Court and to pay a fine of Rs. 200 or undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. He has obtained a rule calling on the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show cause why the conviction and sentence passed on him should not be set aside on the two following grounds:—.

"For that upon the facts found and proved in the case, no offence under s. 363 has been made out against the accused and the learned Magistrate has erred in law in not holding so."

"For that the reasons given by the learned Magistrate for convicting the accused are unsound and illegal."

The petitioner has been convicted of having kidnapped Mildred Eleazar aged about 15 years and 5 months from the lawful guardianship of her mother. It appears that about two months before the date of occurrence, the 24th May last, the petitioner and the girl met and struck up a friendship. This friendship ripened into affection. The girl's mother and brother disapproved of this. There was an episode on the 20th May which led to the girl being chastised by her mother. On the afternoon of the 24th May there was a quarrel between the girl and her brother. They kicked each other and the girl left her home and went to the house of a friend Mrs. Victor. From there she wrote a letter to her mother in which she said she was not coming back. At Mrs. Victor's she was met by the petitioner and the two went to the house of Mrs. Christian a sister of Mrs. Victor. The girl wanted to stay the night there but Miss. Christian's brother did not consent to this. The petitioner who had left the girl in order to fulfil an engagement as a musician at the Saturday Club returned to the Victors at about 8 P. M. and took her to his mother's house in Kidderpore where she remained for four days. In the meantime the Police had been informed of the disappearance of the girl. The petitioner when questioned about the girl denied knowledge of her whereabouts but after he was arrested he wrote to his father and the girl was produced and made over to her mother.

In order to support a conviction for kidnapping from lawful guardianship the following are the points requiring proof:—

(1) That the person kidnapped was then a minor under 16 years of age if a female.

(2) That such person was in the keeping of a lawful guardian.

(3) That the accused took or enticed such person out of such keeping.

(4) That he did so without the consent of the lawful guardian. In the present case it has been established that the girl Mildred Eleazar was under 16 years of age and that she was in the keeping of her mother who was her lawful guardian prior to her leaving her home on the 24th May. The question we have to decide is whether it has been proved in this case that the petitioner took or enticed the girl out of the keeping of her mother. Several cases decided by English and Indian Courts were cited before us including those to which reference has been made in the judgment of the lower Court. In these cases the following important principles have been laid down: The mere fact that the minor leaves the protection of her guardian does not put her out of the guardian's keeping. But if the minor abandons her guardian with no intention of returning she cannot be held to continue in the guardian's keeping. Which principle should be applied to a particular case depends on the facts of that case. We are in some difficulty in the present case as the learned Magistrate has not stated clearly the facts found by him on which he bases his conviction of the petitioner. The guilt or innocence of the petitioner depends on whether when the girl left her home she did so of her own accord and had definitely decided not to return or whether her conduct was mere petulant outburst in consequence of a quarrel with her brother. The girl's evidence gives us no assistance. She has told two totally different stories to the Police and to the Magistrate and her attempt to explain away her former statements is too absurd to need discussion. Her mother is not a witness on whom we can place implicit reliance. A most important piece of evidence on the question of the state of the girl's mind when she left home would be the contents of the letter which she wrote to her mother from Mrs. Victor's house. This letter has been withheld by the prosecution and all we know of its contents is that she wrote that she was not coming back. Further the Victors who could have given important evidence on this point have not been produced. The petitioner acted foolishly in denying knowledge of the girl's whereabouts when questioned by the Police. But the explanation he has given in his written statement that he thought she would be ill-treated if sent back to her mother does not appear to us unreasonable. On a full consideration of the oral and documentary evidence in the case we hold that the prosecution has failed to prove that the petitioner has committed an offence punishable under s. 363, Indian Penal Code.

We accordingly make this Rule absolute. We set aside the conviction and sentence of the petitioner and acquit him of the charge on which he was tried. The fine if paid will be refunded.

Z. K. Rule made absolute.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 186—Obstruction to public servant—Refusal to sit on panchayat with certain members, whether offence.

The accused when asked by the Sub-Divisional Officer to sit on a panchayat with a member of the depressed classes refused to do so and told the Sub-Divisional Officer that the panchayat would cease to exist and instigated his fellow panches and other persons not to sit with members of the depressed classes in the panchayat:

Held, that the accused was guilty of bad manners and was not a good citizen or a useful member of the community but that there was nothing in his conduct which would bring him within the purview of s. 186 of the Penal Code. [p. 516, col. 1.]

Criminal Reference made by the Additional Sessions Judge, Cawnpore at Banda, dated the 19th January 1925.

REFERRING ORDER.—This is an application for revision against the order of the District Magistrate, Hamirpur, dated the 10th November 1924 convicting the applicant under s. 186, Indian Penal Code and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 50 in a summary trial.

The prosecution was started on the written complaint of B. Bhagwati Prasad Sinha, Sub-Divisional Officer who is said to have been obstructed by the applicant in his attempts to re-organise and re-constitute the Korara panchayat according to the orders of the District Magistrate.

The Sub-Divisional Officer in his complaint Ex. D says that he called the panches with their records at his camp in Damar and they came as instructed. He proposed to them the inclusion of a member of the depressed classes in the panchayat but this displeased Ram Ghulam applicant who is one of the panches and he eyed the other panches and declared that the panchayat would cease forthwith. He, the Sub-Divisional Officer, argued with him for a while but this only increased his defiance and the other panches remained sullen. Then Shiam Sunder, the brother of the sarpanch, who had brought the papers, was asked to keep the papers with him and he took them away but shortly after he returned and threw the basta containing the papers and went away and when he was sent for he came with Ram Ghulam applicant and when asked to explain his conduct Ram Ghulam replied that the panchayat had ceased to work and Shiam Sunder repeated the same. Then next morning when he (the Sub-Divisional Officer) went to Korara to ascertain the local feelings about the present panches he discovered that Ram Ghulam had been instigating others not to work in the panchayat and as a result of it the sarpanch refused to work and the other panches gave only a half hearted consent.

Nothing more than what is stated in the complaint appears to have been stated by the Sub-Divisional Officer in his deposition before the District Magistrate because the District Magistrate in his judgment says: "Under the Government orders the Magistrate had to see if a member of the depressed classes could also be appointed to the new Korara panchayat Accused took offence at the order of sitting with a low caste man and declared that the panchayat would cease to function forthwith. He spoke for himself and for his brother panches. The Magistrate tried to expostulate but the accused evidently mistook it for weakness and showed more defiance. His fellow panches taking their cue from him sulked and sullenly stood by his side in his mischievous attempt at obstruction. The accused and Shiam Sunder brother of the sarpanch Gopi Nath went away after throwing the books and registers upon the Magistrate. They had to be sent for again and then they came and insulted the Magistrate. The following morning the Magistrate went to ascertain the local feeling but to his natural surprise he discovered that his apology notwithstanding the accused, had been instigating his people and arranging that no body should accept the membership of the new constituted panchayat.

The District Magistrate appears to be wrong in saying that the accused threw the basta on the Magistrate because the complainant says that Shiam Sunder threw the basta and went away and then returned with the applicant.

The Sub-Divisional Officer no doubt in his complaint says that he was thwarted, opposed and obstructed by the applicant in discharging his public duties and was insulted by him after he came with Shiam Sunder and the District Magistrate also finds that he was obstructed and insulted but what took place appears to be simply this that the accused when asked to sit with a member of the depressed classes refused to do so and told the Magistrate that the panchayat would cease to exist and instigated his fellow panches and other persons not to sit with the members of the depressed classes in the panchayat. He had not thrown the basta upon the Magistrate and his merely telling the Magistrate in reply to a question put to Shiam Sunder that the panchayat had ceased to exist, insulting though it was, would not make him criminally liable becouse mere abuses have been held not to constitute obstruction (Ratan Lal, 9th Edition, page 375). The Sub-Divisional Officer was, no doubt, hampered in the performance of his public duty by the refusal of the applicant and by his instigations but I do not think that the applicant's conduct amounted to voluntary obstruction within the meaning of s. 186, Indian Penal Code. In order to constitute voluntary obstruction within the meaning of s. 186, Indian Penal Code, there must be the commission of some positive overt act of obstruction and not merely a sort of passive resistance and refusal to carry out orders as would appear from Queen-Empress v. Sommanna (1).

There is no legal evidence to support the conclusion that the accused had been instigating others not to act in the panchayat after his apology of the first day because the Sub-Divisional Officer is the only witness examined in the case and he could not have seen or heard any body being instigated in his absence in Korara. He must have come to know of these instigations the next day from others who have not been examined as witnesses in the case. Persuations addressed to tenants in the absence of a Receiver not to pay rent to him were held not to constitute obstruction [Ebrahim Sircar v. Emperor (2) and Matu Ram v. Emperor (3)] although the accused had beaten the lambardar who was helping a Naib Tahsildar in performance of his duties and as the result of that beating the lambardar refused to help the Naib Tahsildar, the accused was held not to have committed any criminal offence. A person spreading false reports and thereby preventing persons from taking their children for vaccination was held not to have committed any offence under s. 186, Indian Penal Code. [Queen-Empress v. Thimmachi (4)].

Under the Village Panchayat Act the Collector or with his permission the Sub-Divisional Officer could have appointed any member of the depressed classes to be a panch. The applicant might have been left free to sit with him or not. He need not have been consulted or argued or expostulated with but if the Sub-Divisional Officer consulted him or wanted to bring him round to his own view the applicant could very well express his own opinion and I think he could induce his fellow panches also to hold the same opinion. To hold him criminally liable would be unduly widening the scope of s. 186, Indian Penal Code.

In my opinion the conduct and the acts of the applicant, however, blameworthy, do not fall within the meaning of s. 186 and he does not appear to me to have voluntarily obstructed the Sub-Divisional Officer within the meaning of that section. I would, therefore, submit the record to the Hon'ble High Court with a recommendation that the conviction and sentence of the applicant be set aside.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—I have read the order of the District Magistrate and his explanation. I am unable to support his order. I see his point of view. The applicant undoubtedly behaved very rudely. His manners were bad and he was clearly determined to be offensive but I cannot find that there is anything upon which a conviction can be based for an offence under s. 186. The applicant was at perfect liberty to resign from the panchayat and there is nothing in the law to prevent his advising whomever he may meet not to serve on the panchayat.

He no doubt is not a good citizen or a useful member of the community in so far as his actions in this matter are a guide but I cannot find anything which to my mind can support a conviction of voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions.

I accordingly accept this Reference set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the fine if paid be refunded.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 294-A—Lottery—Publication of proposal to pay—Offence.

Petitioner issued a circular relating to a lottery in which he stated that the Sweep would close on a particular day and that the Draw would take place on a certain day under the supervision of the patrons stated in the tickets and that the prize winners would be notified of the result by telegram. Prizes of different values were mentioned in the circular and orders were solicited :

Held, that the accused was guilty of an offence under s. 294-A of the Penal Code.

Criminal application against conviction and sentence passed by the First Class Magistrate, Surat.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner was charged under s. 294-A, Indian Penal Code, for publishing during the months of April and May last a circular of the so-called lottery of the Athlone Club Annual Sweep, popularly known as the Derby Sweep, to be drawn on June 4, 1924, for selling tickets thereof. The Magistrate convicted him and sentenced him to pay a fine of Rs. 25, in default to undergo simple imprisonment for eight days.

The petitioner applies to this Court in revision. The following are the terms of the circular issued by the petitioner:

"Annual Sweep on the Derby in Aid of St. Peter's Building Fund of the Athlone Club.
June 4th, 1924.
Prizes.

	Rs.
1st Horse £5,000	75,000.
2nd Horse £2,500	37,500.
3rd Horse £1,000	15,000.
Divided amongst Unplaced £. 1,000	15,000. Starters.
50 Special Prizes of £. 25	375 each.
160 Special Prizes of £. 10	150 each.

The Sweep will close on the 23rd May 1924, and the Draw under the supervision of the patrons stated in the tickets will take place on May 26, 1924. Prize winners will be notified by telegrams.

The above Sweep tickets can be obtained from the undersigned. Price of each ticke

Rs. 10 only. On a Draw a commission of 6¼ per cent. will be deducted from the prize amount. Money in advance.

Section 294-A runs as follows:—

"Whoever keeps any office or place for the purpose of drawing any lottery not authorized by Government shall be punished with imprisonment of either description for a term which may extend to six months, or with fine, or with both.

And whoever publishes any proposal to pay any sum, or to deliver any goods, or to do or forbear doing anything for the benefit of any person, on any event or contingency relative or applicable to the drawing of any ticket, lot, number or figure in any such lottery, shall be punished with fine which may extend to one thousand rupees."

It is contended that the petitioner has not thereby published any proposal to pay any sum for the benefit of any person relative or applicable to the drawing of any ticket, lot, number or figure in any such lottery, that is to say, a lottery such as is referred to in the first paragraph of the section. The case appears to us to be sufficiently covered by the decision in Queen-Empress v. Mancherji Kavasji Shapurji (1). In that case the proprietor of a Bombay newspaper who published an advertisement in his paper relating to a Melbourne lottery was held to be punishable under s. 294-A, Indian Penal Code. The first question for the Court to decide was whether a foreign lottery was within s. 294-A. We have nothing to do with that question in this case. The second point was whether the publication of a proposal to pay any sum for the benefit of any person on any event or contingency relative or applicable to the drawing of any ticket, lot, number or figure in any such lottery, was punishable. The Court said at page 100*:—

"To answer the second question we have to determine what is the meaning of the word 'published' in this section. We do not find any definition of the word in the Indian Penal Code, and we must, therefore, take that word in its ordinary sense. Thus taking it, it seems to us that if A sends an advertisement to B, the proprietor of a newspaper, for publication, B is punishable as well as A for such publication."

Now, clearly the circular which was published by the petitioner did contain a proposal to pay within the meaning of the second paragraph of s. 294-A, Indian Penal Code. It was not necessary that the payment proposed to be made should be made by the person advertising. That was decided by the case we have referred to. The circular states that "the Sweep will be closed on May 23, 1924, and the Draw under the supervision of the patrons stated in the tickets will take place on May 26, 1924. Prize winners will be notified by telegrams." It is clear, therefore, that the petitioner published a proposal to pay and the conviction was right. We reject the application.

DIN DAYAL—APPLICANT

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 107—Security proceedings Assault case, evidence and judgment in, whether can be considered -Security, when can be demanded—Amount of security, how to be fixed.

Where a Magistrate is trying a security case and an assault case on the same day against the same persons, there is no harm if he uses his knowledge of the one to govern his judgment in the other, and makes such use appear in his judgment. The logical result, if the persons in both the cases are the same, ought to be that if the Magistrate convicts them in the assault case and thinks that they ought to be bound over he ought to bind them over as part of the decision of the assault case. The result of that would be that when the assault case is upset in appeal, the binding over would be upset too. [p. 518, col. 1.]

Where, however, the persons accused in the assault case are not identical with the persons against whom security proceedings are being taken, the proceedings and judgment in the assault case cannot be taken into consideration in arriving at a conclusion with regard to the security proceedings. [p. 518, col. 2.]

Where there are old standing feuds between two parties or two branches of a family which in the course of events have come to a head by a very serious and heavy litigation, it does not necessarily follow that a Magistrate ought to assume a possibility of a breach of the peace, and bind over one party or the other to keep the peace under s. 107 of the Cr. P. C. [p. 519, col. 1.]

Where orders under s. 107 of the Cr. P. C. are made against certain persons who have been acting on behalf of their masters, the amount of security required should not be fixed in such a way as to leave the masters no alternative except on the one hand to lose their servants by refusing to become sureties for them so that the men would have to go to jail or, on the other, to be bound hand and foot by very onerous securities for the conduct of men who might leave their masters the next day and pursue at the instigation of the other side a consistent course of legalized blackmail upon their former masters. [p. 519, col. 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Cawnpore.

Dr. Kailas Nath Katju, for the Applicant.

Mr. R. Malcomson (Assistant Government Advocate), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—I am unable to find any justification for this order. It lays itself open to such serious criticisim that it is difficult to know where quite to begin. The order of the Deputy Magistrate, by which expression I mean the judgment, is mainly based upon a case which he had heard himself in which some of these persons were involved. I will deal with the question of the personnel in a moment. But it is quite plain that although he referred to other matters, he could not leave out of his mind the case of assault which he referred to, and which he had heard the same day. That case of assault in which he convicted has been upset, and, therefore, three-fourths of the judgment of the Deputy Magistrate disappears. I will refer to the judgment in which it was upset in one moment. There would have been no harm, and it would have been only natural for him, trying a security case and an assault case on the same day against the same persons, to use his knowledge of the one to govern his judgment in the other, and to make such use appear in his judgment. The logical result, if the persons were the same, ought to be that if he convicted in the case of assault and thought the persons ought to be bound over, he ought to bind them over as part of the decision in the assault case. Further, the logical result of that would be that when the assault case was upset in appeal, the binding over would be upset too. In the result we have a judgment in a security case based largely, if not entirely, upon an assault case, which no longer exists.

It may be said in answer to this criticism that the accused in the assault case and in the security case were not the same. But if that is a just criticism, then the judgment and the decision in the assault case had no bearing upon the security case and was irrelevant and ought not to have been referred to. In fact as regards four of the people who are before me, and who were before the Magistrates in the Courts below in this case, the proceedings and judgment in the assault case were wholly irrelevant, because they were no parties to the assault case, and, therefore, the judgment of the Deputy Magistrate is irregular in using knowledge of another case. Although he cannot forget it and returns to it from time to time in the course of his judgment, he appears to be conscious that it requires support from other directions. The support which it requires can only be described as faint-hearted. The Deputy Magistrate sets them out and says somewhat quaintly:—

"These events are not proved very strongly so as to make them an offence. They certainly give a fear in the mind of one about the safety of his life."

But if they are not proved sufficiently to make out an offence, they are not proved sufficiently to establish in a judicial mind the fact of reasonable apprehension. I am unable to understand the view of the District Magistrate about this acquittal in appeal. He says that the fact of the acquittal did not help the applicants before him. But the acquittal was subsequent to the order of the Deputy Magistrate, which was before him in revision, and if the subsequent acquittal did not help the case of the applicants, I cannot understand why the District Magistrate thought that their conviction helped the case against them, which was practically the main ground on which the Deputy Magistrate had proceeded. But, as a matter of fact, if the District Magistrate had taken the trouble to study the judgment of the Sessions Judge—I do not complain of his having failed to do so, because I think he ought to have quashed the order of the Deputy Magistrate at sight without further examination—he would have found that the Sessions Judge acquitted the accused in that case, and, therefore, two of the applicants in revision before the District Magistrate, upon the ground that it was not made out beyond reasonable doubt that they were present at the occurrence at all. He would also have discovered that his subordinate officer, the Deputy Magistrate, had used in the judgment recording the conviction, an alleged statement as coming from the Civil Surgeon by way of expert medical evidence, which was not to be found. The Sessions Judge said that neither he, nor the prosecution, nor the defence, have been able to discover on the record any evidence justifying the finding with reference to the medical testimony arrived at by the Deputy Magistrate. This, of course, is a very serious matter, and having regard to the order of the Deputy Magistrate which I now propose to deal with, it ought to have opened the eyes of the District Magistrate to what was going on. The order which has been passed is, I hope, without precedent. I have asked in vain for the production of any precedent to justify it, and it appears to me to be outrageous on the face of it. Reduced to plain language, it looks very much as though the Deputy Magistrate thought that where there were old standing feuds between two parties or two branches of a family, which in the course of events had come to a head by a very serious and heavy litigation, one might always assume a possibility of breach of the peace, and bind over one party or the other to keep the peace under this section. If that theory became an established practice, a very large proportion of the litigant population of the United Provinces would inevitably have to be bound over, and the scarcity of sureties would become so great, that a considerable number of the litigants would find themselves in jail failing their ability to find anybody left to give security. But if, on the other hand, the Deputy Magistrate came to the conclusion that the servants of the three persons, who allege themselves to be the reversioners and who are the plaintiffs in the suit which has been filed, were really doing the wicked work of their masters, and were acting under their instigation and encouragement in either threatening or compassing the death of this expectant heir under the rule, and there was evidence upon which he could come to such a conclusion, then he ought to have found that fact against the masters and ordered them to give security. But he has discharged them, which makes his order inconsistent in terms with the main structure of his judgment. If, on the other hand, the masters have been rightly discharged and there is no evidence against them, then the case against the servants for having so conducted themselves as to create an apprehension of the breach of the peace on account of the litigation between their masters and the other branch of the family, entirely breaks down. Yet he has made them provide sureties, which, as regards them and the circumstances of their case, assuming that their masters are innocent, are not only excessive, but which the Deputy Magistrate knew was impossible, and which he intended to be a punishment for the masters whom he was discharging. The objections, legal and otherwise, to such an order are obvious. The Deputy Magistrate went as near as he could to compel the masters to give their surety. He says in his judgment:—"The amount seems to be appropiate to their masters standing surety for them." Of course he had no jurisdiction to make that order, but he made an order in such a form as to leave the masters no alternative except, on the one hand, to lose their servants by refusing to give sureties so that the men would have to go to jail, or being bound hand and foot by very onerous securities for the conduct of men who might leave their masters the next day and pursue at the instigation of the other side a consistent course of legalized blackmail upon their former masters. The order looks like a subtle attempt to procure by indirect means what the Magistrate professes by his former order to be unable to do by law, and I am surprised that the District Magistrate did not see through it. I am surprised also that he did not see through the palpable mala fides of this application. It followed immediately upon the masters and the servants, who are now before me, having applied in the Civil Court for the appointment of a Receiver, which resulted in these complainants being ordered to give security in the amount of Rs. 5,000. It was not founded upon any public report or complaint by the Police, but palpably on the allegation of a private individual, who was apparently smarting under a counter-move which had been taken by his opponent in the civil litigation. All this is so transparent, that the failure of the District Magistrate to see through it, can only be explained by his order in which he says that he is not going into the evidence. But it is a fact that the Deputy Magistrate who has made all these curious orders, is the same Deputy Magistate who has made an order favourable to the same side in mutation proceedings on the revenue side, and although I have no jurisdiction over him or the District Magistrate except in criminal matters which are brought within the Code, I would suggest to the District Magistrate that, as a matter of administrative procedure, it would be well if the Deputy Magistrate were prohibited for all time from adjudicating upon any matter in which these persons are concerned. If I were his superior officer, there are certain matters upon this record which I should call upon him to explain. It is possible that somewhere or another in this case there lurks trustworthy evidence that somebody has done some act indicating that he is contemplating a breach of peace. There is no evidence before me of anything of the kind, and, therefore, I can only quash all the orders which have been made, and suggest to the District Magistrate that if he thinks that further proceedings of any kind are necessary, it should be directed against persons about whom there is some evidence.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 25, 26, 167—Confession made to Police Officer in foreign territory, whether admissible—Conviction—Appeal—Conviction, whether can be upheld.

For the purpose of applying the provisions of s. 26 of the Evidence Act it is immaterial whether the accused was in Police custody in British territory or in foreign territory at the time when he made the confession which is sought to be put in evidence against him. [p. 522, col. 1.]

Where a confession has been improperly admitted in evidence it is permissible for an Appellate Court under s. 167 of the Evidence Act to uphold the conviction, if independently of the confession the Court is of opinion that there is sufficient evidence on the record to justify the conviction, but where the Court is unable to say how far the judgment of the Trial Court and the opinion of the Assessors was influenced by the improper admission of the confession and where it is probable that if the Assessors had not known of the confession at all they might have looked at the rest of the evidence in an entirely different light, the conviction cannot be upheld. [p. 522, col. 2.]

Per Fawcett, J.—There is no qualification of the expression "Police Officer" in s. 25 or s. 26 of the Evidence Act and a confession made to a Police Officer whoever that Police Officer may be, and whether he is a Police Officer in British territory or a Police Officer in foreign territory, is inadmissible. JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The accused by name Mhabli Rama Sail from Majali, a British village, on the boundary between British and Portuguese territory in the Kanara District was charged with having committed the murders of three persons on or about September 27, 1917, at Lolliem in Goa territory. The Portuguese Authorities commenced the preliminary investigation at once but it does not appear that any names were mentioned in connection with the crime. At any rate it was not suggested that the name of the accused was mentioned in any official record, or that any request was made to the British Authorities, as the accused belonged to a British village, to make a search for him. At the present Trial Ex. 13 said the news of the murder spread in a few days and it was rumoured that accused might have committed it. He was going from Majali side to Lolliem on the day of the murder when the witness met him about 11 A. M. and asked him where he (accused) was going. He said he was going to purchase cocoanuts. It is certainly very strange, if this witness had told the Investigating Officer that he had seen the accused on the day of the murder going towards Lolliem and that the accused actually told him that he was going to purchase cocoanuts, that suspicion did not arise against the accused, and that no attempt was made to discover whether he was present in his own village at Majali or any other place in British territory. If the evidence of Ex. 13 is now given for the first time it is of very little value. It appears that nothing further was done in the matter till 1922 when the accused was arrested by the Portuguese Authorities as being connected with a murder that had been committed at a place called Thalna. He was brought before a Portuguese official called 'Administrator' whose duty it was to investigate cases although he was not empowered to try them. The Administrator in his evidence at the present trial said :—

"The accused was arrested in connection with a murder committed at Thalna. I was investigating that case as I am empowered to investigate into such offences. I did not do it as a Police Officer. I have nothing to do with the Police. They are not under me but under the commandant. The accused was brought into my office to be questioned in connection with the Thalna murder. When I was inquiring into the Thalna murder, as I knew of the temple murder of Shedi, I asked him about it on April 17 and on two successive days What he stated was taken down in writing?"

While the proceedings were pending the accused escaped from the Portuguese Authorities. He was arrested again in September 1922 in British territory, but the extradition proceedings fell through as the Portuguese Government did not produce evidence. However the Portuguese Government then approached the Bombay Government to sanction the prosecution of the accused in British territory, and sanction was given under the provisions of s. 188, Cr. P. C. The Kanara Police were not willing to proceed with the case without a guarantee from the Portuguese Government that the latter would produce the necessary witnesses who were not subject to the process of the British Courts, and this guarantee was not obtained till December 1923. It is certainly remarkable that although the Portuguese Government would not produce the necessary evidence to secure the extradition of the accused, they asked the British Authorities to sanction the prosecution of the accused in British t[illegible]ory, and laid the responsibility on [illegible] collect sufficient evidence to [illegible]mmitment order. The Sessions [illegible]nce against accused consists [illegible](now retracted and retract-[illegible]ict Court of Quepem in [illegible]istrator of Kankon [illegible]tement of Rosa [illegible]king but not [illegible]e who states [illegible] to the house on the day in question to buy cocoanuts and remained there till witness left after finishing her work late in the evening, still shelling cocoanuts which they made a pretext for staying so late an hour. Evidence of the confession was given by the Administrator (Ex. 5) and his clerk (Ex. 8) who both refreshed their memories by referring to a copy of the document recorded at the time."

The first question to be answered is whether the evidence of the confession tendered by the prosecution was admissible under the Indian Evidence Act? There is a further difficulty in this case, because the proceedings taken by the Portuguese Authorities were not in any way in accordance with criminal procedure in British territory, where there is no office corresponding to the office of an Administrator. The Government Prosecutor at the Trial conceded that the Administrator was not a Magistrate and that his inquiry was an extra-judicial proceeding. The real question then was whether the confession was made while the accused was in Police custody. Because if he was in the custody of the Police and the Administrator was not a Magistrate, clearly the confession was not admissible in evidence under s. 26 of the Indian Evidence Act. There seems to have been an argument before the Sessions Judge whether the Administrator was a Police Officer and if he was, whether a statement made to him could be proved under s. 25. The learned Judge on this point remarks :—

"It appears that witness as Administrator is an officer with general executive duties; in criminal matters it is apparently left to his discretion what cases he should investigate; but he is not technically a Police Officer nor as a matter of substance does he appear to be so, any more than the District Judge who actually went to the spot in 1917 and conducted a far more active investigation."

So far I can agree.

Then the question was whether on the allegation of the accused that he was in Police custody the confession so made was a good one. The Judge says :—

"The accused was arrested on April 8, 1922; he remained in Police custody till May 15; he was examined by the Administrator on April 17 and following days. The Police brought accused to the Administrator's office on April 17 and took him away when his statement was taken; the Police stood in the verandah and did not come into the Administrator's office. This is the usual procedure in bringing an accused person to a Magistrate for confession; and it has been held that in such circumstances the accused is still in Police custody—Queen-Empress v. Lakshmya (1). It may be argued that s. 26 of the Evidence Act does not apply to Police Officers in foreign territory when such Police Officers are not in any way concerned with the investigation of the case; if they or their superiors have no interest in securing the conviction of the accused the reason for the provision in s. 26 disappears. In the present case the investigation appears to have been conducted by the Judicial and the Executive Authorities except for the minor part played by the Justice of the Peace who was also Police Patel."

This paragraph of the judgment is quite inconclusive. There is no decision of the Judge that the accused when he made the statement before the Administrator was or was not in Police custody. Clearly the accused was in Police custody, and it makes no difference for the purpose of applying the provisions of the Indian Evidence Act that he was in Police custody in foreign territory.

Then the Judge considered whether the confession was voluntarily made and came to the conclusion that there was no substantial ground for holding that the confession was not a voluntary confession. I can only conclude from that part of the judgment that the Sessions Judge had determined, although he did not say so directly, to admit the evidence. Otherwise there would be no necessity to consider whether this confession was voluntary or not. It was unfortunate in a case of this importance, when the whole case for the prosecution practically turned on the question whether the confession was admissible or not, that there should be no decision of the learned Judge on the point, beyond the fact that he allowed the evidence to be recorded. When he came to sum up the evidence he said:—

"In reviewing the evidence in the case I feel on firmer ground in discarding the confession of the accused on the ground that it was made in the presence of the Police and relying on the evidence of Rosa."

I can only assume that the Judge, when he said that the confession was made in the presence of the Police, meant that it was made when he was in Police custody, for the words 'in the presence of the Police' do not appear either in s. 25 or s. 26. Although the evidence was discarded, as a matter of law it ought never to have been admitted, and as it was admitted, it is impossible to say what influence it had on the Judge's appreciation of the remaining evidence in the case. We may take it that the Judge convicted the accused practically on the evidence of Rosa alone although in one or two particulars he considered it was corroborated by other evidence.

* * * * *

I do not dispute the fact that under s. 167 of the Indian Evidence Act it is permissible for us, in spite of the improper admission of the confession in evidence, to uphold the conviction if, independently of the evidence objected to, we thought there was sufficient evidence to justify the decision of the Sessions Judge, but I think that if the Judge and the Assessors had known nothing more beyond the fact that the accused had made a statement before the Administrator, they would have looked at the rest of the evidence in an entirely different light. On a consideration of the circumstances of the case, and the very meagre evidence after so many years with regard to the identity of the accused, it seems to me, following the usual rule with regard to the weighing of evidence in criminal cases, that there are no sufficient grounds for upholding the conviction. I, therefore, think that the appeal should be allowed and that the accused must be acquitted and discharged.

Fawcett, J.—I agree that, if the confession before the Administrator is excluded, there is no other evidence which is sufficient to justify the conviction of the accused. Having regard to the lapse of time since the alleged crime, I do not think the prosecution evidence relied on is sufficient or reliable enough to bring the charge of murder to the accused beyond reasonable doubt, although there is considerable suspicion.

As regards

(1) Rat. Un. Cr. C. 885; Cr. Rg. No. 22 of 1896.

might be admissible had the trial taken place in the Portuguese territory. But as the appellant has been tried in British India its admissibility must be judged by the rules contained in the Indian Evidence Act. The Administrator before whom it was made is no doubt not a Police Officer in the ordinary sense, and he appears to have a position somewhat analogous to that of a Committing Magistrate in the British India. He says that he can investigate any case within his jurisdiction and he sends the papers to the District Judge, who has authority to try the case. It is, however, only the District Judge who is empowered to sentence an accused, and the Administrator himself is not empowered to try the case. It is, I think, impossible, in view of the last named fact, to treat him as a Magistrate in the ordinary sense in which that word is used. It is also clear that the Public Prosecutor in the lower Court gave up the contention that he could be treated as a Magistrate. The accused undoubtedly was in Police custody when he made this confession, and the only argument which can possibly bring the case outside the terms of s. 26 of the Indian Evidence Act is the one referred to by the learned Sessions Judge, when he said:—

"It may be argued that s. 26 of the Evidence Act does not apply to Police Officers in foreign territory when such Police Officers are not in any way concerned with the investigation of the case; if they or their superiors have no interest in securing the conviction of the accused the reason for the provision in s. 26 disappears. In the present case the investigation appears to have been conducted by the Judicial and Executive Authorities except for the minor part played by the Justice of the Peace who was also Police Patel."

This contention, however, is directly opposed to the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in In the matter of Hiran Miya (2) where it is said that it is immaterial whether the Police Officer be the officer investigating the case, the fact that such person is a Police Officer invalidates the confession. There is no qualification of the expression "Police Officer" in s. 25 or s. 26, just as there is no qualification of the word "Magistrate" in s. 26 and on that account it was held in another case, Faiz Ullah v. Emperor (3), that the word "Magistrate" in s. 26 would cover a Magistrate, even though he were on leave and at the time not in the District in which he had been exercising jurisdiction. It seems to me impossible to say that s. 26 does not directly apply to this particular case and, therefore, the confession must be excluded as inadmissible. Accordingly I agree that the conviction should be reversed and the accused acquitted.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 51 OF 1925.

BABU RAM—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 307, 326, 336, 511—Arms Act (XI of 1878), ss. 14, 19 (f)—Firing gun in air—Rash and negligent act—Attempt to murder or cause grievous hurt—Gun fired by brother of license-holder—Illegal possession of arms.

Section 336 of the Penal Code contemplates a lawful act, but it punishes the same act which is otherwise lawful only if it is done in a rash or negligent manner. [p. 524, col. 2.]

A person who deliberately throws brickbats at passers-by and wants to shoot them and for that purpose aims a gun and fires shots, is guilty of an attempt at murder or of an attempt to cause grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon of shooting and not merely of an offence under s. 336 of the Penal Code. [ibid.]

When riots are taking place in different parts of a town a man possessing a gun may very well fire shots just to indicate to would-be mischief-makers that there are arms of defence in the house and that any body who might be mischievously inclined might take care of his safety. Such an act would not amount to an offence under s. 336 of the Penal Code. [p. 524, col. 2; p. 525, col. 1.]

Merely firing a shot is not punishable as an offence in itself. [p. 525, col. 2.]

The brother of a person who held a license for a gun took out the gun at a time when riots were taking place in different parts of the town and fired shots in the air so that people mischievously inclined might know that it was not safe for them to do any mischief to the people living in the house:

Held, that the possession of the gun by the person who fired it was on behalf of and with the express or implied permission of the license-holder and that, therefore, the person firing the gun was not guilty of an offence under s. 19 (f) of the Arms Act. [p. 526, col. 1.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Kumaun, dated the 13th February 1925.

Mr. G. W. Dillon, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against a conviction of the applicant under s. 336 of the Indian Penal Code and another conviction under s. 19 (f) of the Arms Act. The sentence was one of two months' rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 50 fine under the former conviction and one of two months' rigorous imprisonment under the latter, the sentences of imprisonment running concurrently.

The charge against the applicant under s. 336 of the Indian Penal Code, as it is to be found in the charge sheet, is as follows:—"You on or about the 10th day of Mohurrum this year at 4 P. M. or after threw bricks from your roof and fired gun from the same roof in such a rash manner that it endangered human lives of persons who were passing on the roads near about your mohalla."

The learned Magistrate who convicted the applicant in his judgment stated as follows:—"The evidence showed that there was a communal riot in the city of Pilibhit in different parts of it. The accused threw brickbats at the Muhammadans who were passing by the lane close to his house and not only this but he fired two shots at them from his house but fortunately no one was hit." At another place the learned Magistrate said 'I am inclined to think that it was for these reasons only that the shot missed the aim and nobody was hit or killed.'

The impression that I have gathered from reading the judgment of the learned Magistrate is that he found, on the evidence, that the appellant deliberately threw brickbats at Muhammadan passers-by and he deliberately aimed a gun and fired two shots at the said persons and that it was a matter of pure luck that nobody was injured. The learned Sessions Judge who heard the appeal does not clearly say what he found on examination of the evidence. He contented himself with the following remark:—

"I am of opinion that the evidence fully substantiates the case against the accused."

Now, if the case against the accused was what the learned Magistrate found to have been proved, the charge under s. 336 of the Indian Penal Code was an utterly insufficient and improper charge. Section 336 of the Indian Penal Code contemplates a lawful act. But it punishes the same act which is otherwise lawful only if it is exercised in a rash or negligent manner. If the finding be accepted that the applicant deliberately threw brickbats at passers-by and wanted to shoot them and for that purpose aimed a gun and fired shots, he was clearly guilty of an attempt at murder if not of an attempt to cause grievous hurt with a dangerous weapon of shooting.

It is for this reason that I have been utterly unable to understand the judgments of the Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge.

To satisfy myself as to how the charge of such a light character, as a charge under s. 336 is, could be brought on the evidence accepted as true. I examined the statements of the witnesses, myself. My examination of the statements and the remarks of the learned Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge that allowance had to be made for communal bias and exaggeration and want of observation, etc., satisfy me that the prosecution understood that nothing serious was really meant by whatever the applicant may have done and that all that was wanted to be punished was the firing of the gun at a time when possibly communal feeling was running high. If the evidence of some of the witnesses, e.g., Kuttub-ud-din, Fazal Ahmad and Nur Ahmad is to be believed the applicant deliberately wanted to shoot Muhammadans passing by his house. On the other hand the evidence of the other witnesses would indicate that shots were fired in the air.

The position, therefore, is this. If the finding of the learned Magistrate is what he has mentioned in his judgment and if that finding has been upheld by the learned Sessions Judge, the trial must be quashed and the applicant should be ordered to be committed to the Court of Sessions so that he might undergo a trial by a Superior Court of Criminal Jurisdiction with an appeal (in a serious case like this) to this Court. On the other hand, if the charge was nothing but of firing gun during communal tension, it can hardly be said that any offence has been committed. When riots were taking place, as the learned Magistrate has stated in the judgment, in different parts of the town, a man possessing a gun may very well fire shots just to indicate to the would-be mischief-makers that there were arms of defence in the house and anybody who might be mischievously inclined might take care of his safety.

The result, therefore, is that either the conviction should be set aside and a re-trial ordered or the conviction should be set aside in toto.

As I have said, I have examined the evidence and I am of opinion that the latter course is the only course which is open to me. The evidence will not sustain a charge of an attempt at murder or attempt at causing grievous hurt with a gun.

I accordingly set aside the conviction and sentence under s. 336 of the Indian Penal Code and order that the fine, if paid, be refunded.

Coming to the charge under s. 19 (f) of the Arms Act. The position seems to have been as follows. Communal riots were taking place in different quarters of the town. A brother of a license-holder took out the gun and fired shots in the air so that people mischievously inclined might know that it was not safe for them to do any mischief to the people living in the house. The question would then be whether a temporary possession like that would come under s. 19 (f) of the Arms Act.

Cases must be decided on their own particular circumstances and unless a decided case, lays down a general principle, it is no sure guide.

The charge against the applicant is that he was in possession of arms, in contravention of the provisions of s. 14 of the Arms Act. That rule of law lays down that it is unlawful to be in possession of any fire arms without a license. It is common ground that the brother of the applicant, living in the same house as the applicant held a license for the gun. Then the question arises, whether the gun, at the time the shots were fired, had ceased to be in the possession of the license-holder and had passed into the possession of the applicant?

The answer to the question must be based on some definite principle. The word possession is a well-known word in law, and a man may be in possession of a thing without being in physical touch with it. A locks up a vacant house. He will be deemed to be in possession of the same. A, a license-holder of a gun living at Allahabad and holding a license for that District may go to Calcutta leaving his gun at his house in charge of the servants or his wife. The possession of the wife and the servants would be the possession of the license-holder and it cannot be said that the wife and the servants are in possession of an unlicensed gun. Similarly, a servant cleaning a gun for his master or carrying it for him to the Police Office, for an inspection by an officer there, is not in possession of an unlicensed gun. But if the same servant takes out the gun without the permission of his master and commits an offence with it, or goes out for a mere show in a marriage procession, his (the servant's) possession would be unlawful. The reason is that the possession is not on behalf of the master but on behalf of the servant himself.

Again, it has to be remembered that the license for holding a fire-arm is a personal privilege, and the licensee is not entitled to use the gun as he may lawfully use any other article of his. The owner of a car may lend it to a friend, but he cannot lend his gun to him. In the former case the possession of the friend would be the possession of the owner, but the possession of the friend, in the case of the gun, may not necessarily be the possession of the license-holder. The reason is this. The law aims at the control of fire-arms in the country and the object of law would be defeated if the privilege granted to comparatively few people could be extended beyond its terms.

Bearing, then, the two somewhat antagonistic principles in mind, I have to see whether the possession of the applicant, at the time he fired the shots, was on behalf of his brother who held a license or whether it was on his own behalf? Further if it was on behalf of his brother, whether the applicant's possession was one which is not permitted by the principle underlying the Arms Act which I have to construe?

It is to be remembered that mere firing a shot is not punishable. If, therefore, the applicant was within the law, in holding the gun in his hand, at the time he fired the shots, he must be treated as innocent. The first of the two questions propounded above is one of fact. I have already stated the circumstances in which the shots were fired. I have found that the firing of the shots had the object of scaring away the mischief-makers. The use and object were both lawful. In the circumstances, it must be taken that the possession of the gun by the applicant was on behalf of and with the express or implied permission of the brother, the license-holder. The next question is whether in the grant of the permission of the use of the gun given by the license-holder, he, in any way, contravened the principle of 'personal privilege'? I think he did not, I have already pointed out that the mere firing of a gun is not an offence. The personal privilege to possess a gun was not in any way abused by the license-holder's brother firing a few shots with it, for a lawful purpose and for the benefit of the license-holder or his family. If the license-holder can ask his brother to clean his gun, he may ask him to fire a few shots to scare away, say, the crows. If these two acts be not unlawful, the license-holder may lawfully ask his brother to scare away possible assailants by firing the gun.

I am, therefore, of opinion that no offence has been committed under the Arms Act s. 19 (f).

The case of Muhammad Hasan v. Emperor (1) is clearly distinguishable, on the facts. The son of the license-holder had taken the gun out of the house and was out for shooting. This was quite contrary to the spirit of the license, though the possession of the son was the possession of the father, in the wider sense of the term.

The result is that I set aside the conviction under the Arms Act as well.

The convictions and the sentences are set aside and the applicant, who was admitted to bail by the learned Judge of this Court who admitted the application, need not surrender. The fine, if paid, will be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 192, 202, 203, 204—Cognizance taken by Magistrate—Order directing investigation—Transfer of case for consideration of report, validity of.

Sub-section (1) of s. 192 of the Cr. P. C. empowers a Magistrate to transfer a case for enquiry or trial, but it does not empower him to transfer a case simply for the purpose of considering the report of an investigation under s. 202 of the Cr. P. C., which he has himself ordered. [p. 527, col. 1.]

The provisions of s. 192 or of s. 202 of the Cr. P. C. do not entitle a Magistrate after he has proceeded under the latter section to make an order under the provisions of the former section transferring the case to another Magistrate for the purpose of being dealt with under s. 203 of the Code without a fresh investigation as contemplated by s. 202 of the Code. [ibid.]

Rule against an order of the District Magistrate, Howrah, affirming that of the Deputy Magistrate, Howrah, dated the 3rd August 1924.

Babu Haradhan Chatterjee, for the Petitioners.

Babu Mritunjoy Chatterjee, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The complaint in the present case was filed before Mr. D. Dutt, Deputy Magistrate of Howrah, on the 10th May 1924, and he on examining the complainant was of opinion that it was apparently a petty altercation and he made an order that Babu H. P. Roy Chaudhury, an Honorary Magistrate should enquire into it and submit a report. This order was evidently passed under the provisions of s. 202, Cr. P. C. In ordinary course on the report of Mr. H. P. Roy Chaudhury being submitted Mr. D. Dutt could have either dismissed the complaint or issued process. Matters, however, took quite a different turn. After several adjournments in consequence of the report not having arrived, Mr. D. Dutt on the 1st August 1924, passed an order which ran as follows :—" The cross-case has been disposed of by Mr. A. C. Bose. This case is, therefore, sent to him for disposal." It may be said that there was a cross-case which had in the meantime been disposed of by the Deputy Magistrate Mr. A. C. Bose. On the 2nd August 1924, Mr. A. C. Bose looked into the report of Mr. H. P. Roy Chaudhury, Honorary Magistrate, which it is said had already been submitted before Mr. D. Dutt and which evidently had been sent along with the papers to Mr. A. C. Bose, and finding from the report that there was no case against the accused persons dismissed the complaint under s. 203, Cr. P. C. In doing so it may be stated Mr. A. C. Bose referred also to the fact that he had disposed of the cross-case. Thereafter the complainant filed a petition for revival, the proceedings in connection with which need not be referred to in detail, with the result that ultimately Mr. A. C. Bose issued summons against the petitioner.

The validity of the proceedings in connection with their transfer from the file of Mr. D. Dutt to that of Mr. A. C. Bose, is challenged on behalf of the petitioners and it is contended that Mr. A. C. Bose was not properly in seisin of the case and any order issuing process passed by him must accordingly be held to be an order passed without jurisdiction.

We have already stated that Mr. D. Dutt on receipt of the complaint had chosen to proceed under the provisions of s. 202, Cr. P. C. When he had done so evidently he thought of proceeding under s. 192 (1) Cr. P. C., as well. That sub-section empowers the Magistrate to transfer a case for enquiry or trial, but it does not empower him to transfer a case simply for the purpose of considering the report of an investigation under s. 202, Cr. P. C., which he has himself ordered. In the present case Mr. A. C. Bose did not proceed under s. 202, Cr. P. C., but all that he did was to act upon the report of the Honorary Magistrate which had been called for under the provisions of s. 202, Cr. P. C., by Mr. D. Dutt and without examining the complainant he dismissed the complaint under s. 203, Cr. P. C., as stated above.

We do not think that the provisions of s. 192 or of s. 202 entitle a Magistrate after he has proceeded under the latter section to make an order under the provisions of the former section transferring the case for the purpose of being dealt with under s. 203 or s. 204, without a fresh investigation as contemplated by s. 202, Cr. P. C. Mr. A. C. Bose was, in our opinion, not in proper seisin of the case as the transfer to him at that stage and in the circumstances stated above cannot be justified under any provision of the law. His subsequent order issuing process against the accused must accordingly be held to be without jurisdiction.

The Rule, therefore, is made absolute. The order issuing process is set aside, and it is directed that the complaint be put up before a Magistrate competent to deal with it, who on examining the complainant afresh will proceed to pass proper order in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 203—Discharge, whether bars second complaint—Procedure—Duty of complainant.

An order of discharge does not operate as an acquittal and leaves the matter at large for all purposes of judicial enquiry. There is jurisdiction still vested in all Magistrates including the one who made the previous enquiry, just as before, but all Magistrates, and especially the one who formerly discharged the accused, are bound to exercise due discretion to take that discharge into account in dealing with the case, and it is the duty of the complainant to inform the Magistrate before whom the case comes up on the second occasion that he had previously filed a similar complaint which has been dismissed, because when the Court to which the second complaint is made becomes aware that a similar complaint has already been dismissed it must exercise greater care in considering how to deal with the case. [p. 528, col. 2.]

Criminal Reference made by the District Magistrate, Ratnagiri.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference by the District Magistrate of Ratnagiri. One Mahadeo Laxman filed a complaint on April 15, 1924, under ss. 448, 506 and 350, Indian Penal Code, in the Court of the First Class Magistrate at Malvan against Sitaram Narayan Tavde, Havildar of the 11th Mahratta Light Infantry then stationed at Secunderabad, and three others. The complaint was that the accused entered the complainant's house on April 8, 1924, beat him and threatened to kill him. The First Class Magistrate verified the complaint and dismissed it under s. 203 of the Cr. P. C. on April 16, 1924.

The complainant then filed a fresh complaint on the same facts against the same accused in the Court of the Bench Magistrates of the Second Class at Malvan on April 25, 1924. The fact of his previous complaint having been dismissed by the First Class Magistrate was not mentioned by the complainant in his complaint to the Bench Magistrates. The Bench Magistrates entertained the complaint, recorded the complainant's verification statement, and ordered the issue of process under s. 448, Indian Penal Code. Accordingly, a bailable warrant was issued for the arrest of the accused Havildar, who brought to the notice of the District Magistrate the above facts in an application for transfer of the case.

On examining the papers the Magistrate was of opinion that the Bench Magistrates were wrong in taking up the complaint, which was already dismissed by the First Class Magistrate. Suce a complaint was held to be without jurisdiction and the proceedings were set aside by the High Court of Allahabad in Queen-Empress v. Adam Khan (1). The District Magistrate, therefore, requested the Registrar to kindly move the High Court to set aside the proceedings pending in the Court of the Bench Magistrates at Malvan.

In Queen-Empress v. Adam Khan (1), it was held that when a competent tribunal has dismissed a complaint another tribunal of exactly the same powers cannot re-open the same matter on a complaint made to it. The learned Judges said (page 108*):—

"We think it utterly contrary to sound principles that one Magistrate of co-ordinate jurisdiction should, in effect and substance deal with, as if it were an appeal or a matter for revision, a complaint which had already been dismissed by a competent tribunal of co-ordinate authority."

On the other hand in Queen-Empress v. Bapuda (2), it was held by this Court that there was nothing to prevent a Magistrate after he has once discharged an accused under s. 203 of the Cr. P. C. from enquiring again into the case against him. A discharge not operating as an acquittal leaves the matter at large for all purposes of judicial enquiry. There is jurisdiction still vested in all Magistrates including the one who made the previous enquiry, just as before. But all Magistrates and especially the one who formerly discharged the accused are bound to exercise due discretion to take that discharge into account, and to avoid any such oppressive proceedings as may either expose them to punishment under s. 219 or s. 220 of the Indian Penal Code or to civil action on the part of the accused.

We do not think, therefore, that the Bench Magistrates at Malvan had no jurisdiction to hear the complainant, and to inquire into the second complaint because a similar complaint had already been dismissed by the First Class Magistrate. But we do think that there was a compelling duty on the complainant to inform the Bench Magistrates that he had previously filed a a similar complaint which had been dismissed, because when the Court to which the second complaint is made becomes aware that a similar complaint has already been dismissed it must necessarily exercise greater care in considering how to deal with the case.

Therefore, we might send back the case to the Bench Magistrates to re-consider their order taking into consideration the fact that a previous complaint was dismissed; but considering the conduct of the complainant we see no reason why we should do so. Accordingly we set aside the order of the Bench Magistrates.

—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Patni Taluks Regulation (VIII of 1819), s. 11—Village Chaukidari Act (VI B. C. of 1870), s. 50—Putni taluq—Chaukidari chakran lands, resumption of—Sale of putni taluq for arrears of rent—Purchaser of taluq, whether entitled to resumed chaukidari chakran lands.

A putni taluq was created in favour of one H in 1820. The chaukidari chakran lands situated within the putni taluq were resumed under the Village Chaukidari Act and transferred to the zemindar under s. 50 of the Act subject to the payment of the amount of assessment made on those lands. Subsequently the zemindar settled those lands with one S, who had become the owner of the putni taluq by purchase in putni settlement. The pattah contained a clause that if, in future, any other person or persons besides the holder of the putni taluq should be proved to have putni interest in the taluq, he or they would acquire putni interest in the chakran lands also in the same manner and to the same extent as they may be found to have in the taluq and that if, in future, the putni interest in the taluq be transferred for arrears of rent or extinguished for any reason then the putni interest of the grantee in the chakran lands would also be transferred or extinguished along with the original putni. Later on S sold his putni interest in the resumed chaukidari chakran lands to the defendants. Thereafter the putni rent of the taluq fell into arrears and the taluq was sold under the Bengal Patni Taluks Regulation VIII of 1819 and was purchased by the plaintiff. The plaintiff then obtained possession of the taluq but not of the resumed chakran lands. She subsequently brought a suit for possession of those lands:

Held, (1) that the interest of the zemindar in the chaukidari chakran lands passed to the putnidar under the putni grant of 1820 and that the putnidar was entitled to possession of those lands on resumption under the Village Chaukidari Act by virtue of that grant; [p. 529, col. 2; p. 530, col. 1.]

(2) that far from separating the resumed chaukidari lands from the original putni the intention of the parties to the pattah granted to S was that the chaukidari chakran lands should be considered as part and parcel of the putni; [p. 530, col. 2.]

(3) that consequently the plaintiff was entitled to the putni as it was created in 1820 and was, therefore, entitled to possession of the chaukidari chakran lands as being part of the putni. [p. 531, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 28th June 1921.

Babus Ram Chandra Mazumdar and Gopendra Nath Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ghose, J.—The facts involved in this appeal are these: A putni taluq was created of six mouzahs of lot Kooly within the zemindari of the Maharaja of Burdwan by the zemindar in favour of one Joy Chandra Hazrah in September 1820. The rent was fixed at the rate of Rs. 2,654 per annum payable in certain instalments. The chaukidari chakran lands situated within the putni taluq were resumed under the Village Chowkidari Act VI (B. C.) of 1870 and transferred to the zemindar under s. 50 of the Act subject to the payment of the amount of assessment made on those lands. On the 12th May 1899, by a pattah executed on behalf of the Maharaja of Burdwan these lands comprising 133 bighas 6 cottas, were settled with one Syamlal Chatterjee in putni settlement. Syamlal was then the owner of the putni taluq lot Kooly by purchase. The settlement was made on receipt of a selami of Rs. 68 and at a rental of Rs. 135-4-2. Out of the amount fixed as rent, the grantee was to pay to the collecting panchayat Rs. 108-1-0 per year (the amount of assessment under the Act) and the balance of Rs 27-3-0 direct to the zemindar. On the 10th July 1906, Syamlal sold this putni interest in the resumed chowkidari chakran lands to the defendant No. 1 and the defendants are now in possession of those lands. Subsequently, the putni rent of lot Kooly, fell into arrears and, for the arrears due for the first six months of 1321 B. S., the putni taluq was sold under Regulation VIII of 1819 and purchased by the plaintiff on the 17th November 1914. The plaintiff then obtained possession of the putni taluq but not of the resumed chakran lands. She now sues for possession of those lands on the ground that, by virtue of the purchase under Regulation VIII of 1819 and in accordance with the terms of the putni pattah and kabuliyat by which the lands were settled with Syamlal on the 12th May 1899, she is entitled to the lands in dispute. The defendants resisted her claim and the suit was dismissed by the Trial Court. The plaintiff appeals against that decree.

The only question for consideration is whether, as purchaser of the putni taluq lot Kooly at the Regulation sale, the plaintiff is entitled to possession of the lands in suit. It is common ground that the interest of the zemindar in the chaukidari chakran lands passed to the putnidar under the putni grant of 1820 and that the putnidar was entitled to possession of those lands on resumption under the Chankidari Act by virtue of that grant. It was not possible to contend anything to the contrary after the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ranjit Singh v. Kali Dasi Debi (1). That decision set at rest in 1917 all controversies as to the right of the putnidar to possession of chaukidari chakran lands after resumption under the Chaukidari Act. If there had been nothing else, the plaintiff would be entitled to the chakran lands, notwithstanding the sale of those lands by the defaulting putnidar. We have to see whether, by reason of the pattah dated the 12th May 1899, this position has been altered.

The contention of the defendants is that by reason of the pattah of 1899, it should be considered that the two parties concerned that is, the zemindar and the putnidar agreed that the chaukidari chakran lands should be separated from the old putni and formed into a new putni; or in other words, that these lands should not be considered as part and parcel of the putni of Joy Chandra Hazrah. It is certainly open to the only two parties concerned to alter the terms of the original putni if they chose to do so; and what we have to see is whether that was done. In order to do that, we have to examine the terms of the pattah by which the chaukidari chakran lands were granted to Syamlal Chatterjee. The appellant relies upon the fact that these chaukidari chakran lands were settled with Syamlal because he was the person in possession of lot Kooly in the putni interest. It is stated in the pattah (Ex. No. 1) that Syamlal Chatterjee had applied for obtaining those lands from the Maharaja on giving out that he was in possession of lot Kooly in putni interest. Further, there is this provision in the pattah "If, in future, it transpires that any other person or persons besides yourself has or have putni interests in the said lot Kooly, he or they will acquire putni interest in these chakran lands also in the same manner and to the same extent as they may be found to have in the said lot." Again, it is provided "If, in future, the patni interest in the said lot Kooly be transferred for arrears of rent or extinguished for any reason, then your putni interest in these chakran lands will be transferred or extinguished along with the original putni. Any objection to that will not be entertained." In these it is contended that, far from ting these lands from the original pu as the intention of the parties th chaukidari chakran lands should considered as part and parcel of the putni and it was intended to nullify any contention that this was a separate property because at that time it was considered doubtful whether the original putni of Joy Chunder Hazrah included the chaukidari chakran lands and whether the putnidar, as such, was entitled to those lands on the lands being transferred to the zemindar by the Collector under the Chaukidari Act. It seems to me that this contention of the appellant is sound. If it was intended that chaukidari chakran lands should be carved out of the original putni and a new title should be conferred on the putnidar with regard to those lands, one would not expect to find in the pattah with regard to the chaukidari chakran lands the provisions that I have mentioned before. It is, however, contended on behalf of the respondents that these provisions constitute a contract between the zemindar and the putnidar and cannot be enforced by a third person. It seems to me, however, that it is not a question of contract. The question is whether it was the intention of the parties to carve out of the original putni of Joy Chunder Hozrah the chaukidari chakran lands, and constitute a new putni. That intention, as I have said, cannot be gathered from those terms. If that is so, then we have to see whether the plaintiff as auction-purchaser under the Regulation sale would be entitled to those lands. Her right is derived under s. 11 of the Regulation. The second paragraph of the first clause of that section which is relevant to the question runs thus: "No transfer by sale, gift or otherwise, no mortgage or other limited assignment, shall be permitted to bar the indefeasible right of the zemindar to hold the tenure of his creation answerable, in the state in which he created it for the rent, which is in fact his reserved property in the tenure, except the transfer or assignment should have been made with a condition to that effect, under express authority obtained from such zemindar." The contention on behalf of the defendants respondents is that Syamlal Chatterjee had express authority to transfer these chowkidari lands under the terms of the pattah and reference is made to the terms by which it is provided what should happen if these lands are transferred by the grantee. The provision runs thus: "If the land be transferred by gift, sale or succession, the costs whatever may be incurred by the Raj estate for making an enquiry as to who is the person in possession for the time or whatever loss may be suffered by the Raj estate on account of the name of the present occupier not being registered shall be paid by the present occupier without objection." This, in my opinion, cannot be construed to be an express authority by the zemindar to transfer the chowkidari lands so as to disentitle him from selling these along with the putni. Under the law, a permanent tenure-holder, such as the putnidar, can alienate any portion of the putni or any land comprised within the putni and these provisions, which I have referred to, only refer to the circumstances which would happen if the putnidar makes such a transfer. These provisions cannot be construed as giving an express authority to make a transfer as contemplated by the provisions of the second paragraph of cl. (1) of s. 11 of Regulation VIII of 1819. If that is so, then the plaintiff would by virtue of her purchase be entitled to these chaukidari chakran lands as forming part of the original putni Joy Chunder Hazrah which was created in 1820. It was further contended on behalf of the respondents that in the sale proclamation these chaukidari chakran lands were not mentioned and the rent which was stated to be due on account of the putni was the amount payable under the original putni grant of 1820 converted into the current coin, that the extra amount of Rs. 27 odd which the zemindar was entitled to get under the terms of the pattah of 1893 was not mentioned and that, therefore, the zemindar did not intend to include into the sale chaukidari chakran lands. The position seems to me to be that the zemindar sold the putni of Joy Chunder Hazrah in the condition in which it was created in 1820. Whether by reason of his omission to mention the additional rent imposed on the chaukidari chakran lands he is disentitled from recovering that amount from the purchaser is a question which we need not consider. In my opinion, the purchaser is entitled to the putni as it was created in 1820; and so she is entitled to possession of the chaukiduri chakran lands as being part of the putni. The judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge must, therefore, be set aside and the plaintiff's suit decreed with costs both in this Court as well as in the lower Court. The plaintiff, however, will not be entitled to eject the actual cultivators of the land as provided by the third clause of s. 11 of the Regulation. She will also be entitled to mesne profits from the defendants Nos. 1 to 3.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 22—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (6)—Execution of decree—Notice to judgment-debtor, when to be issued—Limitation, extension of.

In every case where an application for execution of a decree is made more than a year after the date of the decree or more than a year after the date of the last order made against the judgment-debtor in any previous execution, a fresh notice must be issued under O. XXI, r. 22 of the C. P. C. An order directing the issue of such a notice falls within the purview of cl. (6) of Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and operates to extend limitation for execution and the order is not bad merely on the ground that the application in respect of which it is issued was not made in accordance with law. [p. 533, cols. 1 & 2.]

Reference made by Mr. Justice Ross and Mr. Justice Kulwant Sahay dissenting from the view expressed in Mahadeo Singh v. Dhobi Singh, 74 Ind. Cas. 838, preferred against a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Monghyr, dated the 26th March 1924, rev[illegible] that of the Munsif Beguserai, d[illegible]h September 1923.

ORDER OF REFERENCE.—The quest[illegible]e present (the eighth) appl[illegible]on of a decree passed in[illegible]de on the 11th April [illegible]he Court of Appe[illegible] of the Muns[illegible]d. The ap[illegible] tion depends upon whether limitation was saved by the issue of notice under O. XXI, r. 22 in the seventh application for execution on the 9th of November, 1922.

The learned Vakil for the appellant concedes that if this notice was required to be issued by the C. P. C. of 1908, then the case is governed by Art. 182, cl (6) of the Schedule to the Limitation Act; and the present application is within time. He contends, however, that inasmuch as on the fifth application for execution notice under O. XXI, r. 22 was issued, it was no longer necessary to issue any further notice under that rule and, consequently, the issue of notice under O. XXI, r. 22 on the 9th of November, 1922 was not required by the C. P. C., and Art. 182 cl. (6) has no application. He relies in support of this contention on a decision of a Division Bench of this Court in Mahadeo Singh v. Dhobi Singh (1). In our opinion O. XXI, r. 22 is general and requires notice to issue in any case where the application for execution is made more than one year after the date of the decree except as provided in the proviso. The proviso lays down that no such notice shall be necessary if the application is made within one year from the date of the last order against the party against whom the execution is applied for, made on any previous application for execution. Now the seventh application for execution, in which the notice which is said to have been unnecessary was issued, was made on the 13th of May, 1922. The last order against the judgment-debtor made on a previous application for execution was passed on the 20th of February, 1920 when attachment and notice under O. XXI, r. 66 were issued; but, as that order was made more than one year before the seventh application for execution, it was, in our opinion, necessary that notice under O. XXI, r. 22 should have been given on the seventh application also. Consequently the issue of that notice was required by the C. P. C., and Art 182, cl. (6) applies and the appeal should be dismissed. In Mahadeo Singh v. Dhobi Singh [illegible] the execution was against the [illegible] representative of the judgment-[illegible] notice had, therefore, been iss[illegible] XXI, 22 (1) (b) and that [illegible] need be repeated; but [illegible] se ow that if our r[illegible] correct and the last clause ("if upon a previous application for execution against the same person the Court has ordered execution to issue against him") applies only to the clause immediately preceding i. e., to the case contemplated in cl. (b) of the rule, then a fresh notice under cl. (a) was necessary. [illegible] therefore, differs from that [illegible] under the rules of the Co[illegible] [87 I. JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—This case has been referred to the Full Bench because the learned Judges before whom it came took a different view from that expressed in the earlier case of Mahadeo Singh v. Dhobi Singh (1).

The question for determination is whether a petition for execution filed on the 11th April, 1923 is time-barred or not. The facts which it is necessary to refer to in order to appreciate the question in dispute are shortly as follows:—

The decree, which is the subject of the present application for execution, was passed in favour of the respondents in the year 1913. After five applications for execution which left the decree unsatisfied, a sixth execution petition was filed on the 1st December, 1919. An order for attachment of some of the judgment debtor's property was made in those proceedings on the 26th February 1920 and in April the property was sold. The sale, however, was set aside on the 28th August following, and that execution case then came to an end. It should be noted that the last order passed against the judgment-debtor in that execution case was the order for attachment of the 25th February, 1920. That is the only date which is of any importance in that execution case in considering the present question. A seventh application

Where the character of the alleged signature of a testator is such that the Court is satisfied that the signature is not that of the alleged testator, the Court must act upon its conviction and pronounce against the document as a valid testamentary disposition. But in a case where the witnesses have positively affirmed that the testator did in fact execute the Will in their presence, the Court will be slow to hold the document to be a forgery unless evidence is to be found aliunde which tends to confirm the conclusion at which the Court has arrived independently and from a consideration of the nature of signature by which the testator is alleged to have executed the Will. [p. 536, col. 2.]

In order to constitute sound disposing mind a testator must not only be able to understand that he is by his Will giving the whole of his property to one object of his regard, but he must also have the capacity to comprehend the extent of his property and the nature of the claims of the others whom by his Will he is excluding from all participation in that property, and the protection of the law is in no case more needed than it is in those where the mind has been too much enfeebled to comprehend more objects than one and more especially when that one object may be so forced upon the attention of the invalid as to shut out all others which may require consideration. JUDGMENT.—This case is of great importance to those who are concerned in propounding the Will. It is also of interest to the medical community, because it illustrates the pitfalls which lie in the path of professional men who through carelessness or complaisance stray from the straight way marked out for their progress by the traditions of a great profession. The Will in suit is propounded by one Lila the sole executrix and the residuary legatee. The contesting caveator is the Ram Krishna Mission; the Kumar's daughter, Princess Lukshmi, claiming only that the Will be proved in solemn form. About 3 or 4 P. M. on the 21st November 1920 the testator, commonly known as the Raja of Khaira, is alleged to have made the Will, the validity of which is challenged in these proceedings. About 1 A. M. on the 22nd November 1920 Kumar Guru Prosad Sinha was seized with an attack of delirium tremens of so violent a nature that he threatened to kill Lila with whom he had been living, and to whom, a few hours before, he had left the bulk of his fortune under the terms of the alleged Will. From and after the early hours of the morning of the 22nd November until his death on the 28th November it was conceded by all parties that the Kumar was incapax testimonii.

Two issues fall for determination in these proceedings:—

(1). Did the Kumar execute the alleged Will?

(2) If he did so, was he at the time when he executed the Will, possessed of testamentary capacity. In respect of these issues, an argument ensued at the Bar as to where the onus of proof lay. Now, when a Will is propounded, there is no doubt that a burden lies upon the propounder of satisfying the conscience of the Court that the document in suit is in truth and in fact the last valid Will of a free and capable testator. "The onus is in general discharged by proof of capacity and the fact of execution from which knowledge of and assent to the contents of the instrument is assumed." [per Baron Parke in Barry v. Butlin (1)] but whenever circumstances exist which excite the suspicion of the Court, and "whatever their nature may be, it is for those who are propounding the Will, to remove such suspicion, and to prove affirmatively that the testator knew and approved of the contents of the document, and it is only when this is done that the onus is thrown upon those who are opposing the Will to prove fraud and undue influence or whatever else they rely on to displace the case made of proving the Will." Per Lindley, L. J., Tyrrell v. Painton (2). See also In the goods of Gopessuar Dutt (3). In this case, however, I am not concerned to consider or to decide upon whom the onus probandi lies. In Basanta Kumar Roy v. Secretary of State for India (4), Lord Sumner observed that "as their Lordships find the evidence sufficient to establish a clear conclusion of fact, it cannot matter now by which party it was given." In this case not only have the parties adduced before me a large body of evidence, but I have had the advantage of a skilful and analytical survey of the evidence by Counsel on both sides who have not spared themselves in the endeavour to present their clients' cases in the most favourable and attractive form. The burden which they have taken upon their shoulders has considerably lightened the weight of my labours, and I have formed a clear and unhesitating opinion as to the judgment which I ought to give.

Now, in considering the evidence relative to the issues raised, the first matter which demands my attention is the Will itself. It is not a long Will, nor a Will of great intricacy, but it is couched in technical language; it excludes each and every one of the near relations of the Kumar from benefiting thereunder, and it provides specifically that the whole of his property shall be given to persons who are not of his kith and kin. According to the witnesses who gave evidence in support of its vaildity the draft of the Will was dictated by the Kumar without assistance, and without any previous discussion having taken place as to its terms, and the Will itself, after having been read out, was executed by the testator and by the attesting witnesses. Three witnesses affirmed that it was executed by the testator in their presence, and one of these witnesses Dr. Premnath went further, for he stated in writing on the document itself that at the time when the Will was executed, the Kumar was "in full possession of his senses." Now, a number of signatures admitted to be in the Kumar's handwriting were tendered in evidence, and I should be prepared to hold from a comparison of these signatures with the Kumar's alleged signature on the Will, that the Will, was not executed by the alleged testator. Not one of the letters in the signature on the Will resembles the same letters as used in the signatures admitted to be in the handwriting of the Kumar. Not only are the letters dissimilar, but the words which compose the signatures, instead of being somewhat shaky and irregular (as was the case with the normal signatures of the Kumar) in the words of one witness "are written in a firm hand, and in a copy-book style." But I need not labour this matter, because Counsel for the propounder in his final address, frankly admitted that the signature on the Will was not in the Kumar's normal handwriting. Indeed, he went further, and upon the dissimilarity in the handwriting founded an argument in favour of the genuineness of the signature on the Will, because, in his contention, it is unlikely that any one who was minded to forge the Kumar's signature, would have made so poor an attempt to reproduce his normal handwriting. As an argument ad hoc this contention is ingenious, but it is a double edged weapon, for the admitted abnormality of a signature is at least some evidence that it is not the hadwriting of the person who purports to have written it. I am not prepared to hold, in a case where the character of the signature is such that the Court is satisfied that the signature is not that of the alleged testator, that the Court ought not to act upon its conviction and pronounce against the document as a valid testamentary disposition, but in a case where witnesses have positively affirmed that the testator did in fact execute the Will in their presence, the Court will be slow to hold the document to be a forgery unless evidence is to be found aliunde which tends to confirm the conclusion at which the Court has arrived independently and from a consideration of the nature of the signature by which the testator is alleged to have executed the Will. Is any such corroborative evidence forthcoming in this case?. In the course of the hearing, and in the absence of the three Doctors whose evidence had been taken at various times on commission, I expressed the opinion that it would be desirable that some medical witnesses of distinction should be examined before me, and I have had the advantage of hearing Col Waters, Lt. Col. Connor and Lt. Col. Mosses in the witness-box. Now, it was admitted that the Kumar, who was 35 years of age, was a man who had led an irregular and dissolute life. He was usually drunk, in the day time as well at night. His manner was that of an extremely nervous and unstable man, and, according to Dr. Premnath "would give the impression that the Kumar Saheb was never in a fixed state of mind, but was in a kind of intoxication which I cannot explain by words: It was a peculiar way about him which is only known to those, who knew him." His hands at all time used to shake involuntarily, and when he was writing the hand which he used was seen to tremble. Admittedly, he was a man who had been endowed by nature with a full share of mental capacity, but, according to Dr. Kapur, who saw him about three hours before the time at which it is alleged that he executed the Will, "his nervous system was not that of a very intelligent man".

Expert medical witnesses have been examined with regard to the signatures on the Will. In answer to questions put to him, Col. Waters stated.

Q. In the case of chronic alcoholics they usually have trembling of hands?—Yes.

And those patients usually do not write in a firm hand?.

Probably not.

Would you look at the signature of Guru Prosad Sinha to the Will in suit? Yes.

That signature is a firm signature? I take it to be so.

What does it appear? It is a very fair signature.

That looks as if it was written very carefully? Yes.

It has the appearance of a carefully made signature; ordinarily an alcholic does not write in a very clear and firm hand like this? He does not

And later on, in his evidence—

Q. Assume that he had been suffering from that for some time, for six months or perhaps years with his hand trembling throughout, and about seven or eight hours after he has a violent attack of delirium tremens, would you suspect his hand not to be tremulous during that intervening period? The man has been a chronic alcholic. Drink has been stopped for four or five days. If he be proceeding towards recovery then naturally the trembling would tend to diminish.

Q. Supposing he was proceeding towards an acute attack then the tremour would probaly be there.

Colonel Connor was invited to look at the signature of the Will—

Q. Look at the signature; that is in a firm hand; is it impossible for a chronic alcoholic in the condition I have stated to write as firmly as you find the signature there.? Not impossible. I would not expect so firm a hand.

Then I turn to Col. Moses.

Q. Look at the signature—It is in evidence that he used to suffer from trembling of the hands and remembering that he was ill from the 17th to the 20th and 21st when his temperature was 103-104 deg, and that he had an acute attack of delirium tremens. After that, would you expect the handwriting to be what it looks like there? No; this is quite firm and still.

Again.

Q. About the signature; is it your evidence, that chronic alcoholics can never write in a firm hand?—They write in a very scrawly hand. There may be cases in which their hand is firm.

Q. From the description of Guru Prosad Sinha, is it your evidence that the man could never write in a firm hand? I would expect always a tremour in the writing.

Q. That is to say, shaky hands? Yes, he would write in a more scrawly hand.

Q. You would agree that some times alcoholics may write in a firm hand? Yes.

Q. Would it be possible for him to write like this?

Yes, possible.

Col. Davidson who attended the Kumar in his last illness was asked.

Q. Take it from me that the signature on the original Will is alleged to be the signature of Kumar Guru Prosad Sinha; kindly tell me if you expect a signature clear and firm like this from the Raja considering the condition that he was in on the 21st November mid-day coupled with the admitted fact that at mid-night he was suffering from an attack of delirium tremens? I should have thought that it was impossible. My opinion is that it is impossible.

But the matter does not rest there. Mr. A. K. Bose, a well-known and respected Solicitor of this Court who had been in constant communication with the Kumar in 1919 and for a certain period in 1920, unhesitatingly affirmed that the disputed signature on the Will, in his opinion, was not in the handwriting of the Kumar. Now, no expert evidence was, or, having regard to the above mentioned admission made by Counsel on behalf of the propounder—could have been adduced to rebut the evidence to which I have referred, or to counter the natural and reasonable inference to be drawn therefrom. In these circumstances without doubt or hesitation I find as a fact that the disputed signature on the alleged Will was not in the handwriting of the Kumar, and that the document was not executed by the alleged testator. It follows from this finding that in my opinion, the document in suit is not the Will of Kumar Guru Prosad Sinha.

I now consider the evidence adduced in respect of the second issue, namely:

whether at the time when the document was alleged to have been executed the Kumar was possessed of testamentary capacity. I take the test of testamentary capacity to be that which was laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Horwood v. Baker (5) in which Mr. Justice Erskine expressed the opinion of the Court to be that "in order to constitute a sound disposing mind, a testator must not only be able to understand that he is by his Will giving the whole of his property to one object of his regard; but that he must also have capacity to comprehend the extent of his property, and the nature of the claims of others, whom, by his Will, he is excluding from all participation in that property; and the protection of the law is in no cases more needed, than it is in those where the mind has been too much enfeebled to comprehend more objects than one, and most especially when that one object may be so forced upon the attention of the invalid, as to shut out all others that might require consideration." Now, leaving out of consideration the matters which are in controversy and applying this test of testamentary capacity to the admitted facts relating to the physical condition of the Kumar, and to the circumstances prevailing at or about the time when the Will is alleged to have been executed, in my opinion, the right and reasonable inference to be drawn therefrom is that the Kumar was not possessed of testamentary capacity at the time when it is alleged that he executed the document in suit. The Kumar's illness commenced on the 17th November 1920, and terminated in his death on the 28th. Throughout the period of his illness he was lodging in the house of one of the attesting witnesses, Fakir Chand, Vakil of the Lahore High Court. On the 17th November Dr. Premnath, a young practitioner in medicine and dentistry in Lahore, saw him professionally. He was found to be suffering from fever, with a temperature of at least 102 or 103 deg. It appears that he complained also of pains in his joints. From the 17th November until the 22nd the Kumar was nursed by a woman called Lila, who for some time had been living with the Kumar. It was stated that she was not married to the Kumar, but whether that be so or not is a question which it is unnecessary for me to determine in these proceedings, and I refrain from doing so. Dr. Premnath prescribed medicine for fever, and at the same time ordered that alcohol should be stopped. Now, the effect of depriving a person suffering from chronic alcoholism, as the Kumar was, of the opportunity of obtaining alcohol not infrequently is that after a period of depression an acute attack of delirium tremens supervenes; and such an attack is the more likely to occur when the patient is suffering from fever, pneumonia or shock. On the 19th November Dr. Premnath was not satisfied with the condition of the patient, and called in consultation Dr. Kapur, a well-known physician in Lahore. Dr. Kapur took a serious view of the patient's state of health, and he diagnosed the disease to be sand-fly fever; it may be, owing to the combination of high fever and pains in the joints On the 21st November the condition of the patient had become worse. In addition to fever and pains in the joints the Kumar complained of irritation in the throat, pain in the back, and loss of appetite while his body was exuding a disagreeable odour. On that date Dr. Premnath saw the Kumar on four different occasions. In the early morning Dr. Kapur expressed the opinion that his lungs or one of them, at any rate—were affected, and he took a sample of urine for analysis. Dr. Premnath, disagreeing with the view expressed by Dr. Kapur as to the condition of the lungs, and apparently being anxious to have another opinion, called into consultation Col. Davidson, the Civil Surgeon, and Professor of Medicine and Jurisprudence at the King Edward Hospital, at Lahore. Col. Davdison prescribed a fever mixture and some medicine for a cough, and left after he had taken a sample of the Kumar's blood for analysis. A few minutes after Col. Davidson had gone away, Dr. Kapur returned, and stated that the analysis of the urine disclosed the presence of albumen. There can be no doubt after the disclosure of the result of the examination of the urine, that everyone concerned became seriously alarmed at the patient's condition. About 9 P. M. Dr. Premnath gave the Kumar a sponge bath, and in the night about 1 A. M. a violent attack of delirium tremens broke out. It is conceded that after 1 A. M. on the 22nd November until his death the patient was incapable of making a Will. Now, the case for the propounder of the Will is that between 3 or 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the 21st November the Kumar who had not been told the result of the analysis of the urine, although it may be that he noticed signs of distress on the faces of those about him, suddenly expressed the desire to make a Will, and asked Fakir Chand to provide a scribe to write it out. Uttam Chand, a young Pleader in Fakir Chand's office, was sent for, and without making any remark to anybody the Kumar at once began dictating the Will to Uttam Chand who took it down in writing. During the dictation of the Will the Kumar, it is said, frequently suggested corrections and alterations therein. The draft was then taken away, copied out, and returned to the Kumar who read it through and extended it and afterwards the Will was read aloud, and signed by Fakir Chand, Uttam Chand and Dr. Premnath. The dictation of the draft occupied, it was stated, from half to three quarters of an hour. About half an hour after the Will is alleged to have been signed one Mehta Bahadur Chand appeared at the house, and he also signed the Will. It is to be observed that although the Will is couched in technical language, according to the witnesses who were called on behalf of the propounder, it was dictated without any assistance from anyone. The Kumar excluded from taking any benefit thereunder his wife, Bageswari, his daughter, Princess Lukshmi, and his brother Baijnath. After bequeathing a sum of money to two persons who were unrelated to him, the Kumar left a monthly allowance by way of maintenance to a woman, Susila by name, who it was stated had been living with the Kumar at the Grand Hotel Calcutta at the sametime that Lila was living with him there. The residue of his property he left to Lila. In the course of his evidence Col. Moses was asked—

Q. Would it be possible for him to concentrate his thoughts for a long time? No. He cannot sustain mental concentration for any length of time presuming that he is growing an attack of delirium tremens.

Q. In the morning, his condition is throughout loss of appetite, high fever, and he smells badly, in this condition, can he concentrate his mind and can he sustain his mental condition, for any length of time? He cannot keep up his concentration. He relapses and he cannot keep up his concentration.

Q. Could he dictate a deed like that? You cannot state positively about these things.

Q. What would be the length of time during which he can sustain his concentration? Suddenly you rouse him up, your sharp questions may bring about an answer; and if you stop, he relapses. It is difficult to say the actual length of time.

Q. The Court: Do you mean that he would respond to some outside agency at the time? Yes.

Q. But not have the power to concentrate? Yes.

Again.

Q. Would it make any difference if the same man contemplated making this provision for the first time, and if he had thought it out before and merely recited it? I do not think it makes any difference, whether it was the first idea or whether it was not. I do not think he would be able to sustain mental effort for a sufficiently long time to have this Will made, and to understand it.

Q. Is there any other reason? Except the chronic picture of a man who could not sustain any effort, on the verge of delirium tremens executing, reciting and dictating a Will like that.

Col. Waters:

Q. From what you said before, does it not appear that they try to regain their normal condition? Yes a man, a chronic alcoholic if roused, tries to pull himself together.

Q. In fact many alcoholics know that delirium tremens is coming on and for hours they struggle against it? I don't know.

Q. The coherence of thought does not last long? Probably not.

Q. If in a few hours he is going to be in a violent state of delirium tremens would you expect him to be able to calmly dictate that document without any assistance with details of legacies, houses, etc.? Anything may be.

Q. Would you be surprised to hear that it was so? I should certainly expect it as surprising. Anything may happen.

Q. The Court. Doctors are always in this difficulty, as distinct from our profession, which relates to an exact science, from which we know some a little more and some less, a Doctor's profession which is connected with a progressive science, it is difficult to say what may or may not happen? It is difficult to say, it is impossible? It is so.

Q. You would be surprised? Yes.

Col, Connor.

Q. Take this case; a man like that who had these symptoms in the morning and then broke out into delirium tremens, actually violent delirium tremens, at 12 A. M., would he be capable of coherent and sustained effort for an hour or more? I say again that that depends more upon his state of chronic alcoholism. If he is a man who is usually drunk I should not expect it.

Q. A man who is usually drunk but whose liquor has been cut off and then these symptoms supervene, you would not expect him to be capable of sustained coherent effort for over an hour at one stretch? I would not expect it, but I may say in parenthesis it would not be impossible.

Q. You know the distinction between impossibility and improbability? You say it would be improbable, but not impossible. Yes.

Q. The Court: Taking your answers upto now and taking that document which requires concentration, for it is a coherent document dealing in a regular form with persons he is going to benefit and those he is going to disinherit, would you expect such a man as this to write and dictate such a document?. I would not expect a man such as has been painted to me to write such a document.

Dr. Kapur in his evidence on commission stated.

"I saw him last on the 21st November 1920 a little after 12 noon. The deceased was in his usual senses then. He was talking rationally. He was capable of understanding his affairs.

Cross-examination.

Was the deceased capable of making a Will between 3 and 4 P. M. on the 21st November 1920? I am not sure of it.

What do you mean by saying that the deceased was in his usual senses? Usually due to hard drinking he was at times under the influence of liquor and his nervous system was not that of a very intelligent man.

Having regard to the uncontroverted facts alone relating to the physical condition of the Kumar on the 21st November and the circumstances surrounding the alleged execution of the document in suit, I should be prepared to hold that between 3 and 4 P. M. on the afternoon of the 21st November 1920 the Kumar was incapable of making or executing the document in suit. But the evidence on this issue does not rest there. Both Col. Davidson and Dr. Premnath had given evidence on commission relating to this issue. Col. Davidson testified that about 12 noon on the 21st November he found the Kumar to "be suffering from great restlessness; I found it difficult to examine him properly owing to his restlessness and difficult to get him to concentrate his fixed attention upon any question." Knowing that delirium tremens is often the product of pneumonia in a drunkard (by product I mean sequela or complication) and also knowing that the disease may be precipitated by an attack of acute infection such as malaria, pneumonia, or sand-fly fever, I wished to see what the cause of the fever was, as in all cases of delirium tremens the temperature does not rise very high except in very bad cases, and I believe I took personally a blood smear for examination to see if malaria was present, I sent it for examination, but no malaria was found, and I could find no signs of pneumonia till the reply about the blood was received. I believe I continued the treatment of Dr. Premnath."

Q. You have told us that he was suffering from very great restlessness; do you remember if you noticed any particular action on his part to denote restlessness? What I found was that he was continually pulling off his bed clothes and from the diagnosis of the disease there must have been tremors in his hands before, because the disease is called delirium tremens because he suffers from hallucinations, and tremens because of trembling of hands especially, and of the lips, mouth and tongue.

Q. What did you diagnose the disease to be? I diagnosed the disease to be delirium tremens.

Q. At the time when you examined him, had the disease attained an acute form or did you find premonitary signs of the disease? I found the disease present; hence it was not in a premonitory state.

And later on:

Q. Will you kindly read this Will and tell me if a person in the condition in which you found the Raja of Khaira, on the 21st about 12 noon or sometime after could dictate unaided a Will of this length and description between 3 and 4 P. M.? I say No. A persons suffering from delirium tremens is incompetent to make a Will by all authorities. He has not any civil or criminal responsibility. He suffers from want of combination and continuity of thought. Therefore, it is impossible for him to dictate a Will of this description.

Now if Col. Davidson's evidence is accepted, it is conceded that the Will cannot stand but it has been strenuously urged that no reliance ought to be placed on Col. Davidson's testimony, having regard to his conduct and the contradictory statements which he has made. Col. Davidson has not given evidence in this Court, and if it were not that I am satisfied that it is my duty to do so, indeed, it is not possible to arrive at a sound conclusion on the second issue without appraising the value of Col. Davidson's evidence, I should have been glad to refrain from any animadversion upon the conduct of a professional man. The course which Col. Davidson adopted was, indeed, a strange one. It appears that in January 1921 he was approached by one B. C. Chatterjee, who claimed to be an Advocate, and Chatterjee requested him to give him a certificate as to the soundness of the Kumar's mental faculties on the 21st November. That certificate he gave, he states, in the form of a written statement, but as this document was not forthcoming at the trial, I am unable to say what the terms of the certificate were. About the 8th August 1922, however, it appears that Chatterjee again approached Col. Davidson in company with one Nipendra Sircar, who is a beneficiary under the Will. Chatterjee, on this occasion, brought with him a set of interrogatories to be answered by Col. Davidson. The 6th interrogatory was as follows:—

Dr. Premnath has stated on oath that Raja Guru Prosad Sinha did execute the Will in his presence on the 21st November, 1920, between 3 and 4 P. M. and was in possession of his senses and was quite capable of making a Will at that time; are you in a position to differ from his statement regarding the mental capacity of the Raja at that time, that is between 3 and 4 P. M. If you do differ, please state your grounds.

Answer: I am not in a position to controvert the statement of Dr. Premnath.

It is, I think, an extremely unwary and undesirable thing that a Doctor should in any circumstances answer interrogatories of this description, and it is even more inadvisable for him to do so without previously having satisfied himself as to the identity and position of his interrogator. Col. Davidson, however, being under the impression that Chatterjee and Sircar were in some way or other connected with the case in the interest of the persons who were seeking to invalidate the Will, although he appears to have made no enquiries in the matter, answered the interrogatories then and there, and received Rs. 200 for so doing. About a week later Chatterjee once more approached Col. Davidson, on this occasion being accompanied by one P. N. Sinha. A further set of interrogatories were handed to Col. Davidson. These interrogatories in my opinion, were of a very improper nature. Interrogatories Nos. 12, 13, 14 and 15 were obviously in the nature of cross-examination of Col. Davidson on the answer which he had given to interrogatory No. 6, on the 8th August. They are as follows:—

No. 12. Do you think from your observation of the condition of the patient at 12 noon and from the further admitted fact that at 12 midnight the patient was suffering from an acute attack of delirium tremens, that it is likely that the patient dictated the Will between 3 and 4 P. M. without assistance from anybody?

Answer: I do not think it likely that he could have dictated a Will connectedly without marked assistance. In fact Taylor at page 896, 6th Edn. on Jurisprudence, considers a person suffering from delirium tremens incompetent to make a Will unless his mind clears up before death, but as the Will is said to have been made on the 21st and his condition of delirium tremens was more marked on the 22nd, this exception does not hold good.

No. 13. What is your reason for stating that you would not controvert Dr. Premnath's statement that he actually dictated the Will between 3 and 4 P. M. ?

Answer : I think I would prefer to accept the opinion of Taylor. It depends upon what one means by dictation of a Will. In such dictation external help may have been largely exercised.

No. 14. Do you mean, not being present between 3 and 4 P. M. when the Will is supposed to have been dictated, you would not like to say anything against the statement on oath made by a Doctor known to you, on the strength of your opinion, although based upon scientific deductions ?

Anwer : See above.

No. 15. Do you believe that your opinion is supported by medical science ?

Answer : Yes, by the highest authority.

I find it difficult to understand how Col. Davidson could have thought it in consonance with his position as a professional man to answer such questions, and my perplexity is increased when I find that he has admitted that between the date when the questions were left with him, and the date when he answered them, some three days later, he received 3 pages of blue paper filled with medical authorities upon the subject, and in substance suggesting the form which his answers should take. But answer them he did, and he received a further fee of Rs. 200 for the answers which he gave on that occasion. Nay more, on the 30th August he produced in Court a further set of answers to the identical questions which had been put to him on the 8th August, and on that occasion his answer to question No. 6 was in direct contradiction of the answer which he had given to question No. 6 on the 8th August. His answer is as follows :—

A. Yes, after seeing the Will, and knowing the condition of the patient when I saw him; also from the fact that the patient suffering from delirium tremens is mentally unfit to make a Will.

On these facts I am invited to come to the conclusion that Col. Davidson is a man who is ready to give a medical opinion, true or untrue, if only he receives adequate remuneration for so doing. For the reasons which I am about to give, I refuse to accept as correct this grave imputation upon the character of a well-known professional man. Col. Davidson has endeavoured to explain his answer to interrogatory No. 6 on the 8th August in more ways than one. He stated that throughout he was under the impression that Chatterjee was submitting questions to him on behalf of those who were opposing the Will. But, in my view, this suggested explanation is no explanation at all. There appears to be no reason why a scientific witness should not be a witness of one or more or all of the parties to a legal proceeding. To a professional man, it matters not which party calls him as a witness. What is of concern to a medical witness is the accuracy of the scientific opinion which he expresses, not the party by which such evidence is tendered. Col. Davidson also sought to explain this answer by indicating that if he had seen the Will before he had replied to the interrogatory No. 6 on the 8th August, his answer would have been to the contrary effect. But if, as he asserted, the Kumar at 12 noon on the 21st November was suffering from delirium tremens, it is conceded that he was incapable of duly making not only the alleged Will, but a Will of any description whatever. Further, Col. Davidson attempted to excuse his answer to interrogatory No. 6 on the ground that, although he was satisfied on the 21st November that the Kumar was not possessed of testamentary capacity, Dr. Premnath might honestly have formed a different opinion, and that Dr. Premnath's view depended upon what Dr. Premnath "considered sufficient mental capacity to form a Will." But was that a reason which would justify Col. Davidson in refraining from stating an opinion which he had himself formed as to the Kumar's condition ? Surely not, for in such circumstances suppressio veri and suggestio falsi are one and the same thing. In my opinion, none of these suggested explanations have any substance in them. After mature consideration I am satisfied that the real reason which induced Col. Davidson to answer interrogatory No. 6 on the 8th August in the way he did, was that he knew that at that time there was no longer any real opposition to the Will: that all the persons who were believed to have an interest in the Kumar's estate had settled their differences, and that all parties were at one in their desire to establish the soundness of the testator's mental capacity. It was, in my opinion, with that information before him that Col. Davidson was invited to answer the interrogatories which were put to him on the 8th August. Col. Davidson stated that Chatterjee or Sircar soothed his misgivings by suggesting that Col. Davidson "could not call Dr. Premnath a liar," and that he replied "his answer depends upon what he considers mental capacity, but a man suffering from delirium tremens could not make a Will." Having salved his conscience by this protestation Col. Davidson, in my opinion, allowed himself to be persuaded that he was justified in departing from what his professional instinct must have told him was the proper course for him to pursue. Hincillee lacrimæ; I regret to say that in these Courts instances not infrequently occur in which medical men, not of any standing or distinction, give medical certificates, for instance, for the purpose of obtaining the adjournment of a case, on grounds which after investigation turn out to be wholly insufficient to justify the exemption of a witness from attendance, thereby forsaking their position as men of science in order to oblige a patient. But complaisance and the pursuit of science go ill together, and if as a result of this case every member of the medical community in future determines to hold the traditions of his profession sacrosanct and inviolable, then, indeed, the enquiry will not have been undertaken in vain. It was, however, contended by Counsel on behalf of the propounder that it is inconceivable, if Col. Davidson had found that the Kumar on the morning of the 21st November was suffering from delirium tremens, that he should not have prescribed specific drugs for that disease. I am not impresssd with this contention. The medical evidence adduced was to the effect that the mode of treatment to be followed in the case of delirium tremens depended upon the urgency of the situation: that in case of delirium tremens the main endeavour of the physician should be to induce rest, and that the desired result would be obtained at least as efficaciously by good nursing as by the use of drugs. Neither Col. Waters, nor Col. Moses were prepared to say in the circumstances of this case that the course pursued by Col. Davidson on the 21st November was wrong. From these reasons I accept the evidence of Col. Davidson that at 12 noon on the 21st November the Kumar was suffering from delirium tremens, and was not of sound disposing capacity. Having regard to the view which I entertain in respect of the evidence to which I have referred I find myself unable to place any reliance upon the evidence of Dr. Premnath. It is fair to this witness to state that he has consistently affirmed that at the time when the Kumar executed the Will in suit he was in full possession of his senses, but, in my opinion, both Dr. Premnath and Fakir Chand have also consistently minimised the gravity of the Kumar's illness. In his statement on the 26th March 1921 no mention whatever is made by Dr. Premnath that at any time during his illness the Kumar was suffering from delirium tremens, or indeed from delirium at all. His description of the violent attack of delirium tremens from which admittedly the Kumar was suffering at 1 A. M. on the 22nd was as follows:

"I was with him at 1 A. M. and gave a prescription. The Rani Saheb got medicine from a chemist's shop herself leaving me in charge of the patient. The medicine had the desired effect and the Kumar slept the rest of the night."

On the 31st October 1921 in his evidence on commission, Dr. Premnath went somewhat further, for he stated "After the same midnight I was sent for again and I went and found him excited." Until he gave evidence in July 1922, Dr. Premnath however never thought it necessary or proper that he should mention that the Kumar was suffering from delirium tremens." On the 25th July 1922 Dr Premnath in his evidence on commission stated that he had fever, and "otherwise he was all right." It is strange, indeed, if that were so, that it should have been necessary on that day for Dr. Premnath to visit the Kumar on four occasions, Dr. Kapur twice, and Col. Davidson once. From the time that he wrote his certificate of mental capacity on the Will, until his cross-examination on the 25th July 1922, Dr. Premnath, in my opinion, deliberately refrained from mentioning that the Kumar suffered from delirium tremens, because he was determined to support the hypothesis that the Will in suit was that of a free and capable testator. It is, to my mind clear that in this matter Dr. Premnath throughout assumed the part of a partisan, and not that of a scientific expert, and I am unable to place reliance upon his testimony. Upon the evidence I find that Fakir Chand and Uttam Chand were minded to pursue a similar course to that adopted by Dr. Premnath, and, in my opinion, having regard to the facts elicited at this enquiry, I find myself unable to accept the story told by these witnesses as to the circumstances under which the Kumar dictated and executed the document in question. It is, in my opinion, an incredible story, and I reject it.

During the trial of this suit two persons were present in Calcutta, and were available as witnesses to material facts, Mehta Bahadur Chand, and Lila, the propounder of the Will. Mehta Bhadur Chand went into the withess box and in the course of his evidence he gave the following answers to questions put to him.

Q. On the 21st November what was the Raja doing? He was lying on the bed.

Q. Was he sleeping? No he was awake.

Q. Did you have any talk with the Raja? I simply asked the Raja whether it was his Will and he said it was and then I signed it.

Q. How did you find him when you went there? He was ill.

Q. Was he in his senses or unconscious? He was conscious.

Q. Was he talking rationally? I did not have any other talk except asking him whether it was his Will and he said that it was and I signed it.

Q. From what you saw of the Raja on that occasion did it strike you that he was in a fit condition to make a Will, fit physically or mentally? He was sensible enough because a few minutes after he told me that he wanted to shift from this place because it was damp and he wanted me to engage some other house for him. Then I took the Rani with me in a motor car and went to another house on the Mall, Max Mink's house, which was available for rent but they said for a few days it could not be vacated.

Q. Did you see him on the 22nd? Yes.

Q. What was he like? I did not talk to him.

Q. What was he like to look at? He was at rest. He was not asleep, though he was lying down, and I think at that time he was under the care of a nurse.

Q. He was lying on the bed not asleep, resting? Yes.

Q. What was the difference between his condition as you marked it on the 22nd from what it was on the 21st? On the 22nd I did not speak to him, I only waited beside him and remained quiet.

Apart from speaking to you did he present the same physical appearance on the 22nd as on the 21st? No; his condition appeared to be worse.

In what way? His face did not bear that cheerful appearance as it did on the 21st.

He was lying on the bed on each occasion apparently neither asleep nor anxious to talk but the only difference in his appearance apart from not speaking was that he had a cheerful appearance and in his breathing.

Breathing rather hard? Yes on the 22nd he had a less cheerful appearance than on the 21st.

Did you know what his temperature was? No.

Did you know that it was 104 deg? No.

Court: What do you mean by "cheerful appearance." Was he smiling? No. I only saw it was cheerful in comparison with his appearance on the 21st.

If he was not smilling he was lying there on the bed with his eyes shut on both occasions? Yes he was lying on the bed not wishing to speak.

With his eyes shut and not smiling? Yes.

On what ground do you base your statement that he looked cheerful? On the 22nd?

On the 21st? On the 21st his breathing was normal. I use the expression "cheerful" in the sense in which a man in a normal condition, who is not ill.....

Therefore, the only difference was that on the 22nd he was breathing rather hard? Yes.

Now, if it be true that the Kumar's condition, except in respect of his breathing, was the same at 4 P. M. on the 21st November as it was at 4 P. M. on the 22nd November, then this witness's evidence corroborates the view that the deceased was not of sound mental capacity on the 21st November, for upon the 22nd November ex concessis the Kumar was incapable of making a Will. But I observed the demeanour of this witness as he gave his evidence, and I was not impressed with the manner in which he did so. He appeared to me to be indisposed to give direct or straightforward answers even to questions the answers to which could have presented no difficulty to him, and I do not feel that I should be justified in placing reliance upon his testimony. Lila was not called as a witness, although she is the propounder of the Will, and could have given invaluable testimony as to the physical and mental condition of the Kumar at all material times. In answer to an enquiry from me Lila's Counsel stated that if the Court believed the other witnesses called in support of the Will her evidence was unnecessary, and if the Court disbelieved the other witnesses, the Court, in his view, would not be disposed to pronounce in favour of the Will by reason of any evidence which Lila might give. In my opinion, Lila was the most important of all the witnesses, and ought to have been called in support of the Will, and the fact that she was deliberately kept back from the witness-box was made the subject of forcible, and I think justifiable, comment by Counsel for the contesting caveator. From her absence in the witness-box I am disposed to draw, as I am entitled to do, the inference that if she had gone into the witness-box, and had told the truth, her evidence would not have supported the validity of the Will, while if she gave false evidence her actions in connection with the Kumar's affairs would not have borne investigation in a Court of Justice. In these circumstances, I find that the Kumar Guru Prosad Sinha did not execute the document in suit, and that at the time when it was alleged that he did so he was not possessed of sound disposing capacity. I hold that the document in suit is not the Will of the alleged testator Kumar Guru Prosad Sinha and I pronounce against its validity, and direct that Probate do not issue in respect thereof. I do not regard it as either desirable or necessary that I should express any opinion in connection with certain other matters relating to the disposal of the Kumar's estate after his death which were canvassed at the hearing. The main issue which I had to determine in these proceedings was whether or not the Kumar executed the document in suit. I have found that he did not execute this document. In these circumstances the question may be asked, who then did place the name of the Kumar upon the alleged Will? This is a matter as to which further enquiry will have to be made. All the documents in these proceedings will be impounded, and will be forwarded to the proper authorities for further investigation, with a view to ascertaining whether it is advisable or not to institute criminal proceedings against the persons who were concerned in the transactions relating to the document in suit. All the three caveators who have appeared are entitled to have their costs as against the propounder of the Will. As regards any further question of costs, liberty to apply.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Kanara, in Appeal No. 142 of 1922.

Mr. S. N. Karnad, for the Applicant.

Mr. G. P. Murdeshvar, for the Opponent.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this application for revision is whether the Judge was right in holding that the appeal was time-barred on the ground that two separate periods could not be excluded, one for obtaining a copy of the judgment and another for obtaining a copy of the decree. In this case there was an interval between the two periods. The case, therefore, comes within the decision in Silamban Chetty v. Ramanadhan Chetty (1). There the decree was passed on October 12, 1905. The respondent applied for a copy of the decree on October 18, and obtained it on December 19. Then he applied for a copy of the judgment on December 22 and obtained it on February 16, 1906. The Court held that the party was entitled to deduct both the periods, and consequently, the appeal was in time. Reference was made to the case of Raman Chetty v. Kadirvalu (2), where the two periods overlapped and it was decided that the overlapping period should not be counted twice over.

There is no decision in this Court directly in point. In Macmillan & Co v. Cooper (3), the unsuccessful party applied for a certified copy of the judgement on June 12, and of the decree on June 30. The certified copies were supplied respectively on July 3, and August 8. It was held that the whole period of time occupied in obtaining certified copies of the judgment and decree appealed from should be excluded. Though that was a case of the two periods overlapping, the decision in Silamban Chetty v. Ramanadhan Chetty (1) was approved of. We, think, therefore, that these two distinct periods should be excluded in computing the time for the admission of the appeal. The Rule, therefore, must be made absolute and the appeal remanded to the lower Appellate Court for being heard on the merits. Costs costs in the appeal.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—The only question in this appeal is as to whether the document, Ex. A in the case, is a deed of mortgage by conditional sale or a deed of an out-and-out sale with the condition of re-purchase attached to it. The Courts below have held that the document in question is one of an-out-and-out sale with a condition of re-purchase.

It is contended on behalf of the appellants that this view is not correct and that there are indications which can well be gathered from the terms of the document which go to show that the transaction was really one of mortgage by way of conditional sale. It is stated that in the first part of the document all sorts of rights are undoubtedly conferred upon the vendee but that towards the end of the document there is a clause to the effect that if within a period of seven years a particular amount, namely, the consideration mentioned in the document was not re-paid then the vendor will have to give up the land and in that case the sale would become valid like an absolute sale and it would then divest the vendors of their title and confer upon the vendee the right to make sale of gift with effect from the expiry of the aforesaid period. It is urged on behalf of the appellants that this latter condition attached to the document shows an intention to the effect that the document is not to be regarded as a document for an out-and-out sale; special reliance is also placed on behalf of the appellants upon the word 'principal' which is used for the consideration money which is to be re-paid within the period of seven years mentioned above. On behalf of the respondents it is contended that the conditions by which all the proprietary rights were conferred upon the vendee clearly show that the intention was to sell the property, and that the condition mentioned in the latter part of the document only had the effect of reserving to the vendors the right to get back the property, in the event of the consideration money being re-paid within a period of seven years. It is not necessary to refer to the cases that have been noticed by the Courts below in their judgments, for, as has been observed by the Judicial Committee in the case of Narasingerji Gyanagerji v. Panuganti Parthasaradhi Rayanim Garu (1), each case has got to be decided upon the intrinsic evidence afforded by the terms of the document and upon consideration of surrounding circumstances. There are two outstanding features in this case and they have been noticed by the Court of first instance. They are, firstly, that the consideration money mentioned in the document really represents the actual price of the land at the date when the document was executed and secondly, that the plaintiffs have come to Court for obtaining possession of the lands more than 40 years after the date of the document. These undoubtedly, are circumstances which go to show that the intention of the parties was to make an out-and-out sale. With regard to the terms and stipulations relied upon by the learned Vakil appearing for the appellants they are not inconsistent with the transaction which would amount to an out-and-out sale. In the document which formed the subject-matter of discussion in Chandi Charan Chowdhury v. Nabin Chandra De (2), a Bench of this Court had to deal with terms very similar to those that are to be found in the document before us. In that document also it was mentioned that, the vendee was to enjoy and possess the land by virtue of transaction and that if a particular amount was re-paid within a certain period the vendee would release by a deed of sale all the lands and that if the money could not be paid within that time the deed of sale would be regarded as a deed of absolute sale and then the proprietary rights would accrue upon the vendee. No doubt there was also in that document a specific mention to the effect that the vendee would be entitled to deal with the property under a proprietary right from the date of the document but an absence of mention to that effect, such as there is in the document before us, does not, in my opinion, really affect the substance of the document itself for if the intention of the vendor was that if the money was re-paid within seven years, the property would be re-conveyed to the vendor he would naturally not make a mention of the power to make sale or gift of the property in the meantime specifically. Upon these considerations, I think that the Courts below have come to a right decision and the appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

THE TATA POWER COMPANY, LIMITED—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Fraud—Shares in Company, application for—Misrepresentation, nature of—Deception, proof of—Shares to be taken up by Directors, Agents, etc., meaning of—"Friend", meaning of.

In order to succeed in an action for deceit, a plaintiff must prove that he was actually deceived by the misrepresentation complained of. [p. 551, col. 1.]

Where the prospectus of a Company states that a certain number of shares are to be taken up by the Directors, Agents and their friends, the statement only means that the Directors, Agents and their friends are ready and willing to take up that number of shares, and not that at the date of the prospectus the stated number of shares has actually been taken up and allotted to the Directors, Agents and their friends. A person applying for shares in a Company on the assumption that the number of shares stated in the prospectus to be taken up by the Directors, Agents and their friends has actually been allotted to the Directors, Agents and their friends acts on a misreading of the prospectus and not on the faith of the representation which is actually made in the prospectus and cannot subsequently complain that he was induced to apply for the shares by a misrepresentation. [p. 551, col. 2.]

The word "friend" in such prospectus means not only a social but also a business friend. The business friend who applies for shares because in the course of his business dealing with the Directors he acquires a knowledge of the project, is correctly described in a prospectus as a "friend." [p. 550. col. 1.]

Where a certain number of shares are reserved for a particular person on the understanding that he will take up some of them himself and dispose of the rest among his friends, it is not a misrepresentation to state in the prospectus that the shares reserved for that particular person are to be taken up by him. JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff Company filed this suit alleging that one Bansidhar Durgadutt (hereinafter called the first defendant) had by two several applications, dated respectively October 3, 1919, and October 11, 1919, applied for 380 ordinary and 120 preference shares in the plaintiff Company subject to the articles and memorandum of association of the Company, remitting with the said applications Rs. 13,000 and Rs. 37,000 respectively as the amounts of deposit in respect of the shares so applied for.

On December 1, 1919, the Board of Directors allotted to the first defendant 190 ordinary and 120 preference shares, and notices of such allotment were sent to the first defendant. The first defendant paid the allotment moneys. A first call of Rs. 100 on each of the ordinary and preference shares was made payable on September 1, 1921, by a resolution of the Board of Directors, dated July 20, 1921, and a notice was sent to the first defendant on August 12, 1921. The first defendant failed to pay the amount due on the first call, and notices were sent to him by the Company and their Solicitors respectively demanding the said amount with interest at nine per cent.

After the institution of the suit the Company were informed that Bansidhar Durgadutt the registered holder of the shares, was not an individual but a firm, and the plaint was consequently amended by adding the firm as second defendant.

A second call of Rs. 100 on the ordinary shares and preference shares payable on April 1, 1922, and a third call of Rs. 200 payable on November 10, 1922, were made by resolutions of the Board on March 10, 1922, and September 27, 1922, respectively, and notices were sent to the defendants. The defendants declined to pay the said calls and the plaint was amended so that the further claim for Rs. 93,000 and interest might be included in the suit.

The total sum claimed was Rs. 1,24,000 with interest at nine per cent. from the date of the various calls on the amount due on each call.

In their written statement the defendants admitted that Bansidhar Durgadutt was the registered holder of the 310 shares but they pleaded that the application for the shares were made on the faith of certain representations made in the prospectus of the Company:—

(1) That the applications would be received only up to Monday October 13, 1919.

(2) That the present issue was of Rs. 10,000 shares of 7½ per cent. cumulative preference shares of Rs. 1,000 each and 35,000 ordinary shares of Rs. 1,000 each. Out of these shares, 7,000 preference and 25,000 ordinary shares were to be taken up by the Directors, Agents and their friends, and the remaining 3,000 preference and 10,000 ordinary shares were for public subscription.

The defendants alleged the said representations were absolutely false. The Company accepted applications long after October 13, 1919. The Company had given to the public 5,000 preference shares instead of 3,000; and 17,000 ordinary shares instead of 10,000, the Directors, Agents and their friends taking up a much smaller number of shares than stated in the prospectus.

The defendants submitted that they were entitled to a rescission of the contract for the purchase of the said shares.

The defendants, therefore, counterclaimed asking (1) for a declaration that the contract for the purchase of 310 shares in the Company was not binding on the defendants; (2) that the register of share-holders might be rectified by removing the defendants' name therefrom; and (3) that the plaintiff Company might be ordered to pay to the defendants the sum of Rs. 62,000 paid to them for the said shares with interest.

The following issues were raised at the trial.—

1. Whether the applications for shares were made on the faith of the representation in the prospectus referred to in para. 2 of the written statement?

2. Whether the said representations or any of them were false?

3. Whether the defendants are entitled to rescission of the contracts to take shares referred to in the plaint?

4. Whether the defendants are entitled to have their names removed from the register of share-holders of the Company?

5. To what sum, if any, are the plaintiffs entitled on their claim?

6. To what sum, if any are the defendants entitled on their counter-claim?

As far as I can gather from the record the defendants had not disclosed, before the written statement was filed, on what grounds they were objecting to pay the calls.

When the plaintiffs' Solicitors wrote on February 1, 1922, demanding payment of the first call, defendants' Solicitors replied on the 15th referring Messrs. Wadia and Gandhy to their letter of February 14 written on behalf of another client, in which they merely asked for inspection of the register of members commencing from the date of the registration of the Company, and of the minutes of the Directors' meeting when it was decided to make the call.

The learned Judge found as follows on Issues Nos. 1 and 2:

(1) That the applications for shares were not made on the faith of the representations in the prospectus referred to in para. 2 of the written statement.

(2) That the representations were false.

He, therefore, passed a decree as prayed for with costs as of a short cause and dismissed the counter-claim with costs.

The defendants have appealed.

The first alleged misrepresentation in para. 2 of the written statement was not relied upon at the hearing. It was admitted that applications were received up to February 11, 1920, but it was not suggested that this representation in any way induced the defendants to make their applications for shares.

The defendants complained about the second representation on two grounds:

(1) That the number of shares mentioned therein was not true.

(2) Because it gave a wrong impression as to the holding of the Directors, Agents and their friends.

The history of events prior to the flotation of the Company was as follows:—

Messrs. Tata Sons, Ltd., who had already floated two Companies for generating electric energy by water power, had obtained a concession from Government for the development of a third project.

In July 1919, the firm issued a private and confidential circular, Ex. Y, giving an outline of the project both in its techincal and financial aspects to over 100 selected individuals whose names appear in Ex. Z. Thereafter letters were received by the firm from various persons asking for shares to be reserved for them. Oral applitions were also received, and all applications were dealt with under the orders of the partners in the firm, principally by Mr. Billimoria. It was unfortunate, as the evidence in the case shows, that proper care was not exercised in preparing accurate lists showing the number of such applications and the extent to which they were granted.

On September 18, 1919, the Company was registered, and on September 25, 1919, the prospectus was issued. Application forms were sent to reservees which were marked with a letter and figure giving reference to the register of reservations. A circular letter, Ex. I, accompanied the forms asking that the forms should be filled in and returned, together, with the necessary deposit money.

A P. S. to the circular was as follows:—

"You are kindly requested to write your name on the top of every application form in case you have distributed amongst your friends shares out of your holding."

The total number of shares allotted were:—

34,851 ordinary
8,697 preference

which were distributed as follows:—

Ordinary, to Directors, Agents and friends	19,818
to the public	15,043
Preference, to Directors, Agents and friends	5,293
to the public	3,404

The learned Judge was put to very great deal of trouble to ascertain what number of shares had actually been reserved at the date of the prospectus. The evidence relating to the reservation has been carefully set out at great length in the judgment and the conclusion arrived at was that the figures 25,000 ordinary and 7,000 preference shown in round numbers as reserved in the prospectus were substantially accurate, and that as to the numbers stated in the prospectus there was at the date of the prospectus no misrepresentation. The appellants' Counsel in the course of the argument before us did not attempt to contest that finding.

The next question was whether the representation that the 25,000 ordinary and 7,000 preference shares were to be taken up by the Directors, Agents and their friends was true.

It was contended that the term "friends" includes only those persons who were directly influenced by the Directors to apply for reservation of shares. They relied on the case of Henderson v. Lacon (1), but the facts in that case were peculiar and the misrepresentations in the prospectus were so obvious that it was hardly necessary to place a restricted meaning on the word "friends." The learned Judge was right, therefore, in not putting any emphasis on the word "influenced." I agree with the following passage in the judgment:—

"The word 'friend' is not only a social but a business friend. A business friend who applies for shares because, in the course of his business dealings with the Directors, he acquired a knowledge of the project is correctly described in a prospectus as a 'friend'; and the influence would be merely the fact of that business connection."

But the judgment proceeds:—

"But the plaintiff Company include in the term not merely business friends, but also the friends of these business friends. I think this further extension is inadmissible because whether in social or commercial relations a friend's friend is as often as not an enemy or a rival."

Surely, that remark would equally apply to a business friend. A person who in business had come to know of this project and applied to the agents for a reservation of shares would be, according to the learned Judge's definition, a friend, but in other branches of business he might be a rival. I would prefer not to use the word enemy. Then the learned Judge says:—

"It is true that a friend who receives a reservation might apply for his friends as their nominee. If that had been all there would perhaps be no misrepresentation. But the Company went much further. Exhibit (1). They invited reservees to distribute shares to their friends. They reserved shares not only for individuals but for the business circle which these individuals represented. They deliberately set up centres for private subscription and then described the shares so set apart for private subscription as reserved for their friends."

Now there does not seem to be much difference to my mind between the promoters of a Company saying to A, "At your request we will reserve for you so many shares. We know you can dispose of them amongst your friends if you want to after allotment" and their saying to him, "Here are the application forms for the shares reserved for you. You have already told us you do not want to hold them all yourself. So you can get your nominees to fill in the application forms, but put your name on the top so that we can trace the application to the particular reservation in your favour." The only practical difference would be that the reservee would not have to pay the application money and he would be saved the trouble of transferring the shares after allotment.

In other words, would it be misrepresentation if the promoters guaranteed that so many shares were to be taken up by their friends, when they knew perfectly well that those friends intended to make what they could of the favour shown to them by the reservation. I doubt it very much. Promoters may guarantee that shares will be taken up or have been taken up by reservees but they cannot guarantee that the shares will be held by them. Failure to disclose material facts would amount to misrepresentation, but the fact that a holder of shares can sell them is common knowledge.

I will deal with a typical example out of those which have been relied on by the learned Judge to support his conclusion. 675 shares were reserved for Ambalal Sarabhai. The plaintiffs knew that he did not want them all for himself as Mr. Bhabha deposed that the plaintiffs expected a large list of friends of his from Ahmedabad. The fact remained that Ambalal was a reservee for 675 shares. If he had introduced his friends to the promoters and the promoters had accepted them as reservees, nothing could have been said. As he did not do so, the plaintiffs were entitled to represent him as the friend by whom the shares were to be taken up. It has thus been proved that the promoters had reserved substantially the number of shares given in the prospectus, and I am prepared to say that it was substantially correct to state that they were reserved for friends of the Directors and Agents.

Assuming, however, that the representation was untrue, as the learned Judge has found, the next question is whether the defendants were induced by the misrepresentation to take up the shares, for, in order to succeed in an action for deceit, the plaintiff must prove that he was actually deceived by the misrepresentation complained of: Smith v. Chadwick (2). I do not think that there is any doubt that it must be inferred from the evidence that Baijnath Bansidhar, the partner in the defendants' firm who made the application, had read the prospectus even if the whole of his story cannot be believed. The prospectus appeared in The Bombay Chronicle of September 27, Ex. 22, which would be available in Calcutta on the 29th. Besides the application forms sent in by the defendants would be annexed to copies of the prospectus. Then if Baijnath after reading the prospectus applied for shares, it is for the plaintiffs to rebut the inference that the application was based on the representations made in the prospectus. In Smith v. Chadwick (2), Jessel M. R. said :—"Unless it is shown in one way or the other that the applicant did not rely on the statement the inference follows." In his evidence Baijnath said :—

"I can read English, I read the advertisement. I discussed with Ramcoover if shares should be taken. I thought that I should purchase the shares as only a small number were left for the public. I made an application on October 3. I got the forms in the shop of Dwarkadas itself. The form was attached to the prospectus...in January 1922 I learnt in Calcutta...there was some upset in the Company. So I came to Bombay to make enquiries. I instructed my Attorneys to write the letter of February 15. I applied for shares as the prospectus stated that Directors, friends and Agents had taken up 25,000 ordinary and 7,000 preference. I thought from that that it must be a profitable concern. I applied as there was only a small number left for the public."

In cross-examination he said:—

"From the first part (sic) I understood that the Directors, Agents, and friends had taken up 25,000 and 7,000 shares. I would not have applied if I had understood that they were only ready and willing to take up that number."

This last answer really disposes of the defendants' case. The shares were applied for on a misreading of the prospectus and not on the faith of the representation which was actually made.

The learned Judge, however, has come to the conclusion that the defendants were not induced to apply for the shares by what was represented in the prospectus on another ground which it is more difficult to justify. It is practically impossible to ascertain what is passing in the mind of a man who after reading the prospectus of a Company applies for shares. Apart from his misreading the terms of the prospectus, Baijnath's story as to how he came to apply for the shares would be the natural story of any applicant who had read the prospectus. The fact that the promoters gave out the amount of support they had received in advance for the flotation of the Company would inevitably weigh on the minds of the public, and would influence them when sending in applications for shares. There might also be other considerations, and the learned Judge appears to think that those afforded the real reason for Baijnath's deciding to send in his applications. Undoubtedly in the middle of 1919, when money was plentiful the public were ready to subscribe to any Company promoted by persons of repute. In August 1919, the defendants must have heard of the impending flotation of the plaintiff Company because they sent a cheque for Rs. 2,500 and asked that twenty-five shares should be reserved for them. They were anxious to get shares then before the prospectus was issued to the public, and when they were told that the promoters did not want their money and that they should apply after the prospectus was issued, they must have realized that the promoters at that time were not prepared to deal with any chance stranger who might apply for a reservation. Even though they asked in October for a far larger number of shares it is not an unfair inference that they made the application because they thought it would be a profitable investment. If they had sent in their application for 500 shares because of the limited number of shares offered to the public, desiring and expecting to be allotted only a proportion of what they had asked for, although, as a matter of fact, Baijnath did not say anything to this effect, they would have no reason to complain as they were only allotted 310 shares, and the suggestion made in the written statement, that, because some of the shares reserved were allotted to the public to the disappointment of some of the reservees, there was a misrepresentation has no substance in it. In fact it counts against the defendants. In the case of another Company floated by the same Agents a few months before the plaintiff Company's project was entertained, there were loud complaints from the public that too many shares were reserved for the promoters and their friends, and so the Directors of the plaintiff Company were anxious to increase the number of shares available for the public to satisfy the demand. If when the business of allotment was going on, the plaintiff Company had told the defendants, "We are reducing the shares reserved for our friends and increasing the shares available for the public, and you may think that a ground for rescinding your contract so thet we will take back your shares." the defendants would only have felt more inclined to hold to what they had got.

I think, therefore, that the true position when the prospectus was issued was this. The defendants were told that only 10,000 ordinary shares out of 35,000 were available for the public and so at the highest they may have applied for more shares than they wanted. The real inducement to invest in the Company was because money awaiting investments was plentiful, the general reputation of the promoters with the public was excellent, and consequently defendants thought they were getting a favourable opportunity for investing their money. When the partly paid shares could not be disposed of at a premium, when large amounts for calls became due, and money was much scarcer, they bethought themselves what was the best way of evading their liability.

We think the judgment appealed against was right and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Crump, J.—I entirely agree.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 713 OF 1922.

November 27, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Ramesam.

versus

DHANAKOTI AMMAL—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Specific performance—Agreement to re-sell—Strict compliance with terms—Part-performance, doctrine of, applicability of.

A right to re-purchase reserved in a deed of sale must be exercised according to the strict terms of the covenant. [p. 553, col. 2.]

It is not every kind of part-performance that will attract the operation of the doctrine of part-performance. The acts relied upon as part-performance must be unequivocal and in their own nature referable to some such agreement as that alleged. They must be consistent with the contract alleged and also such as cannot be referred to any other title than the contract, nor must they have been done with any other view or design than to perform the contract. [p. 554, col. 1.]

Where the main contract is one of re-sale and there is a subsidiary contract of tenancy upto the period allowed for the enforcement of the contract of re-sale, and all the acts of part-performance are explainable either as due to some inaction or to a willingness to continue the tenancy as one from month to month, the doctrine of part-performance can have no applicability. [p. 554, col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in A. S. No. 79 of 1921 (A. S. No. 105 of 1921, District Court, Chingleput), preferred against that of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Chingleput, in O. S. No. 292 of 1919.

Mr. K. Balasubramanya Ayyar, for the Appellants.

Mr. P. S. Narayanaswamy Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this second appeal are simple and may be thus stated.

The plaintiff's husband, Neelavani Naicker, was the original owner of the property. He mortgaged it to a Fund at St. Thomas Mount. Unable to pay the mortgage debt, he sold the house to his brother-in-law Appu Naicker for Rs. 600 (Ex. II), dated 19th September 1907) and paid off the debt. Sometime after, Appu Naicker was in need of Rs. 600 and applied to Neelavani for finding another purchaser. The latter found a willing vendee in the defendant and caused Appu Naicker to sell the property to the defendant (Ex. III, dated 26th November 1909). At the time of the sale, the plaintiff, her husband and the defendant entered into an arrangement that the defendant should execute an agreement in favour of the plaintiff containing the following terms, viz., that the plaintiff should keep the suit house in her possession, that the plaintiff and her husband should pay regularly Rs. 4-8-0 every month or once in two months at the same rate, being the amount due at 12 annas per cent. per mensem for the sale amount of Rs. 600 that the plaintiff should pay the defendant the principal sum of Rs. 600 before the 14th December 1914 and that, if payment be made in that manner, the defendant should execute and register a sale-deed for the suit house. Such an agreement was executed but is not forthcoming. The Courts below relying on Ex. I have found that its execution has been proved.

It is now admitted that no money was tendered by plaintiff within 14th December 1914. The plaintiff continued to occupy the house. On 11th June 1918, the defendant issued a notice to quit and the plaintiff replied by Ex. IV-a relying on the agreement and sent Rs 600 and arrears of rent Rs. 22-8-0, but the amount was rejected by the defendant. The present suit for specific performance was filed on 12th March 1919.

The District Munsif dismissed the suit on the ground that as the plaintiff did not tender the amount within 14th December 1914, she is not entitled to specific performance. The District Judge, reviewing the District Munsif's judgment held that time was not of the essence of the contract and gave a decree. The defendant appeals.

If the agreement by the defendant to convey the property to the plaintiff, is an ordinary contract to sell, I would have been inclined to dismiss the second appeal. But, on the allegation of the plaintiff and the findings of the Court below, it is a case of a sale to defendant followed by an agreement to re-sell. The fact that the re-sale was not to be in favour of Appu Naicker or to Neelavani Naicker does not make any difference. It is the plaintiff's husband, even though he sold the property to Appu Naicker, and not Appu Naicker that arranged the sale to the defendant and he stipulated that there shall be a re-sale to his nominee, his wife, the plaintiff. This is substantially a contract of sale with an agreement to re-sell.

It is doubtful whether the principle laid down in Jamshed Khodaram Irani v. Burjorji Dhunjibhai (1) that in contracts of sale of real property, time is not generally of the essence of the contract, is applicable to contracts to re-sell. On the other hand, it was held that the right to re-purchase must be exercised according to the strict terms of the power [Samarapuri Chettiar v. Sutharsana Chettiar (2), relying on Joy v. Birch (3), Ranelagh v. Melton (4) and Dibbins v. Dibbins (5).] [See also Maung Po Yin v. Maung Shwe Kin (6).] The same view was taken in Maung Wala v. Mg. Shwe Gun (7) following Somarapuri Chettiar v. Sutharsana Chettiar (2). The ground on which relief was given to the purchasers in that case, viz., that the tender at the due date was made impracticable by default of the payee does not arise here. (See also Fry on Specific Performance, s. 1103, 6th Edition, page 515).

Mr. Govindaraghava Iyer contends that there has been a part performance of the contract and, therefore, it does not matter that the purchase money was not tendered within 14th December 1914. The part-performance he relied on is the acceptance of rent beyond 14th December 1914 upto June 1918. He relied on Vizagapatam Sugar

DevelopmentCo., Ltd. v. Muthurama Reddi (8), Mehar Ali Khan v. Aroatannessa Bibi (9), Hiralal Ramanarayan v. Shankar Hirachand (10), Hodson v. Heuland (11). Following Biss v. Hygate (12) and Miller v. Finlay (13). There is no doubt as to the principle of these cases but Mr. Balasubramania Iyer argued that it is not every kind of part-performance that will attract the operation of the principle. In Maddison v. Alderson (14), Lord Selborne after referring at page 478* to Lord Hardwicke's statement of the rule in Gunter v. Halsey (15) and his opinion that the payment of purchase-money in whole or in part as a sufficient part-performance and pointing out that his application of the rule was not followed by Lords Cowper and Macclesfield proceeds at page 479*: "All the authorities show that the acts relied upon as part-performance must be unequivocally, and in their own nature, referable to some such agreement as that alleged: Cooth v. Jackson (16), Frame v. Dawson (17) and Morphett v. Jones (18)." 'The acknowledged possession' [said Sir T. Plumer in Morphett v. Jones (18)] 'of a stranger in the land of another is not explicable, except on the supposition of an agreement, and has, therefore, constantly been received as evidence of an antecedent contract, and as sufficient to authorize an inquiry into the terms, the Court regarding what has been done as a consequence of contract or tenure.'" "It is in general" said Sir James Wigram [Dale v. Hamilton (19)] of the essence of such an act that the Court shall, by reason of the act itself, without knowing whether there was an agreement or not, find the parties unequivocally in a position different from that which, according to their legal rights, they would be in if there were no contract....But an act which though in truth done in pursuance of a contract, admits of explanation without supposing a contract, is not in general admitted to constitute an act of part-performance taking the case of the Statute of Frauds; as for example, the payment of a sum of money alleged to be purchase-money... [See also Britain v. Rossiter (20), per Lord Justice Cotton.] The acts of part-performance, exemplified in the long series of decided cases in which parol contracts concerning land have been enforced, have been (almost, if not quite, universally) relative to the possession, use, or tenure of the land.". At page 484* Lord O'Hagan quotes Sir William Grant in Frame v. Dawson (17): "The principle of the cases is that the act must be of such a nature that, if stated, it would of itself infer the existence of some agreement; and then parol evidence is admitted to show what the agreement is." In Vizagapatam Sugar Development Co., Ltd. v. Muthurama Reddi (8) possession was delivered in pursuance of the contract. So also in Hiralal Ramanarayan v. Shankar Hirachand (10). The cases of Hodson v. Heuland (11), Biss v. Hygate (12) and Miller v. Finlay (13) are cases where the main contract itself was one of tenancy and though the entry into possession in the former case was prior to the contract, the continuance of possession was distinctly referable to the contract. These cases cannot help us here when the main contract is one of re-sale and there is a subsidiary contract of tenancy upto the re-sale and all the acts of part-performance are explainable either as due to mere inaction or a willingness to continue the tenancy as one from month to month. The acceptance of rent after 14th December 1914 amounts to no more than a renewal of the tenancy as a tenancy from month to month. I am quite alive to the fact that the rent fixed, viz., Rs. 4-8-0 represented a rate of interest at 9 per cent on the purchase-money stipulated but I do not see how this makes any difference. The defendant might have thought that the tenancy with a rent of Rs. 4-8-0 is as good a letting as any he can otherwise procure. Mr. Balasubramania Iyer relied on Williams v. Owen (21). This case supports him though, as Mr. Gobindaraghava Iyer pointed out, it is a case where the Courts might well have construed the contract (in the light of principles laid down in later cases) to be one of mortgage and not one of sale and agreement to re-sell. On the pleadings and on the facts of this case (the person entitled to the conveyance and the re-sale the plaintiff being different from the original vendor Appu Naicker) that alternative is not open to the plaintiff, it not being suggested that plaintiff is a benamidar for her husband.

The principle has been stated in Fry on Specific Performance at page 279 (s. 584): "To make the acts of part-performance effective, to take the contract out of the Statute of Frauds, they must be consistent with the contract alleged and also such as cannot be referred to any other title than a contract, nor have been done with any other view or design than to perform a contract [Gunter v. Hasley (15)], therefore, if a tenant in possession sues for the specific performance of an alleged contract for a new lease, the mere fact of his continuance in possession will have no weight as an act of part-performance of the contract, being referable to his character as tenant [per Plumer, M. R. in Morphett v. Jones (18) and other cases and distinguished by Hodson v. Heuland (11) and Biss v. Hygate (12) which are not cases of renewal of the lease but of fresh lease. In the present case, the contract of possession can have no weight as an act of part-performance of the contract to re-sell, there being a tenancy and the continuing of possession is explainable as evidence of a willingness to continue the tenancy.

In my opinion, there is no such part-performance as will help the plaintiff. There is no question of limitation in the case.

I may add that Mr. Balasubramania Iyer relying on Egala Nagappa Naidu v. Munisamy Iyer (22) contended that the agreement to re sell being one-sided is no contract at all. But the present case is distinguishable from Egala Nagappa Naidu v. Munisamy Iyer (22) in which the agreement to re-sell and the original sale were at different times and were separable. In the present case the whole arrangement constituted one agreement, the option to repurchase is one term of the whole contract. This contention must be disallowed.

For the other reasons given, the plaintiff must fail and the appeal will be allowed and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

When a judgment-debtor makes an application to have an execution sale set aside under r. 90 of O. XXI of the C. P. C., after the expiry of 30 days, he must bring his case within s. 18 of the Limitation Act, and to enable him to do so it is not enough for him to show that the execution proceedings were irregular and fraudulent, but he must carry the fraud further and show that the existence of his right to set aside the sale had been kept concealed from his knowledge by the fraud of the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser. Where, however, such fraud is proved it is for the opposite party to show that the judgment-debtor has had clear and definite knowledge of the fact constituting the fraud at a time which is too remote to bring the application within limitation. JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit instituted by the plaintiffs for a declaration that the sale held in certain execution case was illegal and also for confirmation of the plaintiff's possession in respect of the land covered by the sale. The sale took place on the 22nd November 1918 and the present suit was instituted on the 21st May 1919. The defence was to the effect that the suit was barred by reason of the provisions of s. 47 of the C. P. C. and that there was no irregularity or illegality in connection with the sale. The First Court held that the suit did not lie and treated the plaint as an application under O. XXI, r. 90, C. P. C., and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal by the plaintiffs the Subordinate Judge has found that so far as the plaintiffs' allegation was to the effect that the decree in execution of which the sale took place had been satisfied that allegation was not established. He, however, held that the processes were fraudulently suppressed in the execution case and that the property had been sold at an inadequate price in consequence of the said fraudulent suppression of processes. He found also that the plaintiffs came to know of this fraudulent sale seven or eight days before the institution of the suit and holding that the suit had been properly treated by the Munsif as an application for setting aside the sale and that the application was within time decreed the suit. The defendant appeals to this Court and on his behalf it is contended that the plaint having been filed admittedly more that 30 days from the date of the sale, the plaintiffs should have alleged fraud on the part of the decree-holder or auction-purchaser which kept them out of knowledge of the sale and by reason of which fraud they were prevented from putting in the application within 30 days from the date of the sale and also that there is no finding in the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment that there was fraud on the part of the said decree-holder or auction-purchaser by reason of which the plaintiffs were prevented from coming to Court within such time. On behalf of the appellant reliance has been placed upon the case of Kailash Chandra Haldar v. Bissonath Paramanic (1). It was laid down in that case that when a judgment-debtor makes an application to have an execution sale set aside under s. 311 of the old C. P. C., after the expiry of 30 days he must bring his case within s. 18 of the Limitation Act and to enable him to do so, it is not enough for him to show that the execution proceedings were irregular and fraudulent but that he must carry the fraud further and show that the existence of his right to set aside the sale has been kept concealed from his knowledge by the fraud of the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser. So far as this principle is concerned there is no dispute whatsoever. But it will be seen that in that case all that was found by the Courts below was that the sale proclamation had not been duly published and this Court held that from that fact alone it could not be inferred that there was any fraud on the part of the decree-holder and upon the evidence the Court was also of opinion that fraud had not been established as against the decree-holder or the auction-purchaser. It has been laid down by the Judicial Committee in the case of Rahimbhoy Haribbhoy v. Charles Agnew Turner (2) that in order to make limitation operate when a fraud has been committed by one who has obtained property thereby, it is for him to show that the injured complainant has had clear and definite knowledge of the facts constituting the fraud at a time which is too remote for the suit to be brought. In the present case the finding of the lower Appellate Court is to the effect that processes in connection with the execution case had been fraudulently suppressed and the other finding is that the plaintiffs came to know of the fraudulent sale seven or eight days before the institution of the suit. It is not an unreasonable inference to draw from the aforesaid findings that, as a matter of fact, the fraud that had been committed in the execution proceedings continued and by reason of its continuing influence the plaintiffs were kept out of the knowledge of the sale. Although there is no clear finding in the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment on this point, in my opinion,

(1) 1 C. W. N. 67.

(2) 17 B. 341; 20 I. A. 1; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 256; 17 Ind. Jur. 40; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 222 (P. C.).

the facts found irresistibly lead to the conclusion that the plaintiffs are entitled to the benefit of s. 18 of the Limitation Act. Apart from this there is a further difficulty in the way of the appellant and this is by reason of the fact that the plaint was treated as an application under O. XXI, r. 90. When it was so treated there was only one appeal, allowed by law, from the order passed in it, and consequently the present appeal, in my opinion, is not maintainable. On both these grounds the appeal fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 5—Mortgage—Lease to mortgagor—Suit for arrears of rent and ejectment—Decree for sale of property on non-payment, whether preliminary decree—Final decree, whether necessary.

A usufructuary mortgagee of certain properties leased them to the mortgagor himself on a kychit, by which the latter agreed to pay rent and which provided that any arrears of rent which fell due would be a charge on the equity of redemption. The rent fell into arrears and the mortgagee brought a suit for rent and ejectment and obtained a decree which directed that the plaintiff should deposit a certain sum of money into Court on account of the improvements effected by the defendant and that the defendant should surrender possession of the properties and pay up the arrears of rent, the amount decreed in respect of improvements to be set off in execution against the arrears, and that after three months from the date of the decree the plaintiff should recover any deficit which remained unpaid after the set off by sale of the property:

Held, that the direction in the decree with regard to the sale of the property was not in the nature of a preliminary decree requiring a separate final decree before it could be executed, but was in the nature of a money-decree which the decree-holder was authorized to execute against the property in the event mentioned in the decree. Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tellichery, dated the 3rd November 1922, in Appeal Suit No. 101 of 1922, (A. S. No. 469 of 1921, District Court), preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Quilandy, dated the 19th August 1921, in R. E. P. No. 950 of 1920, in O. S. No. 623 of 1914.

JUDGMENT.—This civil miscellaneous second appeal arises in execution of a decree the construction of which is the question before me. The 5th defendant had obtained a usufructuary mortgage from defendants Nos. 1 to 4 of a property belonging to their tarwad and they took back the property on a kychit agreeing to pay rent; the plaintiff got an assignment of the right of the 5th defendant. In the kychit it is provided that if any arrears of rent fell due those arrears would be a charge upon the equity of redemption of the property mortgaged. As arrears of rent accrued due, the plaintiff brought a suit not only for such arrears but also to eject the defendants from possession of the property and the plaintiff got a decree. It is the construction of that decree, which is before me. The defendants alleged that they made certain improvements on the property while they were in possession, and they claimed in that suit the value of the improvements. The decree provided (1) that plaintiff do deposit in Court the value of improvements Rs. 97-10-10 to the credit of the 4th defendant, (2) defendants Nos. 1 to 4 do surrender to the plaintiff the plaint property described in the Schedule with the improvements, (3) defendants Nos. 3 and 4 do pay plaintiff arrears of rent Rs. 55-5-0, costs Rs. 17-15-0 and future rent at Rs. 15 10-0 per year till date of possession or till the expiry of three years from the date of the decree whichever is earlier, (4) the value of improvements was allowed to be set off in execution and (5) the plaintiff shall recover after three months from the date of decree the deficit if any, after set off, by sale of the jenm and other rights of the tarwad of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 over the plaint property. The plaintiffs have obtained possession of the property in ejectment by executing the decree. They are now seeking by execution of the decree to get what they claim to be the amount payable to them under the last cl. (5) of the decree by sale of the equity of redemption of the plaint property. They are met by the defence that cl. (5) is only a preliminary mortgage-decree and is not executable as such and that the plaintiff should have obtained a final executable decree passed in his favour in the case. The First Court gave effect to this contention and dismissed the plaintiff's application for execution. The Subordinate Judge on appeal has held that this clause is not in the nature of a preliminary decree at all but is an executable decree, and as such the plaintiff is entitled to ask for the sale of the equity of redemption of the plaint property for the amount now due to him under the decree. After hearing the arguments of the learned Vakils on both sides, I am inclined to think that the Subordinate Judge's view is correct. In the suit it was pleaded that the defendants were not personally liable for any arrears of rent and that the plaintiff was entitled to get those arrears only from the lands on which the arrears had been charged. Apparently it is because of that plea that the 5th clause in the decree is worded in the manner it is. It provides that any deficit in the arrears of rent after they are set off against the value of improvements should be recovered from the property, meaning thereby that the defendants are not to be personally liable for such sums. I do not consider cl. (5) to be a mortgage-decree at all. It is in the nature of a money-decree which the decree-holder is authorized to execute against the property. We do not find any of the ordinary provisions of a preliminary mortgage-decree in it. There is no direction to the mortgagor to pay money within a certain time and no statement that if the money is not paid, the property would be sold and there is no direction to take accounts to ascertain the amount due. All that is left to execution. Even the set off itself is ordered to be allowed in execution. The decree, therefore, seems to me to be, as the Subordinate Judge holds, an executable decree; it does not require the passing of a final decree to make it executable. It is contended that if this view is correct the plaintiff should attach the property before he can sell it. That, however, does not seem to be necessary in this case. It is not said that any persons have obtained any rights in this property which can be pleaded against the plaintiff's right to proceed against it for the payment of the decree amount As the decree itself makes the property liable it seems to me it is not necessary to insist upon the property being again attached. Attachment can be dispensed with and the property sold in execution of the decree. The order of the Subordinate Judge is, therefore, right. The civil miscellaneous appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Landlord and tenant—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, describing grove-holders as owners of groves, effect of—Ejectment suit, whether maintainable—Suit for assessment of rent—Finding that defendant holds adversely to plaintiff—Adverse possession.

The wajib-ul-arz of a village contained an entry that certain detached plots of land, which were stated to be groves or flower gardens, were in possession of persons other than the proprietors of the mahal, and that the possession of the owners was in their own right and that the zemindars had no right to interfere with them. The persons in possession of these plots were, however, entered in the village papers as occupancy tenants:

Held, (1) that the wajib-ul-arz recognized the full proprietary rights of the persons in possession of these plots and that they were, therefore, not liable to ejectment at the instance of the zemindars; [p. 559, col. 2.]

(2) that the mere fact that the owners of the groves were entered as occupancy tenants in the village papers did not override the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz and could not be pressed into service so as to put upon those provisions an interpretation which was contrary to the plain intention of the document. [ibid.]

Where a suit by a zemindar against certain persons for assessment of rent is dismissed on the ground that the defendants are not liable to assessment of rent as their possession has for many years been adverse to the zemindar, from the date of the decision at any rate, the possession of the defendants must be held to be adverse to the zemindar in the fullest sense of the word. [p. 560, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Budaun, dated the 2nd December 1922.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana and S. B. Johari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This suit arises out of an attempt made by the defendant, who is the zemindar of a mahal, to eject the plaintiffs from a grove situated on two specified plots of land within the area of the mahal of which the defendant is zemindar. On being sued for ejectment the owners of the grove pleaded full proprietary title in the same, whereupon they were required to establish the alleged title by suit in the Civil Court. The present suit has, therefore, been brought by the persons in possession of the grove whose ejectment was sought by the defendant zemindar.

The Trial Court decreed the suit for the relief sought. The learned District Judge has set aside the decree of the Trial Court and has granted a declaration to the effect that the plaintiffs are the owners of the trees and enjoy the status of grove-holders, but are not proprietors.

In second appeal we have to deal in the main with two contentions. One is that the decision of the District Judge is based upon a misreading of the most important documentary evidence in the case, viz., the wajib-ul-arz prepared in the year 1865. Secondly, it is contended before us that the learned District Judge has nowhere dealt with the results of a previous litigation between the predecessor-in-title of the present parties and that the effect of that litigation is to establish the plaintiffs' title as owners of the land and of trees. There is force in both these contentions. The wajib-ul-arz distinctly recognizes the existence in this village of two different kinds of groves. In Ch. IV of this Record-of-Rights it is stated that, in respect of the ordinary groves in the village, the persons who planted the same are the owners of the trees, but have no rights over the land. The zemindar has a right of re-entry as soon as the land loses the character of a grove and, what is more, he can interfere to prevent the planting of new trees. In substance this clause recognizes in favour of the persons who have planted groves in the village what is ordinarily described as the status of grove-holders. In Ch. III of the same document there is a passage, the correct interpretation of which should determine the result of the present suit. It purports to give a list of certain detached plots of land in respect of which it is noted that they are in possession of persons other than the proprietor or proprietors of the mahal. These plots of land are stated to be groves or flower gardens. In respect of these it is definitely stated that the possession of the owner (malik) of such a grove is in his own right and that the zemindars have no right to interfere with him. It has not been denied in argument that the plots of land with which we are now concerned are referred to in the list of detached plots of land to which the above-mentioned clause of the wajib-ul-arz refers. On a fair interpretation of the clause it seems to us that it recognizes full proprietary rights in respect of these detached plots of land in favour of the persons recorded as being in possession of the same. The learned District Judge has refused to interpret the wajib-ul-arz in this sense because in the ordinary village papers the present plaintiffs and their predecessors-in-title were recorded as occupancy tenants. We do not think that this fact can either override the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz, or be pressed into service so as to put upon those provisions an interpretation which seems to us strained and contrary to the plain intention of the document. Apart from these considerations we think that the lower Appellate Court has gone even more seriously astray in its reference to a certain previous litigation of the year 1908. In that year the proprietor of the mahal, who was the father of the defendant-respondent now before us, sued the father of the plaintiffs in the Revenue Court for assessment of rent. We have not got the pleadings before us, but we have got the judgment delivered by the Revenue Court in which this suit was brought. That judgment referred to the provisions of the wajib-ul-arz, laid stress upon the long continued possession of the holders of the grove and distinctly found that this possession had for many years been adverse to the zemindar. It dismissed the suit for assessment of rent upon this finding, and not upon a mere finding that the persons upon whom rent was sought to be assessed were not liable to such assessment by reason of their status of grove-holders. A curious point was taken in the lower Court, to the effect that this decision had no force against the present defendant because the father of the said defendant, shortly before instituting these proceedings for assessment of rent, had executed a deed of gift by which he purported to convey the land appertaining to this grove to his son, the defendant. This plea has been sufficiently dealt with by the learned Munsif in his judgment. In any case it seems to us that from the date of this decision the present plaintiffs were beyond question holding the land in suit adversely to the zemindar in the fullest sense of the word and, even if they had no valid title before that date, they had perfected a title by adverse possession for the full statutory period before these present proceedings were instituted in the Revenue Court. What the learned District Judge has in effect done is to degrade the plaintiffs from their position of owners of the grove (malik bagh) as defined in Ch. III of the wajib-ul-arz to that of grove-holders as defined in Ch. IV. For the reasons which we have given we are satisfied that the learned District Judge was wrong.

We set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and restore that of the Court of first instance with costs throughout, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887 and s. 151, C. P. C., and under s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Malabar at Palghat, dated the 12th August 1922, on M. P. No. 922 of 1922, in Small Cause Suit No. 502 of 1921 on its file.

Mr. C. S. Swaminathan, for the Petitioners.

Mr. K. Kuttikrishna Menon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff obtained a compromise decree by which if money was paid within the 30th Meenom 1097 (12th April 1922) the sum of Rs. 285 was to be taken in full satisfaction of the claim. The decree provided that in default of such payment the defendants were to pay the plaintiff the whole of the plaint amount with costs. The defendant put in an application to the lower Court to have satisfaction entered of the decree on the ground that he tendered the amount of Rs. 285 to the plaintiff on the 12th April 1922 but as the plaintiff did not receive that amount he sent it by money order to the plaintiff which again was refused and he, therefore had the money ready with him to be deposited in Court and asked the Court to give a challan to make that deposit. That was on the re-opening day of the Court after the mid-summer holidays on the 12th June 1922. The challan was granted and the money was deposited on the re-opening day. The lower Court has found that the alleged tender out of Court is not true and in revision I must accept that finding. But it has not considered the question whether the deposit into Court on the re-opening day was not a sufficient compliance with the terms of the decree. No doubt the compromise decree says that the money is to be paid to the plaintiff. But when under a decree money is to be paid to a party, O. XXI, r. (1), C. P. C., lays down that money shall be paid either to the party in person or shall be deposited into Court. The defendant, therefore, in this case had the option either of paying the money to the plaintiff or of depositing the money into Court; and if he had deposited into Court before 12th April, no question could have arisen and the defendant would have been held to have complied with the terms of the decree. Having had that option, the question then is whether the defendants were not in time when they deposited the money at the earliest possible opportunity into Court. As 12th April was a holiday, the mid-summer recess having commenced by that time, the earliest day on which the money could be paid into Court after the 12th April was the 12th June, and the defendant complied with that condition. It seems to me, therefore, that there was a sufficient compliance with the decree on the part of the defendant and that the lower Court should have directed the money to be paid over to the plaintiff and entered up satisfaction of the decree. A question similar to this arose in Bombay and it was held by the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court in Wana Ravji v. Natu Murha (1), that if the plaintiff chose to pay the money into Court and he found that the Court was closed on the due date and he paid it on the earliest day on which the Court re-opened, such a payment would be a proper compliance with the terms of the decree. Order XXI, r. 1 of the C. P. C., says that the payment may be made into Court or into the hands of the party. It is contended that this ruling should not be relied upon by me because the learned Judges of the Bombay High Court have misapplied s. 10 of the General Clauses Act. It is quite true that the General Clauses Act deals with the general rules of construction of Statutes and the words of s. 10 can hardly be applied to a case where a certain thing is directed to be done by a decree of Court. But as pointed out in Sambasiva Chari v. Kamasami Reddi (2), there is a generally recognized principle of law under which parties who are prevented from doing a thing, not by any default of their own, but by the Court itself are entitled to do it at the earliest subsequent opportunity. That is the general principle of equity quite apart from the terms of s. 10 of the General Clause Act. In fact s. 10 is based upon that principle. In this case the defendant had the option to pay either to the plaintiff directly or into Court. He was entitled to choose between the two. He was prevented from paying into Court because the Court was closed on the due date. His payment, therefore, on the re-opening day must, I think, be held to be a sufficient compliance with the terms of the decree. In this view, the order of the lower Court must be set aside and the revision petition should be allowed. The decree will be entered as satisfied and the money deposited will be paid over to the plaintiff. The petitioner before me will have his costs in this Court and each party will bear his or their own costs in the lower Court.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182—Execution of decree—Objections—Dismissal of execution—Objection case, pendency of—Limitation.

An application for execution of a decree may be treated as one in continuation or revival of a previous application, similar in scope and character, the consideration of which has been interrupted by the intervention of objections and claims subsequently proved to be groundless. [p. 563, col. 2.]

Case-law referred to.

An application for execution was filed on 12th June 1918. The judgment-debtor filed objections to the execution which were dismissed on 21st February 1919 and on that date the execution case was also dismissed, but not for any default of the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor appealed against the order dismissing the objections and the case was remanded by the Appellate Court for re-hearing. The case was re-heard and the objections were again dismissed on 20th May 1920. The judgment-debtor appealed and this appeal was dismissed on 4th April 1921. The decree-holder made an application for execution on the 19th June 1922:

Held, that the application for execution was not barred by time inasmuch as,

(a) the order dismissing the execution case on 21st February 1919 was not a final order in the sense that it barred the right of the decree-holder to continue the execution without presenting a fresh application for execution and the present application must, therefore, be treated as a continuation of the previous application ; [p. 564, col. 1.]

(b) the time occupied in the proceedings started by the judgment-debtor against the order dismissing his objections which terminated either on 20th May 1920 when his objections were finally dismissed or on 4th April 1921 when the appeal from the order of dismissal was also dismissed, must either be deducted in computing the period of limitation or a fresh start of time must be reckoned from one of those dates. [p. 564, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The only substantial question argued in this appeal is one of limitation. The decree sought to be executed in the present proceeding was passed on the 13th June 1912. It was executed in 1915 and on the 12th June 1918 another application for execution was put in by the decree-holder. The judgment-debtor filed objections to the execution on the ground that he had satisfied the decree in full out of Court and that the decree was incapable of execution. These objections were heard and dismissed on the 21st February 1919 on which date the Execution Court dismissed the execution also and passed the following order: Miscellaneous Case No. 200 of 1918 is rejected. This case "is dismissed" The judgment-debtor, however, appealed against this order dismissing his objections and the case was remanded by the appellate Court for re-hearing. The miscellaneous case started on the objection of the judgment-debtor was re-heard and again dismissed on the 20th May 1920. He again appealed against the second order of dismissal and this appeal also was dismissed on the 4th April 1921. The present application for execution was filed on the 19th June 1922. It is, therefore, contended that since it was filed more than three years after the date on which the previous application was dismissed, namely, the 21st February 1919, the present application for execution was barred by limitation. Both the Courts below have held that the application filed on the 19th June 1922 was in continuation of the previous application dismissed on the 21st February 1919.

In order to appreciate the position of the parties and the various proceedings, it is necessary to understand the full import of the order passed on the 21st February 1919. The learned District Judge in the Court of Appeal below has found that it is clear that the order of dismissal of the former proceeding of the 21st February 1919, was passed not for any default of the decree-holder but for the convenience of the Court, as the execution case was old. The effect of this finding is that the execution case was struck off or dismissed not for any fault of the decree-holder but to clear the file of the Court and to suit its convenience. That different interpretations can be put upon an order dismissing an execution case according to different circumstances was noticed so long ago as 1873 by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Puddomonee Dossee v. Koy Muthooranath Chowdhry (1). In our judgment the order dismissing the execution case on the 21st February 1919 must be taken to mean that the defendant's objections having been dismissed, the decree was held to be capable of execution and the Court in order to keep its record in proper form dismissed the case.

Reliance has, however, been placed in this connection on the case of Kristo Coomar Nag v. Mahabat Khan (2). That case apparently supports the appellants' contention. But the question on which the attention of the Court was centred on that occasion was whether the appearance of the decree-holder as respondent in an appeal preferred by the judgment-debtor against an order holding that the decree was liable to be executed was a step-in-aid of execution. There has been a number of decisions subsequent to the Kristo Kumar's case (2) and the law at the present moment has to be determined on a consideration of those decisions. There are two points which really have to be considered in deciding the question of limitation. The first is with regard to the interpretation to be put upon the order passed on the 21st February 1919, and secondly, how for the question of limitation is affected by the judgment-debtor appealing from the order passed against him on the 21st February 1919 and the final dismissal of the appeal. With regard to the first point the learned Judge of the Court below has held that the order of dismissal passed on the 21st February 1919 was not at the instance of the decree-holder but for the convenience of the Court, with regard to the second point we are inclined to hold on the authorities that the right to execute the decree was suspended by the subsequent conduct of the judgment-debtor. In support of this view reference may be made to the case of Qamar-ud-din Ahmad v. Jawahir Lal (3) in which their Lordships of the Judicial Committee relied partly on the principle of suspension of the right to execute a decree on account of proceedings pending in connection with it. The facts of that case are not exactly similar to the present but the principle laid down therein may be applicable to the present case. There a decree was sent to the Civil Court by the Collector, before whom a sale of property was sought, for determination of the question as to whether the property was ancestral and liable to be sold in execution of the decree. The Civil Court found that the property was ancestral and ordered that the case should be struck off the file and the papers transferred to the Court of the Collector for the completion of the sale proceedings on the decree-holder depositing the necessary costs for transmission of the order. The decree-holder not having deposited the necessary amount on the 23rd December 1889 an order was passed by the Civil Court that the papers should not be sent to the Collector for taking the sale proceedings. Meanwhile the judgment-debtor carried on the appeal up to the Privy Council against the decision passed against him as to the property being ancestral. These proceedings were finally disposed of on the 12th December 1894. On the 23rd November 1897 an application was made for revival of the execution case instituted in 1888. On these facts their Lordships held that the execution was not barred. On the ground that the order passed on the 23rd December 1889 was not a final order and also on the ground that if the appeal to the High Court against those proceedings and the judgment of that Court and the appeal to Her Majesty in Council rendered necessary by that judgment had not intervened to interrupt the cause of execution there was nothing in the terms of the order to preclude the decree-holder from coming again to the Court, and the application for execution made in 1897 was in substance as well as in form an application to revive and convey through a pending execution, suspended by no act or default of the decree-holder and not an application to initiate a new one. This principle was re-iterated by the Judicial Committee in Rameshwar Singh Bahadur v. Hameshwar Singh (4). The case of Ajodhya Nath Pahary v. Srinath Chandra Pahary (5), is illustrative of the application of this principle. In that case though an application was made within three years from the last order of dismissal, the question whether the subsequent application was a continuation or revival of the previous application was considered. It was held that the order of dismissal in that case, which was similar to the present case, should be treated as equivalent to an order for striking off the case or removing it from the file for the convenience of the Court; and the following passage was quoted with approval from the judgment in the case of Madhab Moni Dasi v. Pamela Lambert (6). "An application for execution of a decree may be treated as one in continuation or revival of a previous application, similar in scope and character, the consideration of which has been interrupted by the intervention of objections and claims subsequently proved to be groundless or has been suspended by reason of an injunction or like obstruction." The principle thus laid down is not a new one and was adopted in the case of Raghunath Sahay Singh v. Lalji Singh (7). That case is a much stronger case than the present one. There a property was sold in execution of a decree whereupon the decree-holder made an application on the 12th November 1891 asking the Court to set aside the sale as the property was purchased in the benami of the judgment-debter. The First Court found that the purchase was not benami and confirmed the sale. The Appellate Court came to a contrary conclusion which was upheld by the High Court on the 4th August 1893. On the application for execution made on the 3rd December 1894, objections were raised on the ground of limitation. There it was held that the last application must be held to be a continuation of the application of the 12th November 1891, for re-sale of the property and that the time occupied in the proceedings relating to the nature of the sale though started by the decree-holder should be left out of consideration. Applying the principle laid down in these cases to the facts of the present case we must hold that the present application is not barred by limitation, firstly, on the ground that order dismissing the execution case passed on the 21st February 1919 was not a final order in the sense that it barred the right of the decree-holder to continue the execution without presenting a fresh application for execution; and also on the ground, that the time occupied in the proceedings started by the judgment-debtor-appellant against that portion of the order of the 21st February 1919 dismissing his objection which terminated either on the 20th May 1920 when his objection were finally dismissed or on the 4th April 1921 when the appeal from the order of dismissal was also dismissed should either be deducted in computing the period of limitation or a fresh start of time should be reckoned from any of these dates.

(2) 5 C. 595; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 986.

The result, therefore, is that the order of the Court below is upheld and this appeal is dismissed with costs, one gold mohur.

Execution first appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Benares, dated the 24th October 1923.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerjee, J.—The appellant in this case was a judgment-debtor in the lower Court. There is a decree for money against her, and in execution of it, her two houses were attached. She came to Court with the allegations that she was an agriculturist and the houses were occupied by her and that, therefore, these were exempt under s. 60 cl. (c) of the C. P. C. from attachment.

The decree-holder in his reply did not state at all what was her occupation, if the judgment-debtor was not an agriculturist. He simply stated that the judgment-debts were due and she was bound to pay. The learned Subordinate Judge examined evidence and came to the conclusion that the appellant had ceased to be an agriculturist inasmuch as she had sold her fixed rate tenancy in 1919.

In this Court it has been urged that the evidence has been wrongly weighed by the lower Court and that it does establish that the appellant is an agriculturist.

It appears that the decree-holder himself was examined at a previous stage in this very litigation. This was on the 11th of November 1922. It further appears that some body else had laid claim to one of three houses originally attached. Then the decree-holder stated the whole history of the residence of the appellant in the village Kanta. He said that the appellent was unhappy in her husband's house and came to live in her father's village Kanta. There she was given some land to live on, and her father built these houses for her. He also stated that the appellant owned two pairs of bullocks for cultivation. Besides this admission of the decree-holder, there is evidence of the appellant herself and some patwari's papers. Two patwaris were examined and they said that in their papers the appellant was still recorded as a fixed rate tenant of certain lands and as a shikmi tenant of three years standing of others. The appellant also summoned one Jageshar, who deposed that she had 18 or 20 bighas of land of her own and had taken some shikmi land from him on rent. But when the appellant was asked by the decree-holder if she knew Jageshar, she denied. From this fact an inference has been drawn that the story of Jageshar's sub-letting any land is untrue. I am unable to agree with this view. It is admitted that although the appellnat belongs to an agricultural caste, namely, Kurmi, she lives more or less in seclusion and her son looks after her cultivation. On evidence, I am satisfied that the only means of livelihood of appellant is agriculture and she has no other means of livelihood.

The suggestion of the decree-holder that the appellant may be livinig on the charity of her son has neither been alleged nor proved. The evidence is all one way and should be accepted.

The exemption that is granted is based on the language of law and, if the case comes within the language of the law, the exemption must be granted. The question is whether the appellant is an agriculturist and whether she occupies these houses. The Bombay High Court in the case of Devare Hadge v. Vaikant Subaya (1) held that although a certain person had lost his agricultural land, he did not cease to be an agriculturist if he was cultivating soil for remuneration. As the appellant has got no other source of livelihood, as she did cultivate land and as she has still got some shikmi land, I think she must succeed. I would, therefore, allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and exempt the houses from attachment.

Daniels, J,—I concur with considerable hesitation. The burden of proving that the case falls under s. 60, C. P. C., lies on the objector. It is not for the decree-holder to prove what her occupation is. It is for her to show that she is an agriculturist. I do like reversing the decree of the Court below on a question of fact when the evidence adduced by the objector that she still has cultivation has been found by the Court below to be false and that finding is not seriously challenged in this appeal. If the oral evidence is false the entries in the patwari papers can carry very little weight.

The only fact which induces me to agree to the decree proposed by my learned colleague is the admission of the zemindar, made in answer to a previous objection. It may be that the statement was made for the purpose of the objection which was then pending, but this cannot be assumed and the decree-holder cannot complain if it is used as strong evidence against him.

If it were poved that the applicant had no cultivation at all her house would not be the house of an agriculturist within the meaning of s. 60 (c) C. P. C., merely because she had a fixed rate holding up to the year 1919, four years before the period to which the present objection relates.

By the Court.—We allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the application of the decree-holder so far as it goes for the attachment of the houses objected to. The appellant will have her costs in both the Courts. In this Court, having regard to the fact that the value of the houses attached is not much we assess the Counsel's fee for the successful appellant at the sum of Rs. 20.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 29—Enhancement of rent—Jama amalgamated with fictitious jama, whether can be recovered—Estoppel—Burden of proof, importance of.

There cannot be any estoppel against a Statute, nor can the parties contract themselves out of any Statute. [p. 567, col. 2.]

The language of s. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is imperative and provides that rent must not be enhanced so as to exceed by more than two annas in the rupee the rent previously payable by the raiyat. This prohibition is not qualified by any provision calculated to save a contract or agreement between the parties. [ibid.]

A kabuliyat purported to enhance the jama of a holding within the limit permitted by s. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and then purported to amalgamate with it the jama of another piece of land which had no existence and the jama of which was entirely fictitious. The jamas relating to certain other holdings were also enhanced and then the total of all the jamas was described. The total of all the jamas including the fictitious jama exceeded the amount to which the rent of the holdings could be enhanced under the provisions of s. 29. In a suit to recover the jamas mentioned in the kabuliyat:

Held, (1) that the landlord was entitled to treat the jamas of those holdings which were not amalgamated with the fictitious jama as separate and his suit with regard to the recovery of those jamas must succeed; [p. 567, col. 1.]

(2) that the amount of the jama which was amalgamated with the fictitious jama being in excess of the amount which could be recovered under the provisions of s. 29 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the suit with regard to the amalgamated jama was not maintainable. [p. 567, col. 2.]

The question of onus ordinarily becomes of very little importance when the whole evidence is considered by the Appellate Court. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—These two appeals arise out of two suits for rent in respect of four holdings or, to be more correct, in respect of three holdings, the last two holdings being amalgamated into one. The four holdings were originally held by the defendants on lower jamas. On the 21st February 1916 the defendants executed a kabuliyat in favour of the landlords agreeing to pay enhanced rent for the jamas within the statutory limit, namely, not more than two annas in the rupee. In respect of the first jama which was for a plot of land measuring 4 bighas 12 cottas 8 chattacks, it is stated in the kabuliyat that the jama was increased by two annas in the rupee to Rs. 10-2-6 In schedule kha attached to the kabuliyat another jama is mentioned which is described as one bigha of land "for which an agreed quantity of paddy was to be delivered but which mode of payment was converted into the money rent of Rs. 5-3-9, and this sum is amalgamated with the enhanced annual jama Rs. 10 2 6. The rent for the aggregate lands in the said Bhogpur Mouza as per schedules (ka) and (kha) is fixed at Rs. 15-6-7 only." With regard to the other jamas the enhancement agreed upon by the parties is not in contravention of the provisions of s. 29, Bengal Tenancy Act.

The suit out of which S. A. No. 814 of 1921 arises is in respect of the last two jamas mentioned in schedule (gha) of the kabuliyat consolidated into one jama of Rs. 33-9-9. This suit has been decreed by both the Courts below. It is argued on behalf of the appellant before us that the kabuliyat being one and indivisible the claim cannot be enforced even in respect of the last two jamas because one of the jamas, namely, the jama mentioned in schedule kha is fictitious and was added solely for the purpose of avoiding the limitation mentioned in s. 29, Bengal Tenancy Act, and hence the whole contract must be considered to the void. The learned Vakil for the appellant has drawn our attention to some passages in the kabuliyat. Towards the end of the kabuliyat it is said that the aggregate jama recoverable under the kabuliyat is Rs 52-4 7. He, therefore, argues that all the four jamas must be taken to be amalgamated and formed into one jama of Rs. 52 and odd and that the original total of the rent payable in respect of all the jamas being Rs. 41 and odd there has been an increase of more than two annas in the rupee and, therefore, the plaintiffs are not entitled to maintain the suit even for a portion of the jama secured by the kabuliyat. We are unable to agree with the construction that is attempted to be put upon the kabuliyat. Reading it as a whole it appears to us that the jama mentioned in schedule kha of Rs 5 was amalgamated only with the first jama of Rs. 10 and odd mentioned in schedule ka The other two jamas were kept separate though they are treated under the same document. The Courts below have decreed the plaintiff's suit in respect of the last jama of Rs. 33 and odd holding that the contract in respect of these jamas was separate from that of any other jama. We think that the view taken by the Court below is correct and this appeal is dismissed with costs in all the Courts.

Then with regard to S. A. No. 846 of 1921.—It arises from the suit in respect of the jama as mentioned in schedule ka, kha and ga. As we have observed the original jama of schedule (ka) land was Rs. 9-5-6. It was raised by two annas in the rupee to Rs. 10-2-6. To this was added the jama mentioned in schedule kha and the total was taken to be Rs. 15-6-7. To this is added the claim for rent for plot ga the original rent of which Rs. 2-14-6 was increased by two annas in the rupee to Rs. 3-4-3. The main objection taken by the defendants to the suit was that the land mentioned in schedule (kha) had no real existence and that it was surreptitiously included in the kabuliyat in order to allow the landlord to realise enhanced rent from the tenants in excess of the limit put by s. 29, Bengal Tenancy Act. The First Court found that the land of schedule (kha) really existed and was held by the defendants. In that view it decreed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal, the learned District Judge disagreed with the Munsif on the finding as to the existence of the land of schedule (kha) and held that it never existed and was falsely included in the kabuliyat. The learned Judge then goes on to consider the effect of this fraudulent recital in the kabuliyat, and held that in the absence of any undue influence the contract entered into by the defendant with their eyes open must be held to be a good one and binding on them they being joint authors of the alleged fraudulent act. In this view he agreed with the First Court in decreeing the plaintiff's suit. It is argued on behalf of the appellant in this appeal that the jama mentioned in schedule (kha) being fictitious and added for the purpose of increasing the rent payable by the defendants to the plaintiffs by more than two annas in the rupee rendered the entire contract void and the suit ought to have been dismissed. We are of opinion that this contention must succeed in part. As we have held, the kabuliyat does not create one consolidated jama in respect of all the holdings but it purports to amalgamate the first two jamas mentioned in schedules ka and kha and to treat the other three jamas separately. In this view it must be held that the jama mentioned in schedule kha having been found to be fictitious and non-existent, the jama of schedule (ka) which was Rs. 9 was fraudulently increased to Rs. 15 and odd, that is, more than two annas in the rupee. This contract is, therefore, unsustainable in law and the suit, so far as it relates to the claim in respect of rent of the holdings mentioned in schedules (ka) and (kha), must fail.

It is, however, argued by the learned Vakil appearing for the respondents in the line adopted by the lower Appellate Court that the defendants are estopped from questioning the validity of the contract. It is not necessary to say that there cannot be any estoppel, against a Statute nor can the parties contract themselves out of any Statute. The words of the section are imperative and it provides that the rent must not be enhanced so as to exceed by more than two annas in the rupee the rent previously payable by the raiyat. This prohibitory law is not qualified by any provision calculated to save a contract or agreement between the parties.

It is next argued by the respondent that the Judge was wrong in placing the onus upon the plaintiff of proving that the jama of schedule (kha) really did not exist. The learned District Judge has considered the whole evidence, has disbelieved the plaintiff's evidence and has come to the conclusion that it was not proved to his satisfaction that the holding even existed. The question of onus ordinary becomes of very little importance when the whole evidence is considered especially by the Appellate Court.

The view we take leads us to the following conclusion. The suit so far as it relates to the jama bearing a rental of Rs. 15-6-7 must be dismissed and in so far as it relates to the jama of Rs. 3-4-3 should be decreed. This appeal is accordingly allowed in part. We make no order as to costs in any of the Courts. The parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

It is not the registration of a document which operates to create title but it is the document itself. The Registration Act makes valid such documents as soon as they are registered but the right conveyed or transferred is the right which exists in the transferor on the date of the document. When the document is presented for registration, the executant simply admits execution whereupon the document is registered and if the executant does not admit execution or if he refuses to appear before the Registrar, the law provides for compulsory registration of the document. In such a case it cannot be said that the executant by any act of his gives validity to the document. [ibid.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Madhavan Nair, in Second Appeal No. 535 of 1921, printed as 83 Ind. Cas. 133, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bellary, in A. S. No. 24 of 1920, (O. S. No. 482 of 1918 on the file of the District Munsif's Court, Hospet).

Mr. V. S. Narasimhachariar, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The only point raised in this Letters Patent appeal is "Is a sale-deed executed before but registered after the filing of a suit affected by the doctrine of lis pendens"?

The contention of Mr. Narasimhachari for the appellant is that on the date of the filing of the plaint, the property had not passed to the plaintiff inasmuch as the sale-deed was not registered and that the registration of the sale-deed, subsequent to the filing of the plaint, amounted to a transfer of the property in suit and, therefore, s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act applies to the case. In the case of a conveyance or a document creating title to immoveable property, registration is necessary to give validity to such document but the question is whether a document creates title from the date of its execution or whether it creates title only from the date of its registration. Section 47 of the Indian Registration Act makes it clear that a registered document shall operate from the time from which it would have commenced to operate if no registration thereof had been required or made, and not from the time of its registration." In a competition between two documents creating title to immoveable property, the document earlier in date has precedence over another document later in date but registered before the former document. It is not the registration of a document which operates to create title but it is the document itself. The Registration Act makes valid such documents as soon as they are registered but the right conveyed or transferred is the right which exists in the transferor on the date of the document. When the document is presented for registration, the executant simply admits execution whereupon the document is registered and if the executant does not admit execution or if he refuses to appear before the Registrar, the law provides for compulsory registration of the document. In such a case it cannot be said that the executant by any act of his gives validity to the document.

The contention of Mr. Narasimhachari is that a sale can be effected only by a registered instrument and that before the date of registration there was no sale and, therefore, the suit which was filed before the date of registration does stand in the way of the executant registering the document. This argument overlooks the fact that the vendee has a right to compel a vendor to execute a sale-deed in his favour and if he refuses, to ask the Court to execute the document. If a document has already been executed, he could present it for registration within four months and if no document has been executed he could sue for specific performance of the contract of sale. Such a contract would not be affected by the doctrine of lis pendens on account of the filing of a suit subsequent to its date.

Under s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act any transfer or other dealing with the property in a suit or proceeding is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. Mere registration of the document cannot be said to be a transfer of the property or dealing with the property in suit. Section 52 therefore, can have no application to the present case where the sale-deed was executed before the date of the filing of the suit.

Mr. Narasimhachariar relies upon the case of Tilkdhari Singh v. Gour Narain (1). There the learned Judges held that a mortgage executed before a suit was filed in respect of the property covered by the mortgage but registered after the filing of the suit was affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. With great respect we are unable to agree with the reasoning of the learned Judges. They rely upon the case of Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (2) as fully supporting the view they take. There was no question of the doctrine of lis pendens in the case in Ram Prasad v. Bhikari Das (2) and it is difficult to see how that case could support the reasoning of the learned Judges in the case in Tilkdhari Singh v. Gour Narain (1).

In Pingali Venkataramana Reddi v. Kotigari Rangiah Chetti (3) Sadasiva Iyer and Spencer, JJ., held that a document creating title in immoveable property executed before the date of the filing of the suit but registered afterwards was not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. The case in Tilkdhari Singh v. Gour Narain (1) was quoted before the learned Judges and they declined to follow it. It is contended by Mr. Narasimhachariar that the learned Judge's observation as regards the doctrine of lis pendens is only obiter and not binding upon us. Even if the point was res integra we should have no hesitation in holding that the doctrine of lis pendens does not apply to the case of a document creating title in immoveable property executed before the filing of the suit but registered after. We fully concur with the reasoning of Spencer, J., in Pingali Venkataramana Reddi v. Kotigari Rangiah Chetti (3).

The decision in Papireddi v. Narasareddi (4) does not apply to the present case. All that was decided in that case was that title to immoveable property could be created only by a properly registered instrument. It is by the execution of a registered instrument that title to immoveable property actually passes but that is not a ground for saying that the title passes only on the date of registration. No doubt registration is necessary for giving validity to a document but the right to, or the title to, the property passes from the date of the document even though it be registered sometime after its execution or in other words, in a competition between two documents one earlier and the other later in date the later document, if registered earlier than the former, would have no priority over the former. The mere filing of a plaint either by the executant or by a third person in respect of the property already conveyed would not prevent the vendee from enforcing his rights under the document either by means of compulsory registration or by suing for specific performance. Though under the Indian Law the mere contract of sale does not create a title in the vendee, yet he has the right to enforce the contract; and his right is as on the date of the contract and not on the date when he enforces it. That being so, the mere fact that a vendor admits the execution of the conveyance before the Registration Officer would not bring his act within the purview of s. 52 of the Transfer of Property Act.

We have no hesitation in holding that the document in question is not affected by the doctrine of lis pendens. The Letters Patent Appeal is dismissed.

Pensions Act (XXIII of 1871), s. 4—Assignment of land revenue—Subsequent settlement of proprietary rights—Merger—Mortgage—Decree for sale—Right to receive revenue, whether can be sold.

Government assigned the right to receive the revenue in respect of two villages to the predecessors-in-title of the defendants. Subsequently the proprietors of the soil died out or became extinct and a settlement of the proprietary rights was made with the assignees of the land revenue, but no grant of the land was made in their favour. The defendants mortgaged the villages and the mortgagees obtained a decree on foot of the mortgage. In execution of the decree:

Held, (1) that the mortgagors held two separate capacities with respect to the village in question, that is to say, that they were assignees of land revenue and also the holders of the proprietary right; [p. 571, col. 1.]

(2) that in the absence of a revenue-free grant from the Government, it could not be said that there was a merger of the two different rights. [ibid.]

(3) that the pure zamindari rights of the defendants in the villages could be sold in execution of the mortgage-decree but that their right to receive the Government revenue as assignees thereof was protected from sale by the provisions of s. 4 of the Pensions Act. [ibid.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Badaun, dated the 12th December 1922.

Messrs. N. P. Asthana, Harnandan Prasad and Baleshwari Prasad, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. Varma and S. B. Johari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal concerns itself only with the question, viz., what is the property that is going to be sold?

Certain persons being members of a joint Hindu family with the appellants mortgaged their property described in the plaint as Mouza Muhammadpur Bayar, Pargana Budaun, comprising a 15-biswas share entered in the khewat as holding No. 1, bearing a jama of Rs. 931-6-6. Certain issues arose between the parties and one of the questions raised was whether the mortgagors had any interest in the property which was not liable to be sold. The nature of that interest claimed as unsaleable, will be considered presently. A second appeal was heard by this Court and after an amendment of the decree appealed against, the appeal was remanded for disposal of the issue which is now to be finally disposed of by this Court.

It appears from the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, that is to say, the judgment under appeal, that the ancestors of the mortgagors were originally assignees of the Government revenue in respect of the two villages, viz., Muhammadpur Bayar and Lakhanpur. The learned Judge found that whatever might be the true history of the grant, "undoubtedly these two villages had been held by the ancestors of the appellants as assignees of the revenues during the Mogul times and originally the history of Lakhanpur and that of Muhammadpur Bayar was identical." The learned Judge found, in respect of Lakhanpur, that there were zemindars, with whom the settlement was made by the Government, and that the appellants had been realising the land revenue from the zemindars of Lakhanpur, as assignees of the same. With respect to Muhammadpur, the learned Judge finds that there were certain persons with whom the Moguls and the early British officers made settlements, but later on, when regular settlements came to be made, these persons disappeared and the settlement was made with the assignees of Government revenue themselves. The result was, finds the Judge, that for the last half a century or more the appellants have been treated as the proprietors of the village paying the land revenue to themselves. On these facts, the lower Appellate Court remarked as follows:—"Thus the corpus of village of Muhammadpur Bayar passed into the possession of the muafidar. Act XXIII of 1871, on which the present appellants place reliance, does not refer to immoveable property but only to grants of revenue and money." The learned Judge, accordingly, held that the property mortgaged was saleable.

To start with, we may point out that if the property, as described in the plaint, be sold the purchaser will, on the face of it, be liable to pay a revenue of Rs. 931-6-6. The property is not described in the plaint as being revenue free. It is not said that whoever purchases the property will be exempt from payment of land revenue. In this view, if we simply affirm the decree appealed from, the purchaser would be liable to pay the land revenue, whether the same be payable to the appellants, the mortgagors, or to the Government.

However, the controversy having arisen as to what is the property that is to be sold, we proceed to discuss the question.

Under the Pensions Act, "no Civil Court shall entertain any suit relating to any pension or grant of money or land revenue conferred or made by the British or any former Government, whatever may have been the consideration for any such pension or grant, and whatever may have been the nature of the payment, claim or right for which such pension or grant may have been substituted." (Section 4 of Act XXIII of 1871). It is clear that a grant of immoveable property is not to be treated as 'pension' within the Pensions Act. This is not controverted. It is for this reason that the mortgagees are anxious to induce the Court to hold that the mortgagors are not mere assignees of the land revenue, enjoying a certain sum of money annually, but are the proprietors of the entire village although they do not pay any land revenue. It is conceded on behalf of the plaintiffs, vide document No. 83A dated the 1st of June, 1920, that originally the mortgagors were nothing but assignees of land revenue. When the proprietors of the soil died or became extinct, a settlement was made with the pensioners themselves. That being so, it appears to us there are two separate capacities held by the mortgagors. The fact that the Government made the settlement with the pensioners did not convert the pensioners into "grantees of revenue free immoveable property." The nature of the grant must depend on what the Government gives and not on what may happen irrespective of the wishes of the Government. If the Government gave only the land revenue, any acquisition of the lands by the pensioners themselves cannot make them "a grantee of the immoveable property." This, in our opinion is the criterion for the decision.

It has been urged that the mortgagors have been long in possession as zemindars and that, therefore, the two rights which they possessed have merged into one another. We do not think that there is a merger. The two rights are entirely different. The owner of the soil can enjoy it but subject to payment of the land revenue. That land revenue must be paid to the Government. The Government may choose that the land revenue would be paid, instead of to themselves, to somebody else. So long as the Government does not make a revenue free grant of the land, it cannot be said that there is a merger of the two different rights. The two rights may very well lie in the same person, without merger. We consider that in this case there has been no merger at all.

The result is that, we declare that the property to be sold is the pure zemindari rights which the mortgagors have in the property and their right to the realisation of the Government revenue as assignees thereof are not liable to be sold.

We allow the appeal, modify the decree of the Court below and order that the property as described above be sold. Having regard to all the circumstances of the case, we order that the parties bear their own costs in this Court.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 256 OF 1921.

August 15, 1924.

Present:—Sir Charles Gordon Spencer, Officiating Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Srinivasa Iyengar.

versus

Sri Raja B. NAGANNA NAIDU BAHADUR ZEMINDAR GARU AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS NOS. 2 AND 3—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Maintenance—Wife living separately from husband, whether entitled to maintenance—Heirs of husband, liability of.

A Hindu wife left her husband's house on account of the ill-treatment and indignities to which she was subjected and, after several years, during which she made unsuccessful attempts to be received back into the house of her husband, she brought a suit for arrears of maintenance against her husband and the other members of his family. During the pendency of the suit the husband died:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff had not under the circumstances of the case become disentitled to maintenance on account of her voluntary separation from her husband; [p. 573, col. 2.]

(2) that the plaintiff's right to maintenance was not put an end to by the death of her husband pending the suit but survived against his heirs-at-law whether they succeeded by right of survivorship or by inheritance. [ibid.]

Per Spencer, Offg. C. J.—The obligation of a Hindu husband to maintain his wife is one arising out of the status of marriage. It is a liability created by the Hindu Law in respect of the jural relations of the Hindu family. Where there is no contract between the parties to a marriage, as among the Hindus, a suit by the wife for maintenance is not a suit based upon contract but is a suit arising out of a civil relation resembling with a contract which is specially provided for in Art. 128 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. The heirs of a Hindu who is liable for maintenance are equally bound by the obligation which binds him. [ibid.]

Per Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—Under the Hindu Law the wives of co-parceners are also members of the joint family, though they may not be entitled to shares in the estate of the family or to enforce partition thereof, and the family is bound to maintain all the members of the family. It is true that the Hindu Law imposes an obligation on a Hindu husband to support his wife without reference to any property or share possessed by him, but when the joint family is possessed of property a claim by a wife against her husband need not be regarded merely as a suit for enforcement of any personal obligation but may well be regarded as a suit against the family itself, represented by the husband through whom alone, so long as he is alive, she has to obtain the relief. On his death the true legal representatives in the action would be the surviving co-parceners of the family, if any, or else the personal legal representatives of the deceased husband. [p. 575, col. 2.]

The arrears of maintenance due and payable to a wife by her husband may be regarded as a debt within the meaning of the Hindu Law which is binding on the family. [p. 575, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Ellore, in O. S. No. 36 of 1919 (O. S. No. 22 of 1918 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ellore).

Messrs. D. Appa Rao and C. S. Venkatachariar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. V. Ramadoss and P. Somasundaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, Offg. C. J.—This is a suit to recover 12 years' arrears of maintenance. The first defendant, who was the zemindar of Vallur, died after the institution of the suit and his sons were brought on the record, as second and third defendants. He married two wives, who were sisters of each other. The plaintiff is the senior wife. She bore two sons and a daughter, but the sons died young. She claimed maintenance at the rate of Rs. 500 per month, for the last 12 years. She was living apart from her husband, for the last 23 years; but, as her claim for more than 12 years' maintenance is barred under Art. 128 of the Limitation Act, she makes no claim for the remaining eleven years.

It appears from Exs. G, G2, G3, G4 and G9 which are letters written by the zemindar, that he was fond of his wife at first and grateful to her for letting him marry her sister. In 1890 she went away to Cocanada from Pangidigudem, her husband's residence, but returned. In November, 1894, she and her sister both went away to Cocanada taking their children with them. By that time, the zemindar had brought a concubine named Mahalakshmi to Pangidigudem and, during his absence at Hyderabad, they found poison in the food that was cooked for them, which was the immediate occasion for their leaving the protection of his house. The learned Subordinate Judge regards the poisoning story as a myth. I see no reason to suppose that it was unfounded. It is not proved that the zemindar, who was absent in Hyderabad, ordered poison to be put in his wife's food, but that there was poison is proved by the uncontradicted fact that a dog which ate the curry died soon afterwards. The plaintiff, in her evidence, taken on commission, has told the story as to the poisoning, and her daughter in her evidence, as D. W. No. 1, corroborates it; and the truth of the story is not discounted by the Subordinate Judge's observation, "It is not known how the pills did not dissolve in the curry", for nothing is known or attempted to be proved about the composition of the pills. Anyhow, the presence of a concubine in the Pangidigudem Fort and the poisoning incident were quite sufficient to make the women go somewhere, where they would not run the risk of being poisoned and were sure of being kindly treated. After the wives had gone to Cocanada, the zemindar sued them both for the custody of the children and obtained a decree, but the decree, Ex. VII, was not executed. Attempts were made to take the children by force, in which the plaintiff's brother received injuries. The zemindar accused his wives and his brother of stealing estate jewellery. The District Magistrate, Mr. Brodie, dismissed the complaint in his order Ex. A. He found that the jewellery taken by the plaintiff and her sister consisted only of those jewels, which they were wearing and that they acted without any dishonest intention, and he observed that the "complainant had not allowed any of the accused one pie for their maintenance, since they left Pangidigudem". The High Court in dealing with an appeal, Ex. Z, inferred from the zemindar's conduct that the estate jewels were really secreted by him and that the criminal proceedings instituted against his senior wife were a mere blind. After this, the zemindar made peace with his junior wife and took her back together with her children. She was plaintiff's sister and his third wife, the second wife having died in the first year of her marriage. After this, the plaintiff was continually demanding maintenance from her husband and she came occasionally to Pangidigudem and asked him to let her stay there and live with him as before, but he was constantly putting her off with some excuse or promise that he would make arrangements. Exs. III (m), III (11) and J (1) show that the plaintiff was occasionally going to Pangidigudem, and D. W. No. 5 admits seeing her there, but in a letter Ex. N and a telegram Ex. N (1) the zemindar said that he had no desire to see her and that she should not come. In Ex. K a notice sent to the first defendant before the suit, she mentions that he finally told her not to entertain any hope of being taken into the fort and when she went in person to visit him and be-sought him to take her back, he gave her a lodging outside the fort only and treated her with much indignity.

The Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiff is not estopped from suing for maintenance, but he holds that she was not justified in living separately. He says he has come to the conclusion that the plaintiff voluntarily lived at Cocanada without sufficient justification and that the first defendant felt a sort of antipathy towards her and that he was annoyed with her, for getting their daughter married to a Barrister, who already had one wife living. I am unable to find from the evidence in the case anything to justify the theory that the plaintiff waived her right to maintenace. All the correspondence that passed between the zemindar and his daughter shows that he was very fond of his daughter; and the daughter herself, examined as D. W. No. 1, says that her father did not object to the Barrister, but that it was her aunt who raised objections to the marriage, because she wanted to get the Barrister as a husband to her daughter. Ex. F (1) is a letter written by the first defendant to the plaintiff in 1898, on the subject of this marriage. There is no statement in this letter to suggest that he was opposed to the bridegroom personally, but he says that he is not feeling well, and that he cannot do any business until his mind becomes more steady. The lower Court has discredited the witnesses examined by the plaintiff. The statements made by the plaintiff herself and her daughter have an air of truth about them and should not, in my opinion, have been rejected by the Subordinate Judge, without better reasons. P. W. No. 2, a tutor, and P. W. No. 3, a relation of the parties and P. Ws. Nos. 4, 5 and 6 whom the Subordinate Judge describes as "petty servants", are persons who would be likely to know of the nature of the feelings between the parties and the fact that the plaintiff was from time to time coming to Pangidigudem and asking her husband to support her. P. Ws. Nos. 3 and 4 state that the Rajah promised to consider the request after sometime, but refused to take plaintiff at once, because there were disputes between the senior and junior wives. There is no evidence that the plaintiff stayed away from her husband on account of her dislike for him. The evidence of P. W. No. 3 has been disbelieved as being interested. Ex. C (1), the letter, written by the first defendant to him, shows that he offered to correct his omission of the honorific title, and the incident of its omission was a very trivial one. On the whole, I am unable to accept the Subordinate Judge's finding that the plaintiff disentitled herself to maintenance, on account of her voluntary separation from her husband. The most probable explanation for the plaintiff's failure to sue for maintenance earlier is that she was ever hopeful of being one day taken back to her husband's house and that she was fearful of causing a final break from him. Meanwhile she supported herself on the proceeds of the sale of her own jewellery.

It is argued on behalf of the respondents that they are not liable for arrears of maintenance, as the plaintiff's right consisted of a personal action for tort against the husband, for his neglect to maintain her. In Sidlingappa v. Sidava (1) the obligation of a husband to maintain his wife is described as one arising out of the status of marriage. It is a liability created by the Hindu Law in respect of the jural relations of the Hindu family. Where there is no contract between the parties to a marriage, as among Hindus, a suit for maintenance is not a suit based upon contract, but it is a suit arising out of a civil relation resembling that of a contract which is specially provided for in Art. 128 of the Limitation Act. Mr. Mayne in his book on Hindu Law says that the heirs of a Hindu who is liable for maintenance are equally bound by the obligation which binds him. I have no hesitation in holding that the plaintiff's right of maintenance was not terminated by the death of the 1st defendant and that the right survives as against the 2nd and 3rd defendants who are his heirs in law irrespective of whether they succeeded by right of survivorship or by inheritance.

(1) 2 B. 624; 3 Ind. Jur. 216; 1 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 837.

The lower Court has found that Rs. 300 per mensem would be a suitable rate of maintenance in case maintenance is awarded. The plaintiff as appellant does not now claim more than Rs. 300. The appeal is allowed and a decree will be passed for maintenance at the rate of Rs. 300 per mensem for twelve years with costs calculated thereon in both Courts.

Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—The circumstances under which a Hindu wife leaves her husband's house and goes to her parent's house to live with her parents are, generally speaking, sufficiently indicative of the cause of such an untoward act. Once in the year 1890 both the wives of the deceased first defendant (plaintiff and her sister) left his house and went to their parent's house. They came back. Again in the year 1894 both of them left together. It is in evidence that at any rate by that time the first defendant had come under the influence of a concubine called Mahalakshmi. There is considerable evidence of ill-treatment of both the plaintiff and her sister by the first defendant which, if believed, would undoubtedly be sufficient to justify the plaintiff in living apart from her husband and claiming separate maintenance. The cruelty of a husband towards his wife varies in kind and degree according to the customs and habits of the people and the status of the family. When the woman of a particular family observe a kind of quasi gosha, as they do in most zemindari families, it is not possible to obtain such direct evidence to illtreatment or cruelty as may be possible in other cases. Further the ill-treatment is not likely to be open or brutal but insidious and much more galling. It has been suggested that both the wives left the husband's house in 1894 in order to help their husband's brother to institute against their husband a suit for partition. It may be that the discontented wives leaving their husband's house to take refuge in their parent's house were accorded some sympathy and possibly some help by the discontented brother of their husband. It is incredible that the plaintiff's sister the younger wife of the 1st defendant who had sons born to her of the first defendant should have acted from any such motive. What followed puts the matter beyond all doubt. A criminal prosecution with the inevitable search warrants and other terrors is launched by the first defendant against both his wives and a suit is also instituted by him for the recovery of his children. The story of the execution of the decree obtained by him in that suit is itself sufficiently harassing. It seems to me that till this point it must be conceded that there was abundant justification for the plaintiff staying away from her husband. If thereafter there was any change in the attitude of the husband so as to change the situation and take away the justification, the burden of proving it is heavily on those who represent the husband. The husband foiled in his attempt to get back his sons and being afraid of another suit for partition at the instance of his sons makes it up with his second wife and takes her back leaving the plaintiff alone in her parent's house. The evidence is that the plaintiff also wished to be taken back on that occasion but the first defendant would not. I agree with my Lord the Chief Justice that from that time forth during all these years that succeeded, the plaintiff has been endeavouring to be taken back and hoping that some day sooner or later she would be. There is reason to believe that though after the compromise effected by her husband with the second wife the ascendency of the concubine over him diminished, still the second wife had herself acquired such ascendency and was jealously safe-guarding it. From all the correspondence in the case and the evidence before us, I have come to the conclusion that the first defendant who was a master in the art of putting off managed to put off the plaintiff and her repeated requests to be taken back or to be afforded a separate maintenance while at the same time not finally killing in her the hope of reconciliation some day. Having regard to all the circumstances and the evidence in the case, it seems to me impossible not to come to the conclusion that the plaintiff had to stay away in her parent's house not because she wished it or willed it but only because she was being persistently put off with gentle promises of some kind of satisfactory arrangement by and by.

I consider that the sum of Rs. 300 per mensem fixed by the lower Court is reasonable having regard to the income of the estate.

Mr. Rama Doss the learned Vakil for the respondent, argued that a suit for arrears of maintenance by a Hindu wife against her husband was in the nature of a personal action and abated on the death of her husband. The principle apparently that was sought to be applied was the rule of Civil law Actio personalis moritur cum persona. The expression 'personal action' is technical and has been limited to actions in respect of what are called personal wrongs or torts. The principle underlying this rule has been much questioned and shakened in recent years. I see no reason whatever for extending the rule to an action which as the learned Chief Justice has put it, is based on an obligation arising out of status. I may also add that the true view of the Hindu Law would seem to be that the wives of co-parceners are also members of the joint family though they may not be entitled to shares in the estate of the family or to enforce any partition. The obligation of the family and of its estate to maintain all the members cannot possibly be doubted. It is true that the Hindu Law imposes an obligation on the Hindu husband to support his wife without any reference to any property or share possessed by him, even as it imposes similar obligations on sons to maintain their mother and father. But when the joint family is possessed of property, a claim by a wife against her husband need not be regarded merely as a suit for the enforcement of any personal obligation but may well be regarded as a suit against the family itself represented to her by her husband through whom alone so long as he is alive she has to obtain the relief. On his death the true legal representatives in the action would be the surviving co-parceners of the family, if any, or else the personal legal representatives of the deceased husband.

There is also no reason to suppose why the arrears of maintenance due and payable to a wife by her husband should not be held to be a debt within the meaning of the Hindu Law which has regard only to undischarged obligations and to which the distinction between debts and damage is foreign.

I agree with the learned Chief Justice that the appeal should be allowed and the plaintiffs suit decreed on the terms set out by bim.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for a declaration of the plaintiffs title to certain lands and also for a declaration that the said lands are not liable to assessment of revenue under the provisions of Act IX of 1847. The suit was decreed by the Court of first instance. On appeal preferred by the defendant the lower Appellate Court set aside the decree passed by the Court of first instance in favour of the plaintiffs and made an order of remand which is questioned before us in the present appeal, which has been preferred by the plaintiffs.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of the respondent to the effect that the order in question was not passed by the learned Judge under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 23, and that, therefore, no appeal lies to this Court from that order. As to this preliminary objection it will be observed that the learned Judge does not say anywhere in his judgment under what provisions of law he purported to pass the order and I am not prepared to hold in the absence of anything definitely stated by the learned Judge that the order was not passed under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 23 of the C. P. C. To hold otherwise would be to curtail the right of appeal which should not be done except upon very clear proof of circumstances justifying such curtailment. Assuming, therefore, that the learned Judge made the order under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 23, although it may not be that the provisions of that rule strictly justify the order in question, I am of opinion, following the decision in the case of Radha Krishna Saha v. Kamal Kamini Debya (1) that an appeal lies to this Court from that order. The preliminary objection, therefore, in my opinion, fails.

Then as to the appeal itself the learned Advocate appearing on behalf of the appellants has urged two points for our consideration. The first is that the order of remand is not one contemplated by law and that the findings of the learned Judge do not disclose any opinion for reversing the decision of the Court of first instance in this matter and that if the learned Judge was of opinion that the proper issues had not been framed or had not been tried he should have made an order under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 25 or if he was of opinion that additional evidence was necessary he should have made an order under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 27. The second contention put forward on behalf of the appellants is that the learned Judge was wrong in directing certain amendment to be made in respect of one of the issues framed in the suit, namely, issue No. 7.

So far as the first contention is concerned, in order to judge of its worth it is necessary to examine a little closely the judgment of the learned Judge and the findings which were recorded in that judgment. The learned Judge observed in his judgment that upon the evidence in the case, it was not possible to hold that the lands in suit formed part of the plaintiffs' permanently settled estate which had been assessed to revenue. He held that it lay upon the plaintiffs to prove that the disputed lands were specifically included in the estate as settled with the plaintiffs' predecessors in 1793 and were assessed to revenue then. He then dealt with Rennell's map which was one of the documents relied upon by the plaintiffs for the purposes of their case. He discussed certain authorities dealing with the question as to the value of Rennell's map as a guide for determining the boundaries of estates and ultimately he observed that the map was of very little evidentiary value as regards the position and boundaries of villages and estates and that it did not show the state of things at the time of the Permanent Settlement. He further observed, that it could not be said that Rennell's map was correctly relaid or correctly superimposed on the case map with reference to any fixed point, in both those maps, for there is no fixed point in the case map. Then he recorded certain findings to the effect that both the parties were in default in the matter of production of evidence which was necessary for the purposes of their respective cases. He was of opinion that the evidence that was on the record was neither complete nor satisfactory; and being of opinion that though the onus was upon the plaintiffs to prove their case, the defendants could as well have filed their papers in order to disprove the plaintiffs' case and he was not inclined to throw out the plaintiffs' case on that ground of their failure to produce evidence and he thought that there should be a fresh trial of the suit. With regard to the trial of the suit in the Court of first instance he remarked that the learned Subordinate Judge who tried the suit did not discuss the facts and law in such a way as might be of any assistance to the Appellate Court and that the findings of fact at which the learned Subordinate Judge had arrived were arrived at in a cursory way and that the oral and the documentary evidence had neither been fully nor fairly discussed. Being of that opinion he made the order

The question is whether upon circumstances such as these it was open to the lower Appellate Court not to make an order strictly in accordance with the provisions of O. XLI r. 23 or O. XLI, r. 25 or O. XLI, r. 27, but to make an order of remand setting aside the decision of the Court of first instance and directing a fresh trial to be held. Now it has been held by this Court in the case of Abdul Karim Abu Ahmad Khan Ghaznavi v. Allahabad Bank, Limited (2) that the powers of the Appellate Court as regards remand are not restricted to the case specified in O. XLI, r. 23 but that the Court by reason of its inherent jurisdiction vested in it by s. 151 of the C. P. C. may remand in any case other than the case specified in O. XLI, r. 23, if it be necessary for the ends of justice to do so. The order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge in the present case although it may not be justified by the terms of O. XLI, r. 23 may very well be justified as having been passed under the inherent powers vested in a Court by s. 151, C. P. C. I am of opinion, that the order was a just and proper order having regard to the facts and circumstances of this particular case and that it should not be disturbed.

With regard to the next contention, namely, as to the order of the Subordinate Judge directing that issue No. 7 should be amended, the position is this. The plaintiffs' suit as laid in the plaint was to the effect that the lands in question formed part of the plaintiffs' permanently settled estate. The defence set out in the written statement was to the effect that the lands were outside the ambit of any of the plaintiffs' settled estates and that they had been rightly and legally assessed to revenue. On these pleadings issues were framed and it is necessary to refer only to two of them. Issue No. 7, as originally framed, was "Whether the lands in suit or any part thereof are reformations in situ of the plaintiffs or any other permanently settled estates and are covered by the Thakbust boundaries of any of the plaintiffs' mouzas." Issue No. 8 was in these words: "Whether the lands in suit have been rightly and legally resumed and assessed by Government?" Before the suit came on for hearing the plaintiffs brought to the notice of the Court that issue No. 7 as originally framed required an amendment. There was a good reason why this prayer was made. It is clear and it cannot be disputed, whether the lands appertain to the plaintiffs' estate or not, if it can be shown that they formed part of their estate permanently settled, that they could not be assessed to revenue and upon this ground this application was made for amendment of issue No. 7. This amendment appears to have been allowed presumably without opposition from the defendant and evidence was led upon the issue so amended. On such amendment the issue was worded thus: "Whether the lands in suit or any part thereof are reformations in suit of the plaintiffs or any other permanently settled estate, and are covered by the thakbust boundaries of any of the plaintiffs' or other mouzas." The Court of first instance came to the conclusion upon the evidence that although the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the lands formed part of their permanently settled estate they must have been included in some one or other of the mouzas that were permanently settled. The learned Judge on appeal, however, thought that the suit should have been tried upon the issues as originally framed. I am unable to find any justification for ordering an amendment of the issues upon which the suit had already been tried without any objection of any of the parties and for directing that the suit might be re-tried upon imperfect issue framed on the pleadings of the parties. It cannot be disputed that an issue may be framed not merely by reference to the pleadings but also by reference to other matters and so long as any amendment, that is made, does not prejudice the parties it cannot be said that the trial held upon the issue amended in that way was not a proper trial. I am, therefore, of opinion that this part of the order of the learned Additional District Judge directing an amendment of the issue No. 7 should be set aside.

With this modification the appeal, in my opinion, should be dismissed.

Each party will bear its own costs in this appeal.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

Where a mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property sells it to a third person as if he was the absolute owner thereof, but the transferee deals with the mortgagor, acknowledges his title throughout, assumes his own possession to be only that of a mortgagee tenant and pays rent to the mortgagor; he is liable to be ejected at the instance of the mortgagor and Art. 134 of Sch. Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are somewhat complicated and I think it is unnecessary to state them in great detail. Chiyamu was apparently the original owner of the property, but by Ex. B, dated the 15th January 1888, he acknowledged the plaintiff's title and obtained a kanom (mortgage) of the property. Whatever the rights originally of the parties were, that on the date of Ex. B the plaintiff became the owner of it there is no question. Chiyamu who was thus only a mortgagee executed a deed of sale Ex. 3 on the 8th February 1897 in favour of his son-in-law, Mooppan. The sale was made on the footing that Chiyamu was absolutely entitled to the property. In October or November of the same year Chiyamu died and on the 23rd of June 1898, a partition, Ex. G, was effected among his heirs and the kanom right of Chiyamu over the property in question fell to the share of Aiyasabi, his daughter. The sale in favour of Mooppan was thus ignored in the deed of partition and it is equally important to notice that the only right which Chiyamu was assumed to possess was the kanom right. Ex G was attested by Mooppan, the brother-in-law of Aiyasabi. The next transaction is the transfer in favour of Mooppan by Ex. K dated the 2nd August 1898, of the kanom right which fell to the share of Aiyasabi. It is suggested that Ex. K is not a genuine document. The Subordinate Judge assumes that it is genuine, but does not record any definite finding. The question is not, however, of much importance as Mooppan recognised subsequent to Exs. G and K the jenm right (absolute title) of the plaintiff and paid him rent on the footing that he was only a kanomdar. Payment of rent is evidenced by Ex. P series. That rent was paid, is found as a question of fact by the Subordinate Judge. Whether Mooppan came into possession of the property under the conveyance to him, Ex. 3, or under Ex. K is not distinctly found. This again, in my opinion, is not material. It is established beyond doubt that the right which he claimed over the property was that of a kanomdar and that he admitted the absolute right of the plaintiff and paid him rent. Mooppan's possession, therefore, even subsequent to Ex. 3 was that of a tenant.

I must now refer to another set of transactions in virtue of which the 2nd defendant claims the property. Mooppan, by Ex. 6, dated the 19th June 1906, professing to be the owner of the property, mortgaged it by way of hypothecation to one Parangodan. Possession remained with Mooppan and Parangodan assigned the hypothecation to Kunhi Bava. The latter filed Suit No. 695 of 1909 against Mooppan to enforce his mortgage and obtained a decree and brought the property to sale. The second defendant became the purchaser at the Court auction. It is not disputed that the 2nd defendant has not been in possession of the property for 12 years.

The short question to be decided is, whether Art. 134 of the Limitation Act is applicable. It runs thus:—

"To recover possession of immoveable property conveyed or bequeathed in trust or mortgaged and afterwards transferred by the trustee or mortgagee for valuable consideration, 12 years from the date of transfer."

The contention of the 2nd defendant is, that Chiyamu was the mortgagee and he transferred it to Mooppan and that therefore, the suit which was instituted more than 12 years after the date of Ex. 3 (the sale in favour of Mooppan) is barred. Unless the transfer in favour of Mooppan was for valuable consideration. Art. 134 would not apply. Although the circumstances of the case make it highly probable that Mooppan did not pay consideration, I do not propose to rest my judgment on that, as the lower Appellate Court has not given a definite finding on the point. Then did Mooppan get into possession of the property under Ex. 3 or under Ex. K? Though on this question again, I am inclined to think that he came into possession under Ex. K, I do not desire to make this, the basis of my judgment. Were it necessary, I would have called for findings on these questions. I think, however, it is unnecessary to put the parties to further expense and permit further time to be taken up. Mooppan, notwithstanding the fact that he took the sale-deed, admitted the jenm right of the plaintiff, dealt with him on the footing that he was the mortgagor-landlord, acknowledged his title, paid him rent and constituted himself mortgagee-tenant, and throughout assumed his possession to be that of a tenant; Mooppan then would have had no defence to the action of the plaintiff. He would not have been in a position to rely upon Art. 134. The 2nd defendant claims through Mooppan and he cannot be in a better position than Mooppan was. On this short ground, I am clearly of the opinion that Art. 134 is not applicable.

If the plaintiff by his conduct had led the 2nd defendant to believe that Mooppan was the owner of the property, the plaintiff might under s. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, be precluded from disputing the title of Mooppan. But it is not pretended that the plaintiff has done any act which might produce this result.

A subsidiary contention was raised in regard to the apportionment of the kanom amount. The Counsel for the respondent, however, in order to avoid a further enquiry, has agreed to pay the full kanom amount, namely, Rs. 61-1-2 although the amount payable in respect of the suit property has been held to be only Rs. 28-14-11.

The appellant's learned Vakil has contended that he disputes the amount of purapad allowed. No argument appears to have been put forward in regard to this before the lower Appellate Court. To induce me to send this case back, this contention has now been raised. I overrule it.

Subject to the modification, that the kanom amount is raised from Rs. 28-14-11 to Rs. 61-1-2, the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Time for redemption is extended by three months.

CIVIL REVISION No. 216 OF 1924.
February 16, 1925.
Present:—Mr. Justice Mukerji.
G. I. P. RAILWAY—DEFENDANT—APPLICANT
versus
FIRM RADHEY LAL-MANNI LAL—PLAINTIFF—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts. 30, 31—Railways Act (IX of 1890), s. 56—Goods consigned to Railway Company for carriage—Suit for compensation for non-delivery—Limitation, commencement of—Delivery refused by Railway Company—Sale of goods—Plaintiff, whether entitled to recover market value—Company, whether can dispute title of consignor—Estoppel.

On 4th November 1922 plaintiff consigned certain goods in nine bags to the defendant Railway Company for carriage. When the goods arrived at their destination it was found that two of the bags were missing. On 5th December 1922 the consignee who went to take delivery of the goods and discovered the loss of the two bags offered to take delivery of the seven bags but the Station Master refused to allow this. Later on the higher Railway Officials agreed to let the consignee have delivery of the seven bags but delivery was again refused by the Station Master. Subsequently, the plaintiff was called upon to take delivery of the goods but he failed to do so and the goods were consequently sold by the Railway Company. On 3rd December 1923, plaintiff brought a suit to recover from the Company the market value of the goods:

Held, (1) that the suit was governed by Art. 31 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and that the limitation began to run from the 5th December 1922, when the Station Master refused to deliver the goods to the plaintiff and consequently the suit was within time; [p. 580, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that even if it were assumed that with regard to the value of the two bags which were missing the suit was governed by Art. 30 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, as there was nothing to show that the two bags, which were missing on the 5th of December 1922, had really been lost earlier than that date, the suit was still within time, the burden of proof being on the defendants to prove when the actual loss took place as the matter was within their peculiar knowledge; [p. 580,col. 2.]

(3) that the defendants having twice refused to give delivery to the plaintiff, the plaintiff was not bound to take delivery on the 3rd occasion when called upon by the defendant Company to do so, and that, therefore, he was entitled to recover the market value of the goods and not merely the price fetched by the sale held at the instance of the defendant Company. [ibid.]

Section 56 of the Railways Act does not apply where a consignee, at the request of the Railway Company itself, wanted to remove the goods but was not allowed by the Railway Company to do so. [ibid.]

In a suit for recovery of compensation for the non-delivery of goods consigned to a Railway Company for carriage, the Company cannot, as between themselves and the consignor, dispute the title of the consignor to the goods. [p. 581, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore, dated the 8th of September 1924.

Mr. Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise a judgment of the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore.

The respondents consigned goods in nine bags to Salamatpur from a Railway Station at Cawnpore. When the goods arrived at Salamatpur, it was found that two of the packages sent were not the same as had been consigned at Cawnpore. The person who wanted to take delivery on behalf of the consignees proposed that seven of the bags should be handed over to him and the two remaining bags, which did not belong to the consignment, should be left there. The Station Master did not agree to this arrangement. Later on, higher Railway Officials wrote agreeing to this arrangement. Even then the Station Master at Salamatpur would not agree that the seven bags admitted to be a part of the consignment should be removed. Thereafter, there was some correspondence and the suit was brought. Several defences were taken including a plea of limitation and they have all been decided against the defendants, hence this petition in revision.

Three points were urged and I will consider them.

The question of limitation arises in this way. The goods were booked on the 21st of November 1922. On the 5th of December 1922 the consignees went to the Railway Station and wanted to take away seven of the packages but the Station Master refused. On the 3rd of December 1923, the suit was brought. Thus the suit was within one year of the failure of the Railwey Company to deliver goods (vide Art. 31 of the Limitation Act). It is said that as regards two of the packages Art. 30 would apply. Even if Art. 30 applied, there is nothing to show that the two packages which were missing on the 5th of December, 1922, had really been lost earlier than that date. The matter was within the peculiar knowledge of the defendants and it was for the defendants to have proved when the actual loss took place. The point of limitation, therefore, fails.

The second question is whether the defendants were justified in selling the goods and offering the sale price to the plaintiffs after deducting the costs due to them. As already stated above, the plaintiffs or their men made two attempts to obtain delivery of their goods. On the second occasion they went to the spot at the request of the Railway Company themselves. It is true that on the third and fourth occasions, viz., on the 10th of April 1923, and the 20th April 1923, the Railway Company again asked the plaintiffs to take delivery of the seven packages. The question is whether the plaintiffs could very well say that they were not going to hear the Railway Company after two attempts of obtaining delivery had failed. No hard and fast rule can be laid down for all cases. But, in this case, it appears to me that the plaintiffs could very well say that they made two honest attempts to obtain delivery of goods and if the Railway Company retained the goods at the time, they did so at their own risk. I agree with the Court below that the plaintiffs are entitled to recover the market value of the goods consigned and are not bound to accept such price as was fetched by the sale held at the instance of the Railway Administration.

I may mention here that I read s. 56 of the Railways Act. It applies to ordinary cases. It does not apply where the plaintiffs, at the request of the Railway Company themselves, wanted to remove the goods, but was not allowed to do so

The last point urged is that the plaintiffs have no right to sue. This point was taken by way of an amendment of the written statement. The argument is based, in this Court, on the rule of law that a railway receipt is a mercantile document of title and it passes title in the goods to which it relates, on an endorsement. This does not appear to have been exactly the point raised in the Court below. Indeed, the judgment of the Court below does not bear any indication of any such argument having been brought forward before it. The fourth ground of appeal which alone relates to the right to maintain the suit does not cover the point. The question involves questions of fact and I decline to entertain it without proper findings.

The lower Court found that the plaintiffs consinged not only their own goods but some goods which their customer purchased for himself and had asked them to consign with the plaintiff's own goods. An argument was based on this fact, viz., the plaintiffs were not the owners of the entire goods and that, therefore, they could not maintain the suit. To this argument the clear answer was that as between the Railway Company on the one hand and the plaintiffs, the consignors on the other, the Railway Company could not dispute the title of the consignors to the goods.

The petition in revision fails and it is hereby dismissed with costs.

APPEALS FROM APPELLATE DECREES NOS. 1020 AND 1131 TO 1133 OF 1920.

PYARI MOHAN GANTAM AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Estates Partition Act (V B. C. of 1897), ss. 7, 83, 99—Ejectment suit—Tenure, existence of—Burden of proof—Private arrangement, effect of.

Where after a partition under the Estates Partition Act a proprietor brings a suit for ejectment and the defendant pleads the existence of a tenure in answer to the suit and proves such existence, it is for the plaintiff to make out circumstances which would entitle him to a decree. That is to say, he must make out a case under s. 99 of the Act, and in order to do so he must prove that the estate that has been partitioned was held in common tenancy and that the tenure was not created by him. If he succeeds in proving this he will get a decree for khas possession or joint possession with the defendants to the extent of his share, according as he is the sole owner or only a co-sharer in the estate from which he seeks to eject the defendant. The fact that the estate was held in common tenancy has to be proved by the plaintiff. The existence of the tenure has to be proved by the defendant. The plaintiff has to prove that the tenure was not created by him. If the defendant can prove that it was created by any other proprietor of the estate, it will hold good as regards the lands finally allotted to the share of such proprietor. [p. 584, col. 1.]

There is no presumption in law that because an estate has been partitioned under the Estates Partition Act, it must necessarily have been held by the proprietors in common tenancy and not in severalty. [ibid.]

The private arrangement described in s. 7 of the Estates Partition Act is not necessarily the same private arrangement that would prevent the application of s. 99 of the Act. If it is found that the estate was held not in common tenancy but in severalty in pursuance of some private arrangement amongst the parties, s. 99 will not have any application. [p. 584, col. 2.]

Unless the plaintiff who is suing in ejectment can bring his case within s. 99 of the Act, he must take his estate subject to the tenure of the defendant. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—These four appeals arise out of as many suits instituted by the plaintiffs for recovery of possession of certain lands upon declaration that the plaintiffs have got zemindari right therein and that the defendants have no tenure appertaining thereto.

Pargana Kotalipara bore Touzi No. 4515 of the Faridpur Collectorate. This estate was partitioned by the Collector under the Estates Partition Act into 28 sahams, and each saham was formed into a separate estate bearing a separate number. The plaintiff in one of the suits is the owner of 16-annas of one of the separate estates, and the plaintiffs in the other three suits are entitled to shares in some of the other separate estates. The plaintiffs seek to eject the defendants in these suits, in three of which the other co-sharers of these separate estates have been made pro forma defendants, on the ground that the principal defendants hold the lands under certain fictitious tenures which they have managed to get recorded in the last Cadastral Survey and Settlement proceedings as appertaining to the zemindari without the plaintiff's knowledge.

The principal defendants claim to hold the lands in all the suits as owners of a sikmi taluq Nanadram Choudhry and in one of the suits also as owners of a howla Nobo Kumar Das. They contend that the tenures are not fictitious but real, that there was a private partition and arrangement amongst the co-sharers of the estate Touzi No. 4515 by which the said co-sharers were in possession of separate lands, that the sikmi taluq was created by all the proprietors, that the sikmi taluq as well as the howla have been existing from before the Permanent Settlement and that all the co-sharers of the zemindari have all along recognized these tenures, and that the defendants are not liable to eviction.

The Court of first instance decreed the suits. These decrees were evicting the defendants in such of the suits in which the plaintiffs are owners of the entire separate estates and in such of the suits in which the plaintiffs are only fractional owners, the decrees awarded the plaintiffs joint possession to the extent of their shares with the defendants in these suits. On appeals preferred by the principal defendants the said decrees were affirmed by the Court of Appeal below. The lower Appellate Court found that the sikmi taluq Nandaram Choudhury existed from before the Permanent Settlement, that the howla Nobo Kumar Das was created long after the Permanent Settlement, that there was no evidence that the tenures were created by all the proprietors and that the tenures were not proved to have been recognized by all the proprietors. It was further found that it was not established that the predecessors of the present plaintiffs had given their share or shares in the taluq or the howla to the predecessors of the present defendants or that the lands in suit in this way appertain to those tenures. The said Court, therefore, upheld the decision of the Court of the first instance decreeing the suits, and further held "that these tenures shall hold goods as regards the lands finally allotted to the share or shares that have been formed into separate estates of those proprietors whose predecessors created the same."

The first ground urged on behalf of the appellants is that the finding of the Court of Appeal below to the effect that there is no evidence to show that the tenures were created by all the proprietors and that it has not been proved that they were recognized by all the proprietors, was arrived at without considering several relevant documents that had been adduced in evidence on behalf of the defendants and which were on the record. Mr. Sen appearing on behalf of the appellants had drawn our attention to several documents as supporting a finding contrary to that at which the learned Subordinate Judge has arrived, but on a careful examination of those documents I am unable to hold that they really assist his client in this respect. Then it would appear that some of these documents, e. g., Ex. A., Ex. B. and Ex. S. (1) are specifically referred to by the learned Subordinate Judge in his judgment; while as to the others, although they are not so mentioned, the learned Subordinate Judge did take them into consideration, for he has referred to the fact that they are noticed in brief in the judgment of the Court of first instance. I have no reason to think that the learned Subordinate Judge did not consider their bearing on the case, though no detailed examination of their contents appears in his judgment. There is no substance, in my opinion, in this contention and it must accordingly fail.

The next point urged by Mr. Sen on behalf of the appellants is that it has not been found that Pargana Kotalipara, that is to say the parent estate, was held in common tenancy and not held in severalty in pursuance of a private arrangement amongst the proprietors and that such a finding is necessary so as to entitle the plaintiffs to a declaration that the tenures in question should hold good as regards the lands finally allotted to the share of the proprietors who may have created them and to such lands only. In other words it is contended that although it has been found that there was not such a division formally made and agreed to by all the proprietors as would attract the operation of s. 7 of the Act, it has not been found that the estate was held, in fact, in common tenancy so as to entitle the plaintiffs to evict the defendants by the operation of s. 99 of the Act. It is urged, in substance, that the plaintiffs must bring their case within the terms of that section before they can succeed in evicting the defendants and that the findings necessary for that purpose are wanting.

Mr. Chakravarti, on behalf of the respondents, contends, on the other hand, that the findings are sufficient and that no finding as to the estate having been held in common tenancy is necessary. He contends that what was pleaded in the written statement was that the partition effected by the Collector was void by reason of the provisions of s. 7 of the Estates Partition Act and that there is a clear finding negativing the existence of the conditions mentioned in that section. He says it was for the defendants to show that the estate was not a common tenancy but in severalty by virtue of some private arrangement amongst co-owners and that the defendants failed to prove the same. He furthermore distinctly and definitely urges that it is not necessary for the plaintiffs to rely on s. 99 of the Act, but that under the general law the plaintiffs, upon the findings that have been arrived at, are entitled to a decree for possession.

The question, therefore, ultimately reduces itself into one of sufficiency or otherwise of the findings arrived at by the Court below and also as to what is necessary to be proved in order to justify decrees for possession, such as have been passed in these suits.

Mr Chakravarti, as I have stated, relies upon what he says to be the general law. He says that the plaintiffs are zemindars, and as such they have prima facie title to the gross collections from all the mouzas within their zemindari and it is for the defendants, if they desire to remain upon the land, to prove their right. He relies upon the case of Rajah Sahib Perhlad Sein v. Maharajah Rajendar Kishore Singh (1), where their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observed as follows: "The appellant is the zemindar; and as such he has a prima facie title to the gross collections from all the mouzas within his zemindari. It lay upon the respondents to defeat that right by proving the grant of an intermediate tenure. In their Lordships' opinion, there is in the record before them no satisfactory proof of the deed relied upon, or of any right or interest in these villages beyond, at most, the lifetime of Madan Mohan Tewari." There can be no dispute as to the proposition of law enunciated as above; but can it be said that the defendants have failed to prove their right in this case? Upon the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge, the defendants have succeeded in proving the existence of the two tenures, one from before the Permanent Settlement and the other since then—tenures the character of which was impugned as fictitious, but which have been proved to be real tenancies. The only thing which the defendants have failed to prove is either that the plaintiff's predecessor or the whole body of the proprietors created them. It may be amply inferred from the findings, more especially from the portion of the judgment quoted above, that the tenures were, in fact, created by some one or more of the proprietors. Their right the defendants have established, though they have been unable to point out the particular person or persons who created that right in its inception. To hold that under such circumstances the plaintiff can eject the defendants without proof of any other circumstances would be to hold that the effect of a partition under the Estates Partition Act is to annul all tenures, leases and encumbrances unless the holders thereof can point out the particular individual or individuals out of the entire body of co-proprietors who may have created the same. To hold that this is the law would also lead to this position that it will be open to the zemindars if they are so minded, to annul all tenures or leases and encumbrances by combining together and getting a partition effected under the Estates Partition Act. In that case the owner of a separate estate formed after partition under the Estates Partition Act would get perhaps higher rights than a purchaser at a revenue sale. This, in my opinion, is not the law, and could never have been the intention of the Legislature.

The defendants attempted to prove that the tenures in question existed from before the Permanent Settlement and were created by all the proprietors of the estate or were admitted by all the proprietors to have been so created. This, they did in order to show that the rents payable on these tenures were assets within the meaning of s. 3 sub-s. (1), of the Act, which should have been taken into consideration in making the partition, and also for availing of the benefit of the provisions of s. 83 of the Act. The onus with regard to this was undoubtedly on the defendants, and they failed to charge the same. That, however, does not put an end to their rights. The character of the tenures having been found to be real and not fictitious as alleged on behalf of the plaintiffs, it is for the plaintiffs, who are suing in ejectment, to make out circumstances which would entitle them to a decree. They must make out a case under s. 99 of the Act.

What then are matters that have to be proved in order to make out a case under that section. It has to be proved in the first place that the estate that has been partitioned was held in common tenancy; there is no presumption in law that because an estate has been partitioned under the Estates Partition Act, it must necessarily have been held by the proprietors in common tenancy and not in severalty. In the next place, it has to be proved that the tenure, lease or encumbrance was not created by the plaintiff. Then the plaintiff will get a decree for khas possession or joint possession with the defendants to the extent of his share according as he is the sole owner or only a co-sharer in the estate from which he seeks to eject the defendant. The fact that the estate was held in common tenancy has to be proved by the plaintiff. The existence of the tenure, lease or encumbrance has to be proved by the defendant. The plaintiff has to prove that it was not created by him. If the defendant can prove that it was created by any proprietor of the estate, it will hold good as regards the lands finally allotted to the share of such proprietor.

Now what are the findings of the learned Subordinate Judge in the present case? The learned Judge's finding is in these words "In the circumstances I am inclined to hold that the estate was virtually held in common tenancy and it was never partitioned by any private arrangement formally made and agreed to by all the proprietors as contemplated by s. 7 of the Estates Partition Act and that the several proprietors consequently did not take possession in pursuance of such arrangement of separate lands to be held in severalty as representing their individual interest in the estate." This is a finding disposing of the defendants' objection to the validity of the partition based upon s. 7 of the Act. The learned Judge rightly pointed out in his judgment that the defendants wanted "to make out that there was a private partition amongst the proprietors formally made and agreed to by all of them under s. 7 of the Estates Partition Act." This finding disposes of that objection. But it is not a finding to the effect that the estate was held in common tenancy as required by the terms of s. 99 of the Act. The private arrangement described in s. 7 of the Act is not necessarily the same private arrangement that would prevent the application of s. 99; and if it is found that the estate was held not in common tenancy but in severalty in pursuance of some private arrangement amongst the parties s. 99 will not have any application: Hridoy Nath Shaha v. Bibee Mohobutnessa (2) and Abdul Latif v. Amanaddi (3).

It is not that the fact of a common tenancy was admitted on behalf of the defendants. In their written statements they distinctly averred that there was a private arrangement effected with mutual admission and consent amongst the proprietors for upwards of a century, to hold the zemindari in distinctly separate hisyas. No doubt they went further and alleged that such private arrangements led to a formal partition resulting in the different co-sharers holding the lands according to their respective shares such as would come within s. 7 of the Act; but all the same the denial of a common tenancy was there and it was for the plaintiffs to prove that the estate was a common tenancy. The Court of Appeal below has come to no finding on this question.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the findings are not sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to the decrees they have obtained in these suits. I am clearly of opinion that the plaintiffs cannot succeed unless they can avail themselves of the benefit of s. 99 of the Act, and as Mr. Chakravarti contends that they do not wish to do so, and as on the findings the plaintiffs failed to prove that the tenures are fictitious, these suits should have been dimissed. Unless the plaintiffs who are suing in ejectment, can bring their case within s. 99 of the Act they must take their estates subject to the tenures of the defendants. If any authority were needed for this position, reference may be made to the observation of this Court in the case of Nogendra Mohan Roy

(2) 20 C. 285; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 194.
(3) 9 Ind. Cas. 539; 15 C. W. N. 426.

v. Pyari Mohan Saha (4), where in a suit for ejectment under somewhat similar circumstances it having been found that s. 99 of the Act had no application, it was held that "the inference follows that the plaintiffs have taken the disputed lands subject to the tenure of the defendant and was not entitled to eject them."

With all deference to Mr. Chakravarti's arguments, however, I am not sure that the plaintiffs do not intend to rely upon s. 99 of the Act. The Court of first instance held that it was by virtue of s. 99 of the Act that the the tenures were ,as that Court put it, "annulled." One of the questions formulated by the learned Subordinate Judge for his determination was "Has s. 99 of the Act any application to the case?" I, therefore, think that the proper order for us to make in these appeals would be to set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and send back the cases to that Court to deal with and dispose of the appeals on determining the following questions: First, whether the estate Touzi No. 4515 was held by the proprietors in common tenancy within the meaning of s. 99 of the Estates Partition Act, and the lands of the estate were not held in severatly by the proprietors in pursuance of any private arrangement amongst themselves? Second, whether the plaintiffs in each of these suits or their predecessors-in-interest were parties to the creation of the tenures in question? The plaintiffs in each of the suits will be entitled to a decree in the event of the first question being answered in the affirmative and the second one in the negative. Such decree will be one for eviction of or for joint possession with the principal defendants accordingly as the plaintiffs are sole or fractional owners of the separate estates.

There are indications in this case that the parties failed to realize the legal effect of their pleadings. I would accordingly direct that they be allowed to adduce such further evidence on the questions formulated as above in the lower Appellate Court.

The costs of these appeals should abide the result.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 1696 of 1922.

December 18, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mukerji and Mr. Justice Daniels.

Babu SHEODARSHAN SINGH—OPPOSITE PARTY—APPELLANT

versus

BENI CHAUDHRI AND OTHERS—APPLICANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 7—Redemption, suit for—Decree, construction of—Costs, whether charge on mortgaged land—Payment of decretal amount without costs, whether compliance with decree.

The decree of an Appellate Court in a suit for redemption increased the amount of money declared to be payable to the mortgagee by the First Court by a certain sum and went on to state that a certain specified sum was payable by the plaintiff to the defendant on or before a certain date. The decree further stated that certain costs were payable by the plaintiff to the defendant and continued that if the plaintiff paid the "sum aforesaid" to the defendant within a certain date, etc.:

Held, per Mukerji, J.—That it was not the intention of the Court to make the costs as stated in the decree a charge on the property and that if the plaintiff paid the sum mentioned in the earlier portion of the decree as payable by him to the defendant it was a sufficient compliance with the decree. [p. 586, col. 2.]

Per Daniels, J.—That the operative part of the decree clearly directed that the plaintiff must pay the sum mentioned in the decree and the costs and that if the plaintiff failed to pay the costs along with the mortgage-money within the time limited by the decree, the decree was not satisfied. [p. 587, col. 2.]

Per Mukerji, J.—It is open to an Appellate Court in a mortgage suit either to pass a personal decree for costs against the unsuccessful party or to make the costs payable out of the mortgaged property. In every case it is a matter of interpretation what was intended by the Appellate Court. [p. 586, col. 2.]

Per Daniels, J.—Under O. XXXIV, r. 7 of the C. P. C. the Court must direct that an account be taken of what is due to the defendant for principal and interest on the mortgage and for his costs of the suit, if awarded to him. The form of the decree prescribed by the Code under the rule contemplates that the costs of the suit shall be a charge on the mortgaged property and shall be regarded as such. [p. 587, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 26th June 1922.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—The facts of this case briefly are these:—The original plaintiff who is the appellant before this Court, viz., Sheodarshan Singh brought a suit for redemption in the Court of the Munsif of Ballia. He obtained a decree on the 22nd of April 1919 on condition of payment of

Rs. 1,747-8-6 for principal mortgage money and interest and Rs. 69-2-0 costs. In all he was declared entitled to obtain possession of the property on payment of Rs. 1,816-10-6. This sum was deposited in Court. The mortgagees, however, did not acquiesce in this decree and appealed. In the meanwhile the final decree was prepared on the 26th of June 1919 in accordance with the preliminary decree passed by the First Court. The plaintiff obtained delivery of possession on the 15th of July 1919. The Appellate Court by its decree dated the 2nd of December 1920 varied the decree of the Court of first instance and the main question to be decided in this appeal is what is the true interpretation of that decree.

The Appellate Court directed that a further sum ought to be paid to the defendants in the case and extended the time for payment up to the 2nd of March 1921. Within this period, it is common ground, a further sum of Rs. 175 was paid by the plaintiff. The question is whether he ought to have paid as a condition precedent to his obtaining delivery of possession a further sum of Rs. 45-6 0.

The defendants alleging that the total sum payable to them had not been paid within the time allowed by the Court of Appeal came to the Court asking for redelivery of possession to them and they also asked for mesne profits. Possession has not so far been re-delivered to the mortgagees. But they have been awarded Rs. 800 as mesne profits for two years. This period of two years is the period between the 15th of July 1919, the date of the delivery of possession and the 18th of June 1921, the date of the defendants' application for restitution.

It is contended on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant who has appealed against the decree of the lower Court directing him to pay mesne profits that he has really complied with the terms of the decree. His contention is that the decree did not make the payment of extra costs with which he was saddled a condition precedent to redemption. In the case of Amina Bibi v. Rama Shankar Misar (1), two learned Judges of this Court discussed the question how far the costs awarded by a Court of Appeal were a charge on the property mortgaged. The learned Judges, as I read those judgments, were of opinion that it was open to the Appellate Court either to pass a personal decree against the unsuccessful party or to make the costs payable out of the mortgaged property. The learned Judges thought that in every case it was a matter of interpretation what was intended by the Appellate Court. Mr. Justice Piggott said in his separate judgment in the case of Amina Bibi v. Rama Shankar Misar (1): " If these propositions of law are sound.....the question . . . resolves itself into one of the interpretation of the decree actually passed by the Appellate Court." I am of the same opinion as those learned Judges. It is entirely a matter of interpretation of a decree as to whether the Appellate Court in a particular decree made the costs payable out of the mortgaged property or by the mortgagor personally.

Coming to the particular decree before us, we find that the Appellate Court said that it was increasing the amount of the money payable to the mortgagees by a sum of Rs. 175. Then it said that a total sum of Rs. 1,991-10-6 was payable by the plaintiff to the defendants on or before the 2nd of March 1921. After having said so much, the Court went on to say that certain costs were payable by one party to another. After making these statements the decree went on to say: "If the plaintiff paid the "sum aforesaid" within the 2nd of March 1921 etc." Now the question is whether the decree meant that over and above the sum of Rs. 1,991-10-6 mentioned in a lump sum, the sums mentioned as costs in the cause were also to be paid as a condition precedent to redemption. As I read the decree it was not the intention of the Court to make the costs as stated in the decree a charge on the property. My reasons are two-fold. In the beginning of the decree the Court distinctly said that the amount payable to the mortgagees was being increased by a sum of Rs. 175. That was very definite. Then the Court fixed the amount payable by the mortgegees at a definite sum. Furth.r, I am confirmed in my view from this fact that the sum of Rs. 1,991-10-6 already included the sum of Rs. 69-2-0 costs awarded to the mortgagees against the mortgagor by the Court of first instance. If we read the decree as awarding to the mortgagees not only the sum of Rs. 1,991-10-6 but also the amounts of costs mentioned therein we are forced to the conclusion that the Appellate Court meant that the sum of Rs. 69-2-0 costs awarded by the Court of first instance to the mortgagees was to be paid twice over. It is nobody's contention that this sum was to be paid twice over. All that is contended for on behalf of the respondents is that after an adjustment of the costs a sum of Rs. 45-6-0 would stand decreed to the mortgagees on account of costs and this additional sum had to be paid. But it does not follow that the sum of Rs. 45-6-0 was a charge on the property. I am, therefore, forced to the conclusion that the Appellate Court's decree meant this only and nothing more than this that redemption was to be had on payment of this sum, viz., Rs. 1,991-10-6 if the said sum was paid within the 2nd of March 1921.

In this view the mortgagor was right in paying only the sum of Rs. 1,991-10-6 within the 2nd of March 1921.

The result of my view is that the mortgagees are entitled to mesne profits only for the period between the 15th of July 1919, and the 2nd of March 1921. It was during this period only that the mortgagor's possession was unlawful and it was during this period that the mortgagees should have continued in possession.

I would, therefore, remand an issue to the Appellate Court to find out the amount of mesne profits for this period.

Daniels, J.—I greatly regret that I am unable to agree with the judgment just delivered. In my opinion the appellant has no case and his appeal should be dismissed.

I would note at the outset that the point on which my learned brother would allow the appeal in part was not originally taken by the appellant in argument at all. The appellant's learned Counsel stated in answer to a question by the Court that he was obliged to concede that the interest awarded by the decree was legally a charge on the mortgaged property. He contended that the appellant had been misled by the form in which the decree was passed and, therefore, mesne profits should not have been awarded against him.

The decree was one under O. XXXIV, r. 7. Under that decree the Court is directed to take an account of what is due to the defendant for principal and interest on the mortgage and for his costs of the suit if awarded to him. The form of decree prescribed by the Code distinctly contemplates that the costs of the suit shall be a charge on the mortgaged property and shall be recoverable as such. The decree in this case stated the sum of Rs. 1,991-10-6 to be due up to 2nd March 1921, then states the further sum which was due on account of costs and finally directs that if the aforesaid sum is not paid by a date three months in advance the property was to be sold.

The operative part of the decree clearly, therefore, directs that the property was to be sold unless the entire sum was paid into Court. It is quite true, as has been pointed out by the appellant, that some portion of the costs has been included twice over, being included both in the sum of Rs. 1,991 and in the sum specified as being due on account of costs in addition to this. This clerical mistake, for it is nothing more, does not in my mind affect the merits of the appeal. If anything it makes the case of the appellant worse, for if the decree be read literally and not in connection with the judgment, the deficiency in the amount deposited by him would be appreciably greater than it has been found by the Court below to be.

Even if it be possible to read the words "the aforesaid sum" as referring only to the sum of Rs. 1991, that construction of the decree should be adopted which is in accordance with the law as laid down under O. XXXIV, r. 7 and the universal practice of the Courts in such cases which directs that the costs of the suit shall form part of the sum payable in order to effect redemption. (Even costs incurred after the decree can be recovered by the mortgagee at the time of redemption under O. XXXIV, r. 10.) This was decided in a reasoned judgment in Damber Singh v. Kalyan Singh (2), where it was held that though the order of the Court merely directed the respondent to pay to the appellant a certain sum incurred on account of costs, the effect of the decree was to make this sum legally recoverable from the mortgaged property. It is suggested that this ruling has not been followed in Amina Bibi v. Rama Shankar Misar (1). I do not so read this case. The point in that case was not whether the amount could be recovered from the mortgaged property but whether the decree-holder had any remedy to recover the amount of costs as a personal liability from the decree-holder. The learned Judges held that in the case before them he had such a remedy. They carefully guarded themselves from suggesting that the case of Damber Singh v. Kalyan Singh (2) had been wrongly decided. Mr. Justice Walsh says in the course of his judgment :—

"The ordinary rule in equity is that a mortgagee is entitled to recover against a mortgagor all the costs and expenses of maintaining or enforcing the security provided he acts reasonably and according to law, and further to add them to his security, that is to say, he is given both remedies, the personal remedy against the debtor and the remedy in specie against his security."

Mr. Justice Piggott in his concurring judgment says :—

"In a suit on a mortgage no one denies that the plaintiff is entitled to add to his mortgage debt and to recover as against the mortgage security any costs to which he may be put in enforcing the said security . . . As regards the costs incurred in prosecuting or defending an appeal against a preliminary decree for sale, I think some learned Judges of this Court have used language suggesting a doubt as to whether such costs are covered at all by the provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 10, above-mentioned, but I do not understand that the general principle as to the right of the mortgagee to claim to have these costs included in the final decree for sale against the property, where such final decree is sought and obtained after the decision of the appeal in which those costs were incurred, has been doubted."

He held that at the same time the Court had consistently held that it was in the discretion of an Appellate Court to award the costs also as a personal money decree.

The appellant, therefore, in my judgment failed to deposit the full amount required by the decree and was, therefore, not entitled to recover possession of the property. His attention was called on 13th May 1921 by the decree-holders to the fact that the sum paid in was insufficient but he did not up to the time when the suit was instituted, or indeed up to the present time, make any attempt to make good the deficiency. I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

By the Court.—The result is that the appeal is dismissed with costs which will include in this Court, Counsel's fees on the higher scale.

APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 56 OF 1923.

December 11, 1924.

Present:—Sir Norman Macleod, KT., Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Pratt and Mr. Justice Crump.

AMARSANGJI DUNGARJI JHALA—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

DEEPSANGJI RAVABHAI JHALA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 11, 100 — Gujarat Talukdars' Act (VI of 1888), ss. 11, 15, 16—Talukdari Settlement Officer, order of—Appeal, second, whether competent—Order, whether operates as res judicata.

The Talukdari Settlement Officer is not a Court exercising original jurisdiction, and it cannot be said that because s. 16 of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act gives a right of appeal to the District Judge from the decision of the Talukdari Settlement Officer under s. 15 of the Act, that decision is a decree within the definition in s. 2 (2) of the C. P. C. The District Court hears the appeal as if it were an appeal from a decree of a Court from whose decision the District Court is authorized to hear appeals, but that is a specific right of appeal based on an analogy and the analogy cannot be extended further so as to entitle a party who is dissatisfied with the decision of the District Judge to take a second appeal to the High Court. [p. 589, col. 2.]

The Talukdari Settlement Officer is an administrative officer and not a Court. An order passed by him, therefore, under s. 15 of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the parties in the Civil Court. [p. 590, col. 2.]

In considering the question of res judicata the Court must look to the powers of the Court in which the previous suit was instituted and not to the powers of the Court by which that suit was decided on appeal. [ibid.]

Appeal from an order passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 404 of 1921, reversing the decree passed by the Subordinate Judge at Dhandhuka, in Civil Suit No. 118 of 1920.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. S. Rao (with him Mr. M. K. Thakore), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued for a declaration that the decision in the Suit No. 2 of 1913 before the Talukdari Settlement Officer, in appeal No. 541 of 1916 of the District Court and Second Appeal No. 919 of 1919 in the High Court, was without jurisdiction, null and void, and not binding on the plaintiffs. That the plaintiffs owned one-thirty-sixths in Tajabhai Surasanji's property in Jalia village and that they were entitled to have the shares separated. The defendants pleaded that the suit was barred on the principle of res judicata owing to the proceedings before the Talukdari Settlement Officer. The Trial Court held that the plaintiffs' suit was barred by res judicata and dismissed it. On appeal the First Class Subordinate Judge with appellate powers reversed the decision of the Trial Court on the issue of res judicata and sent the suit back for trial on the remaining issues.

Defendants Nos. 1 to 12 have appealed to the High Court. Defendants Nos. 1 to 12 made an application No. 2 of 1913 to the Talukdari Settlement Officer, under s. 11 of the Gujarat Talukdars' Act, for partition and separate possession of their shares in the village of Jalia, a Talukdari village, as recorded in the Settlement Register prepared under s. 5 of the Act. The present plaintiff and others disputed their title to the share claimed by them. The Talukdari Settlement Officer held the applicants to be entitled to the share specified in the Settlement Register as claimed by them. On appeal to the District Judge, under s. 16 of the Act, the decision of the Talukdari Settlement Officer was confirmed. A Second Appeal No. 919 of 1919 was filed in the High Court but was dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11. As the plaintiffs now ask for a declaration that the decision in that second appeal was without jurisdiction it is necessary for us to consider whether an appeal lies to the High Court from a decision of the District Judge under s. 16 of the Act.

In Jamsang Devabhai v. Goyabhai Kikabhai (1), it was held that the decision of the District Court on appeal from the Talukdari Settlement Officer was subject to a second appeal to the High Court. Sargent, C. J., said (page 413): "We think that the effect of the concluding words of s. 16 of Act VI of 1888 is to give the decision of the District Court on appeal from the Talukdari Officer the same character in all respects as a decree from an ordinary suit before a subordinate officer, and that, therefore, like all such decrees, such decision is subject to second appeal to this Court. This view is assisted by the concluding words of s. 21, which shows that they must, if possible, be construed so as not to affect the High Court's jurisdiction." With the greatest respect we cannot agree. The High Court has jurisdiction to hear second appeals by virtue of the provisions of s. 100 of the C. P. C., which enacts that save when otherwise expressly provided in the body of the Code or by any other law for the time being in force an appeal shall lie to the High Court from every decree passed in appeal by any Court subordinate to a High Court on any of the grounds therein mentioned. Under s. 99 an appeal shall lie from every decree passed by any Court exercising original jurisdiction to the Court authorized to hear appeals from the decisions of such Court. The Talukdari Settlement Officer is not a Court exercising original jurisdiction, and it cannot be said that because s. 16 of the Act gives a right of appeal to the District Judge from his decision, that decision is a decree within the definition in s. 2 (2) of the C. P. C. The District Court hears the appeal as if it were an appeal from a decree of a Court from whose decision the District Court is authorized to hear appeals, but that is a specific right of appeal based on an analogy, and the analogy cannot, be extended further so as to entitle a dissatisfied party to take a second appeal to the High Court.

In Hari v. Secretary of State for India (2), it was held that the appellate jurisdiction could only come into play where there had been a decision of a Court, and that although a right of appeal to the High Court was given by s. 48 (ii) of the City of Bombay Improvement Trusts Act from a decision of the Tribunal of Appeal if the President granted a certificate, the appeal was not competent because the Local Legislature had no power to control or affect by these Acts the jurisdiction or procedure of the High Court. Again, under s. 54 of the Land Acquisition Act I of 1894, an appeal lies to the High Court from the award of the Court in any proceedings under the Act, subject to the provisions of the C. P. C., applicable to appeals from original decrees. For many years appeals were admitted by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council from appellate decisions of the High Court under that section, but in Rangoon Botatoung Company v. Collector, Rangoon (3), it was decided that such an appeal was not competent. Lord Macnaghten said (page 839*): "That section seems to carry the appellants no further. It only applies to proceedings in the course of an appeal to the High Court. Its force is exhausted when the appeal to the High Court is heard. Their Lordships cannot accept the argument or suggestion that when once the claimant is admitted to the High Court he has all the rights of an ordinary suitor, including the right to carry an award made in an arbitration as to the value of land taken for public purposes up to this Board as if it were a decree of the High Court made in course of its ordinary jurisdiction." This decision is directly in point and we must hold that the decision in Jamsang Devabai v. Goyabhai Kikabhai (1) cannot be supported.

(1) 16 B. 408; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 751.

Whether the decision of the District Court under s. 16 of the Act or the decision of the High Court, assuming a second appeal lies, bars a regular suit on the principle of res judicata was considered in Malubhai v. Sursangji (4).

The facts were similar to those in the case before us.

There had been an original application to the Talukdari Settlement Officer under s. 11 of the Act. From his decision an appeal was preferred under s. 16 to the District Court and from that decree there was an appeal to the High Court.

The question of the competency of the High Court to hear that appeal was considered as concluded by the decision in Jamsang Devabhai v. Goyabhai Kikabhai (1). The plaintiffs then filed a suit to obtain the final decree of a Court of competent jurisdiction declaring them to be entitled to a share of a talukdari estate. It was contended that the decision in the previous proceedings constituted res judicata at any rate so far as concerned the present litigants who were parties to those proeeedings. Jenkins, C. J. said, (page 224)†: "The law of res judicata is to be found in s. 13 of the C. P. C., and to make its terms applicable it must be shown that the Talukdari Settlement Officer is a Court of jurisdiction competent to try this suit. But this he clearly is not: he is an administrative officer and not a Court: and by no straining of words can he be described as a Court of jurisdiction competent to try this suit." It was further held, following Toponidhee Dhirj Gir Gosain v. Sreeputty Sahanee (5) and Bharasi Lal Chowdhry v. Sarat Chunder Dass (6) that in considering a question of res judicata a Court must look to the powers of the Court in which the suit was instituted and not to the powers of the Court by which that suit was decided on appeal. The correctness of those propositions cannot be disputed. Reference may also be made to s. 11, Explanation II, of the C. P. C. Consequently the principle of res judicata cannot apply to the previous proceedings between the parties to this suit, and the decision of the Appellate Court was right.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Babu ANAND MADHO—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 34, applicability of—Suit against person who came into occupation with consent of landlord.

Section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act refers to suits brought against persons whose occupation began without the consent of the landlord. It has no application to a suit in which it is found that the defendant was initially in occupation with the consent of the landlord.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 6th of December 1922.

Mr. A. P. Dube, for the Appellants.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The dispute in this appeal relates to plot No. 364 khasra measuring ·72 in Mouza Iknaur and the question for consideration is whether the plaintiff is entitled to treat the said land as having been held by the defendants without the consent of the plaintiff within the meaning of s. 34 of the U. P. Act II of 1901.

The land in question appears to have formed a part of a large grove, of which a portion still exists on plot No. 365 khasra and the rest has been denuded of trees. The allegation of the defendants was that they held the said grove land as a muafi tenure free from any liability for the payment of rent for over two generations and that they are not liable to ejectment. There is a finding that the land was held under a grove tenure but no finding as to when the portion in dispute was denuded of trees and brought under cultivation, and how long the defendants have been in occupation of the same, and in what capacity. In 1833 grove No. 389 old khasra measuring 5 bighas 15 biswas was recorded in the name of Bishan Nath as a muafidar. There was also a reference to the grove in the wajib-ul-arz of that year. In the jamabandi of 1873 Fasli grove No. 246 measuring 2 bighas 11 biswas was entered in the name of Kishori, son of Sobha Ram, and Mata Din, but it is not clear whether that plot was the same or formed a part of the old No. 389 khasra, and what became of the rest of the land, if it did so. In the khasra for 1317 Fasli grove no 246 measuring 2 bighas 11 biswas was again recorded in the name of Kuraru, Mehta and Gauri Shankar sons of Kishori and Mata Din and Chhotey Lal, sons of Munni. But it is not stated what happened to the rest of the land which was included in No. 389 old khasra. The evidence of the patwari shows that old No. 246/1 khasra measuring ·72 is now represented by No. 364 and old No. 246/2 measuring ·74 is now represented by No. 365, and that at the Settlement of 1319 Fasli plot No. 364 khasra was recorded as an occupancy holding under the cultivation of the defendants without any rent being assessed thereon. It cannot be said in these circumstances that the defendants were in occupation of plot No. 364 khasra initially without the consent of the landlord, and as held in Kamta Prasad v. Panna Lal (1) and Sheogopal Pande v. Baldeo Singh (2), s. 34 of the U. P. Tenancy Act has no application. That section refers to suits brought against persons, whose occupation began without the consent of the landlord. But that is not so here.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent, however, contends that the word "land" as defined in the U. P. Tenancy, Act means land let for agricultural purposes and his argument is that this land was never let for agricultural purposes and must, therefore, be deemed in law to have been occupied, i. e., brought under cultivation without the consent of the plaintiff. The complaint in other words is that the land, so held under a grove tenure and, therefore, not liable to rent, can, by reason of its having been brought under cultivation, become now liable for the payment of rent. But before that matter can be decided it is necessary to ascertain when it was so brought under cultivation and what was the nature of the tenure under which it was held before that date. The lower Appellate Court is, therefore, directed to determine after taking such additional evidence as the parties may adduce. (1) when was the land in dispute brought under cultivations (2) how long has it been held by the defendants or their predecessors-in-title and in what capacity and on what terms?

Three months are allowed for the return of the findings. Ten days will be allowed for filing objections after the receipt of the findings.

The finding of the lower Appellate Court on the issue remitted is in favour of the plaintiff-respondent. To that finding no objection has been taken. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY, CALCUTTA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Railway Company—Carriage of goods—Risk Note Form "B"—Loss of goods—Wilful neglect—Burden of proof—"Robbery," whether synonymous with "theft."

Certain goods were consigned for carriage to the defendant Railway Company under Risk Note Form "B." When the wagon containing the goods arrived at an intermediate station, it was found that the seals had been broken. Fresh seals were thereupon fixed on the wagon and it was shunted to a siding. Three days afterwards the wagon was opened by the Railway officials and its contents were checked whereupon a part of the goods were found missing. In a suit by the consignee to recover the price of the missing goods:

Held, that the action of the Railway officials at the intermediate station did not amount to wilful neglect and that the plaintiff having failed to prove that the loss had been caused through theft by the Railway servants he was not entitled to recover.

The word "robbery" in the proviso to Risk Note Form "B" is synonymous with the word "theft" which appears in the earlier portion of the Risk Note.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Karnal, dated the 4th February 1923, affirming that of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Rohtak, dated the 24th November 1922.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Kanwar Dalip Singh, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Messrs. Sheo Chand Rai Naurang Rai of Calcutta sent 100 bags of java sugar to Gulab Rai-Lahori Mal at Rohtak by the East Indian Railway. A Risk Note in Form "B" was signed. The wagon containing the sugar on arriving at Buxar was found to have its seals broken. The Railway officials at Buxar took the precaution of fixing fresh seals on the wagon which was then shunted to a siding. This was on the 8th of May 1921. On the 11th of May 1921, the wagon was opened by the Railway officials and its contents checked and 31 bags of sugar were found missing. The Railway Police made an investigation of the occurrence and came to the conclusion that the loss was due to a running train theft.

Gulab Rai-Lahori Mal instituted a suit against the East Indian Railway claiming a sum of Rs. 2,470, being the price of 31 bags of sugar. The Courts below have held that the loss had taken place before the wagon arrived at Buxar and that as the consignor had signed a Risk Note Form "B" the Railway Administration was exempt from all liability.

The plaintiffs have now come up to this Court in second appeal through Mr. Shamair Chand who has contended that it was "wilful neglect" on the part of the Railway Administration, acting through its servants, not to have checked the contents of the wagon on its arrival at Buxar when the seals were found broken; and further it was wilful neglect to have left this wagon in a siding till the 11th of May with only the seals thereon. Further, it was contended that the use of the expression "robbery" in the proviso appearing in the Risk Note Form "B" was not synonymous with the word "theft" which appears in the earlier portion of the said Risk Note. On the findings arrived at by the Courts below, it is perfectly clear that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the loss have been caused through theft by any Railway servant; and we are in agreement with the view taken that the action of the Railway officials at Buxar did not amount to wilful neglect. With regard to the third point the matter appears to us to be concluded by authority, see in this connection E. I. R. Co. v. Nathumal-Behari Lal (1), G. I. P. Railway Co. v. Bhola Nath-Debi Das (2), Firm Gopal Rai-Phul Chand v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway (3) and B. B. and C. I. Railway Co. v. Ranchhodlal-Chhotalal (4).

In this view of the case we dismiss the appeal with costs.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 30—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476, inquiry under—Confession made during inquiry, whether admissible against co-accused.

An enquiry was commenced under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. with a view to ascertain whether a complaint should be lodged against an accused person with regard to a document produced by him in the course of certain judicial proceedings. In the course of the enquiry the accused made a confession implicating himself and certain other persons in the commission of the offence. As a result of the confession the accused and the persons named by him were placed on their trial for forgery and cognate offences :

Held, that the confession made by the accused in the course of the enquiry under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. was made by him while he was in the position of an accused person, and was admissible in evidence against him under s. 30 of the Evidence Act. [p. 594, col. 2.]

Criminal appeal from convictions and sentences passed by the Sessions Judge, Belguam.

Messrs. K. H. Kelkar, A. G. Desai, S. G. Desai, for H. B. Gumaste and S. B. Jathar, for the Accused.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The four accused were charged before the Sessions Judge of Belguam, first of all, with having conspired together and forged a document purporting to be a Will passed by one Sanganbasaveshwar Swami of Chikodi, in fovour of accused No. 3 on December 15, 1919; secondly, accused No. 3 with having fraudulently and dishonestly used the said Will as genuine by producing it in support of his claim in the Chikodi Magistrate's Court on December 23, 1921, knowing then or having reason to believe it to be a forged document; and thirdly, accused Nos. 1, 2 and 4 with having instigated and abetted accused No. 3 to so use it, and, thereby committed an offence punishable under ss. 467, 471 and 109, Indian Penal Code. The Judge convicted all the accused. Agreeing with all four assessors he found accused No. 3 guilty of forgery of the Will Ex. 13, and of using it as genuine. Agreeing with all four assessors he found accused No. 4 guilty of forgery of the Will and agreeing with three assessors and disagreeing with the fourth he found accused No. 4 abetted accused No. 3's use of the Will as genuine. Agreeing with three assessors and disagreeing with the fourth he found accused No. 2 guilty of forgery of the Will and abetting accused No. 3's use of the Will as genuine. Agreeing with one assessor and disagreeing with the other three he found accused No. 1 guilty of forgery of the Will and of abetting accused No. 3's use of the Will as genuine. He did not think there was any reason to make a difference in awarding punishment to the accused, as he thought they were all equally involved. So he sentenced all the accused to five years' rigorous imprisonment each.

Sanganbasaveshwar Swami of Chikodi died about August 9, 1921, and the Will, the subject-matter of the charge against the accused, was put forward by accused No. 3 to support his succession to the Math.

In September, 1921, one Gurushidaya applied for proceedings being taken under s. 145, Cr. P. C., with regard to the obstruction to his possession and enjoyment of a certain Survey Number belonging to the math. It was in the course of those proceedings that the accused produced the document which he asserted proved his title to the math property. While these proceedings were going on Gurushiddaya, after the Will had been produced by the third accused, charged him with having forged it. Accused No. 3 was arrested but was released on his own recognizance, and on February 27, 1922, that complaint was for some reason or other dismissed. On April 5, the Magistrate decided the proceedings under s. 145, Cr. P. C., in favour of the applicant, and directed an inquiry under s. 476, Cr. P. C., with regard to the Will which was alleged to be a forgery. On April 6, the date on which those proceedings commenced, the third accused made a statement before the Magistrate Mr. Shirali in which he confessed that the document he produced was a forged one and that he produced it with the knowledge that it was forged. He then detailed how the document came to be prepared, and it was in consequence of information then given by the third accused that the present prosecution was instituted. The story he had told to Mr. Shirali was briefly to this effect. The Swami died on the night of August 9, 1921. He was buried on Wednesday, and on Thursday the second accused came to the math and took him to his house which was next door. The second accused said that the third accused had been doing vahivat of the math for many years, and that he should cause application to be made enabling him to succeed to the math. The third accused asked him how he could succeed when the Swami had installed a disciple. The second accused told the third accused that he would succeed if he (the third accused) said that the instalation ceremony was performed after the death of the Swami. Eight days later accused No. 2 took accused No. 3 to the house of accused No. 4, and also brought the first accused. An application was then prepared to be sent to the Collector to the effect that Sanganbasaveshwar Swami was dead and that the name of the third accused should be registered as his successor. As no answer was received another application was sent a week later. The first application was then received back with an endorsement that the third accused should have applied to the mamlatdar. An application was made to the mamlatdar and that was returned asking the third accused to apply to the village officers of the different villages direct.

Meanwhile Gurushiddaya had preferred his application, with the result that the conspirators changed their tactics and decided that the document was to be prepared. Accordingly as described by the third accused, on a date which, as far as it could be fixed, would be about December 15, 1921, the document was ready, and accused No. 3 detailed how the signatures of two persons Bhimappa and Balgauda as witnesses were obtained, while all four of the accused were sitting in the house of the second accused at Chikodi.

Now it has been objected that that confession is not admissible in evidence, and cannot be taken into consideration against the co-accused under s. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act. Section 30 says:—

"When more persons than one are being tried jointly for the same offence, and a confessson made by one of such persons affecting himself and some other of such persons is proved, the Court may take into consideration such confession as against such other person as well as against th person who makes such confession."

It is difficult to see how one can avoid coming to the conclusion that this statement made before Mr. Shirali was a confession. An inquiry was commenced under s. 476, Cr. P. C., with a view to ascertain whether a complaint should be lodged against the third accused with regard to a document produced by him, and any statement made by the third accused, who was then in the position of an accused person, and liable to having a charge made against him of forgery, detailing the circumstances under which the document was forged, would amount to a confession, and the Court would be entitled to take that into consideration as against the other persons who had been jointly tried with him. The confession would have to be tested in order to ascertain whether it was voluntarily made in the first instance, but there is nothing whatever to show that there was any pressure placed upon the third accused to induce him to make the statement before Mr. Sherali. Mr. Sherali gave evidence before the Sessions Judge in which he said:—

"The proceedings ended on April 5, 1922, in my decision in Gurushiddaya's favour. My order is below Ex. 3. In that I directed further proceedings against accused No. 3 under s. 476; Cr. P. C. I communicated the order to accused No. 3. He began to cry. He said he had committed a fault at the instigation of others and began to make a statement. It was then late, so I told him to appear next day. Abut noon on April 6, 1922, he appeared and I took his statement. Accused No. 3 made the statement voluntarily. I gave him neither threat nor inducement. The statement was recorded in the vernacular by my clerk and in English by myself. The vernacular statement was then read out to him and was admitted by him to be correct. He made his signature on every page of the vernacular statement in my presence. I also initialled every page and made my signature at the end. I recorded the statement as a statement in my inquiry under s. 476, Cr. P. C., and not as a confession of an accused person. I consequently did not comply with the provisions of cl. 3 of s. 164, Cr. P. C."

It seems to me perfectly clear that Mr. Shirali was speaking the truth when he says that accused No. 3 as soon as he found that proceedings were going to be commenced under s. 476, Cr. P. C., decided that it was no use persisting in relying on the Will, and that the safest course for him to take was to make a clean breast of what had been done, and as far as I can see there is not a word in the cross-examination of Mr. Shirali which was directed to show that Mr. Shirali as a Magistrate had been guilty of any improper conduct in conducting the inquiry under s. 476. It seems to me, therefore, that the Judge was perfectly entitled to admit this confession and to hold that in the main it was true with regard to the third accused. But it would not be justifiable, in fact the Court could not rely upon it, with regard to the other accused, if that was the only evidence against them. Therefore, the evidence given before the Sessions Judge by the other witnesses has to be considered, to see whether it affords any support in material particulars to the story which was told by the third accused to Mr. Shirali.

With regard to the third accused his contention is that he was not aware that the document he put forward was a forgery and that he was an innocent victim of the machinations of other persons. There is no foundation on the record for that suggestion, and it is difficult to believe that the third accused would have produced the document handed to him by certain persons who were anxious to secure his succession to the math by entering into a criminal conspiracy, without making some inquiry or without having any conversation beforehand with those persons, and without satisfying himself that the document was genuine. It must also be remembered that the evidence shows that before the Swami died one Nilkanthaswami was installed as a Swami and the third accused was perfectly well aware of that installation, and consequently the Court is entitled to conclude that when he produced his forged document in order to support his succession to the math, he must have known what the character of the document was. Besides there is the evidence of several witnesses to prove the co-operation of the third accused in bringing about the forgery. I think, therefore, that the third accused was certainly guilty of using a document which he knew to be forged as genuine, and that he certainly took part in procuring the signatures of the two attesting witnesses. It makes no difference really whether he was found guilty of forging the Will, or using it as genuine knowing it to be forged. The conviction on the latter charge was sufficient. * * * * * * * * * Therefore, after giving the very fullest consideration to all that has been said by the Pleaders on behalf of the accused, it seems to me that a perfectly clear case has been made on the evidence for their conviction on charges of forging a Will and using it as genuine, and abetting each other. We do not interfere with the sentences imposed on accused Nos. 1, 2 and 4 having regard to the serious nature of the offence. But with regard to accused No. 3 considering his confession and other circumstances in the case we reduce the sentence to three years. In my opinion with this exception the appeals should be dismissed.

Fawcett, J.—I agree. I would only add that accused No. 3's confession to Mr. Shirali substantially implicates himself to the same extent as the other co-accused, and that is, therefore, another reason for giving it full effect against his co-accused under s. 30 of the Indian Evidence Act.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (6)—Sanction, grant of—Refusal to revoke sanction—Period of six months, commencement of.

A sanction cannot be said to have been "given" within the meaning of cl. (6) of s. 195 of the Cr. P. C., by a Court which did not originally grant the sanction but which merely refused to revoke that sanction when it had been granted. The period of six months mentioned in the clause, therefore, begins to run from the date of the order granting the sanction and not from the date of the order of a superior Court subsequently refusing to revoke the sanction. Mr. Nazir-ud-Din, for the Applicant.

Mr. S. N. Sinha, for the Opposite Party.

ORDER.—This is an application for the revision of an order passed under ss. 435-439 of the Cr. P. C., by the Sessions Judge of Fyzabad. The Opposite Party obtained on the 16th of August 1922 a sanction under s. 195, Cr. P. C., for the prosecution of the applicant under s. 471 Indian Penal Code. No action was taken by the Opposite Party for some months, and the applicant applied to the Sessions Judge to have the order of sanction revoked. On the 22nd May 1923 this application was rejected. The opposite party still held his hand for two months, and it was not till the 21st of July 1923 that he filed a complaint on the basis of the sanction in Court. For some reason the case was not taken up. Three months later on the 24th October the complainant applied to this Court under s. 195 (6) for an extension of time. This application was rejected on the ground that under the revised Code the Court had no jurisdiction to extend the time. In consequence of the order of this Court, the Magistrate discharged the present applicant, holding that the case had become barred by time. The opposite party went in revision to the Sessions Judge, who relying on a ruling of the Madras High Court in Public Prosecutor v. Raver Unithiri (1) held that the date from which the six months' limitation prescribed in s. 195 (6) begins to run was the date on which the application for revocation of the sanction was rejected by this Court, that is to say, the 22nd of May 1923, and that consequently when the complaint was filed on the 22nd July 1923, it was within time.

The applicant now seeks to have the order of the Sessions Judge set aside. He cites a ruling of the Allahabad High Court in Tilak Ram v. Dalip Singh (2). In this the ruling relied on by the Sessions Judge has been dissented from. I agree with the view taken by the Allahabad High Court that it is impossible to hold "on the clear meaning of the words of cl. 6 of s. 195 that the sanction can possibly be said to have been given", by the Court which did not originally grant the sanction, but which merely refused to revoke that sanction when it had been granted. The opposite party has been unable to give any satisfactory explanation of his inordinate delay in filing his complaint. The application is allowed, the order of the Sessions Judge is set aside, and that of the Magistrate is restored.

In re MARUTI VITHU—COMPLAINANT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 345, 435—Record called by District Magistrate for transfer of case to another Magistrate—Magistrate, former, whether has jurisdiction to record composition.

When a District Magistrate calls for the papers of a case under s. 435 of the Cr. P. C. with a view to withdraw the case from the file of the Magistrate before whom it is pending and to refer it for trial to another Magistrate, the case is no longer on the file of the former Magistrate and his jurisdiction over the case is suspended. An order made by that Magistrate recording a composition of the offence and acquitting the accused under s. 345 of the Cr. P. C. after the order of the District Magistrate calling for the record is void and of no effect.

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Nasik.

JUDGMENT.—The complainant filed a complaint on July 2, 1924, against two accused of various compoundable offences. On July 15, 1924, the District Magistrate in revision called for the papers, under s. 435 of the Cr. P. C., with a view to withdraw the case from the First Class Magistrate and refer it for trial to another Magistrate. As a matter of fact he did so order on August 15. But in the meanwhile on July 31, the Magistrate recorded a composition of the offence and acquitted the accused under s. 345, Cr. P. C.

The District Magistrate refers the case to us on the ground that the jurisdiction of the First Class Magistrate, Mr. Deshpande, ceased after the order had been made calling for the papers. We think the contention of the District Magistrate is correct. When the order was made calling for the record and proceedings with a view to withdrawing the case and transferring it to another Magistrate the case was no longer on the file of the Magistrate and his jurisdiction was suspended. We, therefore, think that the order of acquittal made on July 31 is void and of no effect.

We, therefore, return the record and proceedings with a direction that the case should now proceed before the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate at Nasik to whom it was referred by the District Magistrate. This is, of course, without prejudice to the rights of the parties to effect a fresh composition before that Magistrate.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 99, 100—Attack, previous knowledge of—Right of private defence, whether exists.

Where a party of men become aware that they are about to be attacked and they know that they can avoid the attack by dispersing or running away, it is their duty to get out of the way of their enemies until the anger and resentment of the latter have subsided. If, however, they have a reasonable belief that if they separate they will be pursued and attacked individually they have every right to keep together or to come together and to repel the attack when it is made with every means in their power. [p. 599, col. 2.]

Accused received information that they were about to be attacked by a hostile section in the village. They believed that if they separated they would be pursued and attacked individually and under this belief they collected together and awaited the attack. Their enemies then appeared on the scene and one of them fired a pistol and hit one of the accused. One of the accused then fired a pistol and hit the man who had first fired, and then a fight with lathis commenced during the course of which one member of each party was killed :

Held, that under the circumstances of the case the accused were entitled to exercise the right of private defence and it could not be said that they had exceeded that right. [ibid.]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Shahjahanpur, dated the 8th of July 1924.

Mr. H. Cecil Desanges, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—These are two appeals against convictions for rioting in a fight which is said to have taken place between two rival factions at the village of Kundri in the Shahjahanpur District. There are in all ten appellants before us. There appears to have been a long standing quarrel between what in this Court has been called group A and group B. Group A in this Court consists of Ajudhia Prased, Misri Lal, Chetram, Jwala Prasad and Jangi Lal: group B of Hardwari, Lal Bahadur, Bhagwandin, Gokul and Tika Ram. All of these people are the appellants before us. The first four persons in group A are represented by Mr. Desanges. Jangi Lal was not represented but at our request Mr. Desanges was good enough to bear his interest in mind and has at the end discussed the case of Jangi Lal separately with a view to assist him. Group B are represented by Mr. Jamini Mohan Banerji.

There is no doubt that for a long time there has been extremely bad blood between these two parties represented by Ajudhia Prasad as the ring leader on the one side and Hardwari on the other and their relatives and friends. There had been previous litigations and criminal proceedings, but on the 8th of April last there was an encounter which we are told is still the subject of a judicial enquiry, with the result that a man named Jagannath belonging to faction A was so injured that he died four days later. In our opinion that circumstance, the injury of Jagannath on the 8th, has an important bearing on what took place on the 10th of April. We may pause for a moment to say that we are satisfied that both sides have told falsehoods about this matter, that group A have deliberately concocted a story as to Ajudhia Prasad being dragged from the neighbourhood of Dwarka's sitting room towards the threshing floor of Hardwari whilst on Hardwari's side there has been a deliberate fabrication of evidence putting the wounding of Jangi Lal as the act of a man named Puhup Ram. There are three or four witnesses who are independent in the sense that they are not relatives of any of the accused nor do they appear to be members of group A or group B, but with the solitary exception of a man named Tilok it is obvious on reading the evidence of the so-called independent witnsses that their sympathies can be plainly marked out as leaning either towards group A or group B. Tilok, however, holds the balance very evenly and we attach very considerable weight to his evidence and from his evidence and the evidence of the other witnesses in the case we are able to construct with sufficient certainty and safety what in fact in our belief took place. It should be understood that group A and group B in this village undoubtedly consisted of more persons than are before us to-day. We have no doubt that group A were vengeful and resentful because of the injuries to Jagannath which had been received by him two days before and that a number of persons adherent to group A did gather at Dwarka's sitting room either about midday or in the early afternoon. News of this gathering, we believe, was communicated to Hardwari and it may be that Hardwari on learning that a considerable number of men, certainly more than 10 and probably less then 20, had gathered at Dwarka's sitting room, felt it prudent in the circumstances to get his brothers and friends also to come to his threshing floor. But however that may be we have no doubt whatever that this fight arose from an advance made by group A party towards the threshing floor of Hardwari. It is common ground and agreed and we have been most precise and careful about this that the fight took place on a piece of waste ground belonging to Hardwari and at a distance of about 40 paces from the sitting room of Dwarka and about 30 paces or less from that of Hardwari. In other words the fight took place at a distance of 2/3 from the sitting room of Dwarka and 1/3 from the threshing floor of Hardwari. There is one point on which the evidence is perfectly clear and that it is that there was some preliminary abuse and a reference by Ajudhia Prasad to what had been done to Jagannath on the 8th and then before any lathi blow was struck, Jangi Lal fired a pistol. There is no doubt that the bullet from that pistol hit Shamacharan. On the evidence we accept what Tilok says, that thereupon Hardwari, who had come down from his threshing floor, turned back, grasped a pistol and fired it in the direction of and in fact hit Jangi. Thereupon a lathi fight became general. No more pistol shots were fired on either side and in the result Pimmi Singh, an adherent of the A group, was so seriously injured in this fight that he died on the same day, the 10th of April. Shamacharan of B group, the man who was wounded by Jangi was trampled upon in the fight and received other severe injuries and died of pneumonia on the 19th of April.

There are two principal questions which we must settle at the outset. The first is who were the participants in this fight who are proved by the evidence beyond any reasonable doubt to have been engaged in it; secondly are there any circumstances to exonerate any body either in group A or group B individually or collectively?

Turning now to group A, as we have said, there is no doubt that this encounter was started by Jangi firing the shot and we have no doubt whatever that Ajudhia Prased was the ring leader or at all events a very important person in this fight. Jangi and Ajudhia Prasad also received injuries which cannot be counted for except on the ground that they were present.

It has been pressed upon us that Misri Lal was not present in the capacity of a combatant and indeed he asserted that he received the slight injury that he did when he was engaged in helping his injured brother Ajudhia Prasad. We have a great deal of doubt about that story but Misri Lal has had the advantage of evidence given in his favour by Binda who states that Misri Lal got hurt when helping his brother, and Jhabu who says also that Misri Lal was not in the fight. With some hesitation we have decided to give Misri Lal the benefit of the doubt.

As regards Chetram and Jwala Singh, they stand on quite a different footing. It is agreed that they are not relatives of any of the members of group A. They in fact live in a different village. They admit that they were present on the 10th of April in Kundri. They explain their presence by saying that they were indebted to Ajudhia Prasad and they came to the village on business without any knowledge of any impending mar pit and that they did nothing whatever in the matter at all. We have gone through the evidence very carefully with regard to these men and there does seem to be evidence in their favour, as for instance of Komal, who says that Chetram did not use a lathi, Binda said that Chetram and Jwala Singh took no part in the mar-pit and generally there seems to be very little evidence against them. In these circumstances we are acquitting them also.

The result, therefore, as far as it concerns group A, is that we uphold the conviction as regards Ajudhia Prasad and we do not interfere with the sentence of 10 years' rigorous imprisonment passed upon him.

Jangi has been sentenced to 10 years' rigorous imprisonment. In our opinion that is not sufficient punishment. He commenced the affray by the firing of a pistol and we regard the importation of a firearm into a village faction fight of this character as a most serious matter. Although the wound inflicted by him on Shama Charan was not in a vital spot, it brought Shamacharan to the ground and may have been the indirect cause of his death as it led to his receiving injuries from which he might otherwise have escaped. Organised fights with each side armed with lathis are grave infractions of the law and frequently result in the death of one or more combatants. In this case the introduction of the pistol was an added aggravation and we are of opinion that transportation for life is the only appropriate sentence in Jangi's case.

We now come to group B. The position has been taken as regards group B, quite boldly that the whole of these men are entitled to acquittal on the ground that they acted in self defence only. In the lower Court they gave no hint of any such defence but they are entitled to have it examined and if it is proved to us that that was the attitude of Hardwari and his adherents they are entitled to claim their right to act in the way they did. We must summarise what we have previously said. We have already expressed our relief that the origin of this mar pit on the 10th of April was due to the beating which group B had given to Jagannath on the 8th. With the rights and wrongs of that beating we are not in any way concerned here at all. But in our belief that brought about in the minds of the A group a determination for revenge and that when they gathered together at Dwarka's sitting room about mid-day or a little after that on the 10th they meant to take that revenge and meant to beat Hardwari and his brothers. We accept the evidence of the boy Bhudar who says that he went and told Hardwari what had been happening as regards the gathering of men at Dwarka's sitting room and we have very little doubt that Hardwari on receiving this information collected his forces. The Judge also seems to have thought that Hardwari did this but that Hardwari was doing what was wrong. That in our view is not entirely a correct view. If Hardwari knew that he could have escaped from these people and if his brothers and adherents were aware that they could escape also there would have been a duty on them to get out of the way until the anger and resentment had lessened. But if they had a reasonable belief that if they separated they would be pursued and individually beaten they had every right to keep together and that seems to be the view that they took, and in the circumstances of the feeling as between these two factions they seemed to have felt it safer for them not to be separated. We have already said that we believe that the attack proceeded from group A and we are confirmed in that view by the undoubted circumstance that the fight took place very much nearer to the threshing floor of Hardwari than the sitting room of Dwarka. In other words group A advanced upon group B. We have no doubt that Jangi fired the first shot and we believe that Hardwari had not then at that moment a pistol in his hand, but he went back and took one from the threshing floor. We think that it is a very unfortunate circumstance that fire-arms were used in this village fight, but we are of opinion that when Jangi had fired at some one in group A and in fact did wound Shamcharan, Hardwari had a right in law to fire back and did fire back and did wound the right man, Jangi. Having decided that important point it follows that if Hardwari had a right to repel the attack of Jangi by pistol the rest of his party had a right to repel by lathis the attacks made upon them by lathis. That being so, although the defence of self-protection was not raised at all in the lower Court, we believe on a very careful perusal of the evidence that we have come to what is the right and the proper conclusion in this matter. This case has occupied a full day's hearing and we have endeavoured to dissect the evidence and to arrive at what we think to be the just and proper conclusion. We have already dealt with group A. As regards group B the order is that the sentences passed on Hardwari, Lal Bhadur, Bhagwan Din, Gokul and Tika Ram must be set aside and those five persons released unless it should happen that they are being detained in connection with any other criminal charge. Turning now to group A as regards Misri Lal, Chet Ram and Jwala Singh the convictions against them are also set aside and they must be released subject to their being detained in respect of any other charge. The appeal of Ajudhya Prasad is dismissed and his sentence confirmed and the sentence passed upon Jangi Lal is enhanced to transportation for life.

Criminal appeal from conviction and sentence passed by the Sessions Judge, Broach.

FACTS.—There were two factions in the village V, one headed by the accused No. 1, R, and the other by one N, the friend of the complainant. As a result of a dispute between N and R about certain property feelings ran high, and when an open house site near the house of S, accused No. 2, was put up to public auction by Government on October 22, 1923, N outbid S and secured it for himself. This gave a fresh umbrage to the party led by R. Two days later both parties were regaling themselves at the houses of N and S respectively on account of the Manekthari Punem festivities, and when the party at N's house broke up, the complainant accompanied by N. happened to pass by the house of S. On seeing them R came out armed along with S and another (accused No. 6) and when they came near R fired full in the face of the complainant who screened his face with the tapeli he happened to be carrying in his hand at the time. One of the shots, however, got into his right eye and put it out while others hit him in his face, chest and arms. He fled for his life and on being pursued by accused Nos. 1, 2 and 6 took shelter in the house of N. On being removed to the hospital his condition grew worse and his dying declaration was recorded. Ultimately, however, he recovered, and the accused were put on their trial for offences under ss. 148, 149 and 307 of the Penal Code. The Sessions Judge found R. guilty of an offence under the second part of s. 307 and sentenced him to transportation for life. Accused Nos. 2 and 6 were convicted under s. 307 read with s. 34 or s. 114 of the Penal Code, and were sentenced the first to rigorous imprisonment for five years and a fine of Rs. 500, and the second to rigorous imprisonment for two years and a fine of Rs. 200.

The accused thereupon appealed to the High Court.

Mr. Jinnah, (with him Mr. M. K. Thakore), for Accused No. 1.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, (with him Mr. M. K. Thakore), for Accused Nos. 2 and 3.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Kincaid, J.—[After dealing with the facts of the case, his Lordship agreed with the Sessions Judge as to the findings of fact and held that the appellants Nos. 2 and 3 conspired with appellant No. 1 to shoot the complainant. He then proceeded :—]

I now turn to the legal points in the case, which are of considerable importance. The first point raised by the learned Advocate was that his clients, appellants Nos. 2 and 3, had been charged under ss. 148, 149 and 307, but had been convicted under

s. 114 read with s. 307. The learned Counsel next argued that to charge a person with a substantive offence and to convict him on a charge of abetting that offence was illegal and afforded a good ground for re-trial.

In support of his contention the learned Advocate quoted the cases of Reg. v. Chand Nur (1) and Emperor v. Raghya Nagya (2). I cannot find any such dictum in the two cases. As regards the first of these two cases, there is not the slightest doubt but that the accused had in the lower Court been convicted not under s. 114 read with s. 302 but under s. 109 read with s. 302. The sections are not given, I admit, in the report; but from the judgment itself it is clear that the accused was charged with murder, but was afterwards held not to have been present at the commission of the offence. The accused was convicted of abetment of murder. It is clear that such a conviction could only have taken place under s. 109 read with s. 302.

The facts in Emperor v. Raghya Nagya (2) are not so clear, but as the learned Chief Justice in his judgment held that he was bound by the decision in Reg. v. Chand Nur (1), I must come to the conclusion that there, too, the Judge of the lower Court convicted the accused not under s 114 read with s. 302, but under s. 109 read with s. 302.

We are, therefore, not bound, in my judgment, by any previous decision of this Court. Speaking for myself, I can see no reason why a person who is charged under s. 302 cannot be tried and convicted, although he is not charged with it, under s. 114 read with s. 302. A man so charged and so convicted would not in any way be misled in his defence; for he is punishable under s. 114 not as a mere abettor but as a principal. I, therefore, hold that a man charged with the substantive offence can be rightly convicted of that offence read with s. 114, although not charged with it.

In this case, however, the circumstances are different. The appellants were not charged merely with the substantive offence and convicted under s. 307 read with s. 114, but they were charged under ss. 148 and 149 and s. 307. In other words, the accused were charged in that they were members of an unlawful assembly, that the unlawful assembly had a common object, and that in pursuance of the common object Ranchhod committed an offence under s. 307. The lower Court has held that there was no unlawful assembly, because there were not five persons present. It has held that there were three men who had a common object, and that in pursuance of that common object, Ranchhod committed an offence under s. 307. Now when five persons are not present, there can be no unlawful assembly: so there can be no conviction under s. 148 or 149. But under s. 238 of the Cr. P. C. it is laid down:

"When a person is charged with an offence consisting of several particulars, a combination of some only of which constitutes a complete minor offence, and such combination is proved, but the remaining particulars are not proved, he may be convicted of the minor offence, though he was not charged with it."

Now is there any offence which the particulars in the charge minus the presence of five persons went to make up? The lower Court found the accused guilty under ss. 114 and 307.

The learned Counsel has contended that a man may be a member of an unlawful assembly without being guilty of abetment. In other words, he may have joined the unlawful assembly innocently, and by continuing in it although aware of the facts which render it unlawful, may become liable under s. 142, Indian Penal Code. Now that is an exceptional case, and the aid of s. 142 has not been invoked here. The definition of an unlawful assembly is given in s. 141. If we turn to cl. 3 we find the words "An assembly of five or more persons is designated an 'unlawful assembly,' if the common object of the persons composing that assembly is to commit any mischief or criminal trespas, or other offence." Now if five persons assemble with the common object of committing an offence, they clearly engage in a conspiracy to commit that offence; in other words, they come not only within the four corners of s. 141 but of s. 107. When three persons assemble with the common object of committing an offence, they are not an unlawful assembly but they do engage in a conspiracy to commit that offence. In other words, there are not present all the particulars which go to make an offence under s. 148 or 149, but there are present the particulars which go to make an offence under s. 114 read with the substantive section.

(1) 11 B. H. C. R. 240.

The learned Counsel, however, has argued that this reasoning does not advance the matter, for s. 238, Cr. P. C., only refers to minor offences, and that the offence under s. 307 read with s. 114 is not a minor offence as compared with one under s. 307 and s. 149. This argument is not without weight, although, as it seems to me, a conspiracy of six persons to murder is more grave than one of three persons and an abetment is a minor offence as compared with the substantive offence. It must also be remembered that our power to set aside the charge is limited by s. 232 and s. 537, Cr. P. C. Section 232 runs as follows:—

"If any Appellate Court, or the High Court in the exercise of its powers of revision or of its powers under Ch. XXVII, is of opinion that any person convicted of an offence was misled in his defence by the absence of a charge or by an error in the charge, it shall direct a new trial to be had upon a charge framed in whatever manner it thinks fit."

Section 537 runs as follows:—

"Subject to the provisions hereinbefore contained, no finding, sentence or order passed by a Court of competent jurisdiction shall be reversed or altered under Ch. XXVII or on appeal or revision on account—(a) of any error, omission or irregularity in the complaint, summons, warrant, charge,...judgment or other proceedings before or during trial or in any inquiry or other proceedings under this Code.....unless such error, omission, irregularity, want or misdirection has. ....occasioned a failure of justice."

Now where an accused person has been charged with one offence consisting of several particulars, a combination of some of which only constitutes a complete offence, and such combination is proved, but the remaining particulars are not proved, and he is convicted of such offence although not charged with it, can he be said to have been misled in his defence by an error in the charge or can it be said that such an error in the charge occasioned a failure of justice? I think not; for every particular of the offence of which he was convicted was present in the offence with which he was charged.

In any case, however, the accused, as it seems to me, could have been and indeed were convicted under s. 307 read with s. 34. The learned Advocate for the appellants Nos. 2 and 3 has relied upon the case of Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (3) and the case of Emperor v. Profulla Kumar Mazumdar (4). In the former case the learned Judge (Stephen, J.) held that where of two men one fired and killed a third person and the other fired and missed him the latter could not be found guilty under s. 302 read with s. 34. To quote the Judge's words (page 1088*):—

"In this case the killing of Nripendra was, according to the evidence, done by one person who was not the accused. It was, therefore, not done by several persons and I do not see how the section can apply. The only act he can be liable for under the section is one done by several persons of whom he was one, that is by the man who escaped and himself."

This view was followed in Emperor v. Profulla Kumar Mazumdar (4). The learned Judges, however, seem to have overlooked s. 9 of the Indian Penal Code which in my opinion would have removed the difficulty felt by Stephen, J. Section 9 runs as follows:—

"Unless the contrary appears from the context, words importing the singular number include the plural number, and words importing the plural number include the singular number."

If we turn then to s. 34 and read it in the light of s. 9, we can interpret it as follows:—When a criminal act is done by one or more persons, in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone.

The question was recently exhaustively considered in Emperor v. Barendra Kumar Ghose (5) and Stephen, J.'s view was overruled as unduly narrow. Richardson, J., put the case in the following words (page 576†):—

"Prove the common intention of the persons present at the commission of the offence and all would be equally guilty of nothing less than that offence. If death were the result of the act or series of acts of one out of several confederates, the act would be done by them all within the meaning of s. 34. If death followed the different acts of different confederates at the same time and place, then again s. 34 would probably suffice. Every confederate would be regarded as having done every criminal act and would, therefore, be liable as if he had done them all alone."

For the above reasons I hold that there was no legal defect in the conviction by the learned Judge of the lower Court. I have already stated that I entirely agree with the learned Judge's very careful finding on the facts of the case.

Coming to the question of sentence, the learned Advocate has urged that at any rate the appellant No. 2's sentence of five years should be reduced to the two years inflicted on appellant No. 3. At the same time he begged us to consider whether the sentence passed on appellant No. 3 should not also be reduced. For my part I cannot say that the sentence errs in any way on the side of undue severity. Had the shots of appellant No. 1 taken effect, both the appellants Nos. 2 and 3 would have been in grave danger of their lives. The reason why the learned Judge inflicted a higher sentence on appellant No. 2 is obvious. It was in his house that the conspiracy was hatched: it was his house which afforded a hiding place from which the would-be murderer set forth to shoot Nathuram.

I have no hesitation, therefore, in confirming the convictions and sentences on all the three appellants, and I dismiss their appeal.

Marten, J.—[After discussing the facts of the case, his Lordship proceeded as follows:—]

I now turn to the important point of law involved as regards accused Nos. 2 and 6. It is argued that an accused charged under s. 307 with an attempt to murder cannot, as here, be convicted under that section as read with s. 34 or s. 114, unless ss. 34 and 114 or one of them are expressly mentioned in the charge. Now it is important to remember here what the charge was, and also the finding by the Court. I have already stated what that finding was. As regards the charge, it was not only under s. 307 but was also under ss. 148 and 149. But to avoid any misconception, I wish to make it perfectly clear that in my opinion there were separate and alternative charges under ss. 148 and 307. In other words, it was quite permissible to convict under s. 307, as happened in the case of accused No. 1, although the charge failed under s. 148. In effect then the charge was that these three accused, Nos. 1, 2 and 6 assembled with a common object or intention of murdering Nathuram, and that this was to be effected by accused No. 1 shooting at Nathuram, which accused No. 1 in fact did and thereby caused grevious hurt, and that accordingly all the accused were guilty of an attempt to murder. So the charge alleged a common presence: a common object: the actual slaughter to be effected by one: and the consequence in law, the criminal offence of an attempt to murder.

Accordingly accused Nos. 2 to 6 knew that they were charged with attempt to murder, although the actual shots were admitted by the Crown to be fired by accused No. 1 alone. They also knew that as they were charged with a common object or intention along with accused No. 1, this, if proved, might make them criminally liable under s. 34 subject to the question of construction which I will mention later. Or else that their acts would amount to a conspiracy and hence to abetment under s. 107 (2) in which case they might be liable to be convicted as if they were principals under s. 114. As to this, I wish to make it perfectly clear that if I thought here that this was a case of an accused being charged with one offence and convicted of another, or if I thought there was the slightest reason to suppose that the accused were actually misled in their defence, I would unhesitatingly join in setting aside the conviction, and if necessary in ordering a re-trial. I in no way depart from the ordinary view of the criminal law in this respect, which recently found expression in Emperor v. Appay Baslingappa (6). There Mr. Justice Covaji and myself set aside a conviction where a man who had been charged with abetment of murder was acquitted of that charge but was then convicted by the learned Judge of causing disappearance of the evidence of offence under s. 201, when in point of fact there was nothing in the charge on the point, nor was the opinion of the assessors even asked upon it.

But here, as I have already endeavoured to point out, the charge told the accused plainly what the case was against them. And that they were not in fact misled appears also from the arguments advanced by Mr. Manilal K. Desai, the Pleader for accused Nos. 1 and 2, in his summing up, viz., "Accused Nos. 3, 4 and 5 in any case cannot be held responsible for any conspiracy or abetment. Tapeli is a concoction. Nor has accused No. 2 abetted the firing of the gun by accused No. 1," and the Public Prosecutor urged in reply. "All the accused conspired with accused No. 1 and so all are guilty of the offences charged." If then there was nothing more in the case, it might be said that even if it was an error that no specific mention was made in the charge of s. 34 or s. 114 still it was a defect which could be cured under either s. 232 or s. 537 of the Cr. P. C., as no miscarriage of justice had resulted, nor had the accused been misled in their defence, nor had the point been raised at the trial.

But was it an error not to mention s. 34 or s. 114 specifically? In the first place, s. 34 is a rule of law and not an offence in itself. It appears in a Chapter headed "General Explanations" which contains (inter alia) various definitions. Section 34 itself runs:—

"When a criminal act is done by several persons, in furtherance of the common intention of all, each of such persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone."

It is said, however, that in the present case the act was the firing of the gun, that it was done by one man alone, and that accordingly it was not done by several persons within the meaning of s. 34, and that accordingly that section does not apply. The learned Advocate for accused Nos. 2 and 6 pressed this point of law strongly on us, and cited some authorities in Calcutta to establish his views. But the Court pointed out that there was a recent case in Calcutta which reviewed all the previous authorties and, which being a decision of the Full Bench of Calcutta, would be binding on that Court: Emperor v. Barendra Kumar Ghose (5). Counsel were good enough to get this authority for the Court. I regret I cannot give a reference to the authorised reports, because apparently there is as much delay in Calcutta in issuing the authorised reports as we have in our own Presidency. It is regrettable that although that case was decided as long ago as September 26, 1923, we are unable to get the authorized report by the end of July 1924.

In that case there was a reference under the Letters Patent against a charge to the Jury by Mr. Justice Page at the High Court Sessions. I should state that it was a case where some armed men entered a post office, and one or more of them shot the Post Master. The accused alleged that he was on watch outside the post office at the time. The prosecution case was that he went inside, but it appears to have been uncertain who actually fired the fatal shot. The accused was charged under s. 302 and 394. There was no charge under s. 34 or 114. The charge to the Jury was this (p. 173*):—

"Therefore in this case if these three persons went to that place with a common intention to rob the Post Master and if necessary to kill him and if death resulted, each of them is liable whichever of the three fired the fatal shot.

"If you come to the conclusion that these three or four persons came into the Post Office with that intention to rob and if necessary to kill and death resulted from their act, if that be so, you are bound to find a verdict of guilty.

"I say if you doubt that it was the pistol of the accused which fired the fatal shot, that does not matter. If you are satisfied on the other hand that the shot was fired by one of those persons in furtherance of this common intention, if that be so then it is your duty to find a verdict of guilty."

The Full Bench reference was heard by five Judges including Mr. Justice Page. The unanimous finding was that there was no misdirection and that the balance of authority and reason was against the limited interpretation placed on s. 34 of the Indian Penal Code in Emperor v. Nirmal Kanta Roy (3).

Now I do not propose to discuss the authorities which the learned Judges in the Full Bench case exhaustively considered. They number altogether over 200. Nor is it necessary for me to read extracts from their judgments. I am content to say that with great respect I entirely concur in the result which they have arrived at. It may, however, be observed that apparently they have arrived at that result quite irrespective of s. 9 of the Indian Penal Code which section we mentioned to Counsel for consideration. In reply it was urged that to apply s. 9 of the Indian Penal Code to s. 34, would be adopting a most violent construction or application of s. 9. But to do so is only to give an interpretation to s. 34 which the Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court has arrived at quite irrespective of s. 9. After all what does s. 9 say? "Unless the contrary appears from the context, words importing the singular number include the plural number, and words importing the plural number include the singular number." If then in s. 34 the words "by several persons," which in fact import the plural are also to be deemed to include the singular, unless the context is to the contrary, then surely it is permissible to read the section as being in effect as follows, viz. "When a criminal act is done by one or more of several persons in furtherance of the common of intention all, each of such several persons is liable for that act in the same manner as if it were done by him alone."

In this connection one must always remember that in a Code you have first of all to turn to the definitions which are used. If one forgets to do so, one may be trapped into a mistake and after all it is only fair to the draftsman to try and understand his mind and the intentions, with which he has drafted any particular documents, so that one may appreciate his expressions, and none the less so when for brevity he uses one particular expression to include one or more, what I may call, sub-expressions.

It follows, therefore, that in my judgment the conviction by the learned Judge, viz., under s. 307 read with s. 34 or s. 114, can at any rate be sustained as being under s. 307 read with s. 34. The mere fact that the judgment was in the alternative is immaterial under s. 367 (2) of the Cr. P. C.

But in deference to the arguments which have been addressed to us, I think I should deal shortly with s. 114. My learned brother has pointed out that this case is entirely diffent from Emperor v. Raghya Nagya (2) and Reg. v. Chand Nur (1). In the latter case the party accused of abetment was not present, and the real ground on which the conviction was set aside was that the Court thought that the defence was not given fair notice of the charge actually brought against them. What the learned Judges said there is (p. 241*):

"When a man is accused of murder, he may not be conscious that he will have to meet an imputation of collateral circumstances constituting abetment of it, which may be quite distinct from the circumstances constituting the murder itself."

So, too, in the case before Sir Norman Macleod and Mr. Justice Shah, there was a doubt whether the woman was present at the offence as well as the man who actually did the deed. I have no doubt that is why the Appellate Court thought that the proper charges should be in the alternative viz., under s. 302 read with s. 109 or s. 114. But I am not prepared to extend that case to a case like the present where the accused were in fact present, and were charged with being present and were also charged under ss. 148 and 149, viz., with a common object and a common intention of an attempt to murder in a particular manner.

I should have mentioned that the Calcutta Full Bench will in due course come under review by their Lordships of the Privy Council, as a certificate of appeal has been granted by the Calcutta High Court, as appears from Barendra Kumar Ghose v. King-Emperor (7). It may be, therefore, when we have the advantage of the decision of the Privy Council in that particular case, that it may become a question whether these two ealier Bombay cases should be reviewed by a Full Bench.

But I repeat that the real test in my opinion is whether the accused fairly knew the charge they had to meet. In the present case I think they did, and that the actual conviction was justified under the procedure in force in this country.

I accordingly agree with my learned brother in thinking that this appeal should be dismissed. I have nothing to add to what he has already said on the question of sentence.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

UNDEFENDED CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 34 OF 1925[1]

March 16, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Mukerji and Mr. Justice Duval.

SARODA CHARAN MISTRI AND ANOTHER —ACCUSED

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 307, 439—Trial by Jury—Disagreement between Judge and Jury—Reference to High Court, when to be made—Failure to make reference—Power of High Court to direct that reference should be made.

It is ordinarily a matter entirely within the discretion of the Sessions Judge as to whether he should or should not make a reference to the High Court under s. 307 of the Cr. P. C. This discretion, however, should always be exercised when the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by the evidence; it is the only way in which a miscarriage of justice by a perverse verdict of a Jury can be remedied by the High Court. It is not necessary that before making a reference the Sessions Judge should be satisfied that the verdict is perverse, it is sufficient that he should be clearly of opinion that a reference is necessary for the ends of justice If in a case in which for the ends of justice a reference is necessary the Sessions Judge fails to make the reference and thus deprives the High Court of an opportunity to deal with the case on its merits, he does something more than merely acting in the erroneous exercise of his discretion. He fails to exercise his jurisdiction and this failure operates to the prejudice either of the Crown or of the accused, and it is well within the power of the High Court under s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. to direct the Sessions Judge in such a case to submit the case to the High Court for its consideration under s. 307 of the Cr. P. C. [p. 607, cols. 1 & 2.]

Appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Backarganj, dated the 23rd December 1924.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—It is difficult to comprehend the exact import of the order which the learned Sessions Judge has passed in this case. His summing up was a perfectly fair one, and as far as one can say from a perusal of the heads of charge recorded by him, he seems to have summed up for an acquittal of the two appellants.

The Jury brought in a unanimous verdict of guilty under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, in respect of Madhumala and under s. 328, Indian Penal Code in respect of Saroda Charan Mistri.

The learned Judge states in his order that had he been trying the case alone he should have been inclined to give the appellants the benefit of the doubt on the question as to whether the appellants knew that the drug they administered was poison but as the jury seemed to have unhesitatingly rejected the case for the defence on this point, he thought that he was not justified in pressing "the slight doubts" that remained in his mind, to the extent of referring the case to this Court under s. 307, Cr. P. C. This observation of the learned Judge may be taken to indicate that his disagreement with the Jury was not such a complete dissent as to lead him to consider it necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case to this Court under the provisions of the said section. To this extent, perhaps, and if there was nothing else, his refusal to refer the case may be justified.

The learned Judge, however, goes on to observe in his order that the differentiation of the cases of the two accused by the Jury did not appear to him to be justified and he states further thus. "If the accused are at all guilty, then they are both certainly guilty of murder." In his charge too he had given his ruling that if the two accused knew they were administering aconite they were guilty of murder and the charge under s. 328 was unnecessary. After this clear and definite expression of opinion on his part both to the Jury and in his judgment his duty under the law was to make a reference. The duties of a Judge in this respect are clearly laid down in the section itself. That section lays down that on certain conditions existing, viz., there being a disagreement between the Judge and the Jury, and the Judge being clearly of opinion that it is necessary for the ends of justice to submit the case, he shall submit the case accordingly. No doubt it is ordinarily a matter entirely within the discretion of the Judge as to whether he should make a reference or not. This discretion however, as observed in the case of Empress v. Guruvadu (1) "should always be exercised when the Judge thinks that the verdict is not supported by the evidence; it is the only way in which a miscarriage of justice by a perverse verdict of a Jury, which is of frequent occurrence, can be remedied by the High Court." It is no longer the law that before making a reference the Judge must be satisfied that the verdict is perverse, it is sufficient that he should be clearly of opinion that a reference is necessary for the ends of justice: Ismail Sarkar v. Emperor (2).

(1) 13 M. 343; 2 Weir 389; 4 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 951.

The doubts entertained by the learned Judge on the question of knowledge coupled with his definite conviction that the case was one of murder, if of any offence at all, made it obligatory for him to make a reference; his dissent from the verdict as to the character of the offence, of which the accused were guilty, was a clear, full and complete dissent, nor can it be doubted for a moment that the ends of justice demanded a reference, which would have enabled this Court to deal with the facts and determine whether the appellants were really guilty and if so, of what offence.

The learned Judge has refrained from making a reference for reasons to which I shall presently refer. Although the offence, if any, of Saroda Charan Mistry is in the opinion of the Judge nothing less than murder, he thought that the said appellant could be adequately punished under s. 328, Indian Penal Code, and he sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for 5 years. This is somewhat incomprehensible. As regards Madhumala the learned Judge passed upon her, as he says, with the greatest reluctance, the only alternative sentence which the law permits and he recommends that the District Magistrate should move the authorities for reduction of her sentence. He says that he is confident that this is a case in which the prerogative of mercy will be exercised. He states that he feels that there was certainly no case for punishing the girl more severely than her brother.

It is clear then that the learned Judge felt that the verdict of the Jury was wrong, and that if he accepted the verdict in its entirety he was unable to do justice to the accused. It follows, therefore, that the ends of justice demanded a reference to this Court. The conditions necessary for the application of s. 307, Cr. P. C., being clearly present, the duty of the learned Judge was to make such a reference, and once the conditions are present that course is obligatory and is no longer a matter of discretion at all; it should be remembered that the word used is "shall". If under circumstances such as those that are in this case the learned Judge fails to do what the law requires him to do and thus deprives this Court of an opportunity to deal with the case on its merits, he does something more than merely act in the erroneous exercise of his discretion. He fails to exercise his jurisdiction and this failure operates to the prejudice either of the Crown or of the accused, and, speaking for myself, I am of opinion that it is well within our powers under s. 439, Cr. P. C., to direct him to submit the case to us for our consideration under s. 307, Cr. P. C.

It is, however, not necessary in the present case to exercise those powers. The verdict of the Jury is illogical, absurd and incomprehencible and I entirely agree with the learned Judge that no differentiation can possibly be made between the cases as against the two accused and that the offence committed by them is either murder or nothing at all. The verdict brought in by the Jury is only explicable on the supposition that there was a misunderstanding on the part of the Jury of the law as laid down by the learned Judge. As I have already stated there is no misdirection in the learned Judge's charge to the Jury to which this erroneous verdict can be attributed.

I have perused the record with some degree of care and I have no hesitation in saying that I share in the doubts which the learned Judge entertained as to the guilt of the appellants. It will not serve any useful purpose to recapitulate the points upon which my doubts are founded, for they are set out in the learned Judge's charge with sufficient particularity and precision. I agree with him in holding that it has not been proved to my satisfaction that the appellants are guilty of any offence. I accordingly allow the appeal and order that the appellants be acquitted and discharged.

Duval, J.—I agree that the appeal by these two prisoners must be allowed and that the Judge should have made a reference for two reasons—(i) that the Jury refused to accept his ruling that the evidence revealed a case under s. 302 or nothing, and so the findings against the male accused under s. 328 only were not justified by the evidence, and (ii) that though there were circumstances which shew that the two accused knew they were administering a drug surreptitiously in the deceased's food and there is evidence that they were in bad terms with him, there is practically no evidence that they knew that the drug given to them to use would cause hurt, much less death.

Hafiz NEHAL AHMAD—APPELLANT

RAMJI DAS—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 476, 476B: Application for order directing prosecution—Appeal—Death of applicant pending appeal, effect of—Right, whether survives.

Where a private person moves a Court to take action under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C., but the Court refuses to take such action, and the applicant files an appeal but dies during the pendency of the appeal, the right to carry on the appeal does not survive to his legal representatives or to anybody else.

Criminal appeal against an order of the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 16th August 1924.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These Appeals Nos. 906—920 are appeals under s. 476B of the Cr. P. C. filed by one Nehal Ahmad who has since died.

It appears that several people were prosecuted on a charge of dacoity at Saharanpur, the case being one of the now notorious Saharanpur riot cases. The learned Sessions Judge acquitted some of the accused persons and convicted others. Nehal Ahmad was one of the persons who were prosecuted and acquitted. On his acquittal Nehal Ahmad presented sixteen petitions before the learned Sessions Judge asking the Court to take action under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. and to file a complaint for the prosecution of the witnesses for the prosecution. The learned Sessions Judge took action against only one, viz., Badri Das who has filed an appeal No. 695 of 1924. He dismissed the application against the rest. Nehal Ahmad came up to this Court in appeal.

Nehal Ahmad is dead and with his death the power which he gave to Mr. A. Aziz, Vakil, to prosecute the case on his behalf came to an end. Mr. Aziz, yesterday, mentioned these cases and stated that it was possible that he would be able to show that without a vakalatnama he was entitled to argue the appeals. His argument seemed to be that it was after all the duty of the Court to take up the prosecution and any member of the public could represent matters before an Appellate Court. Mr. Aziz told the Court that he was going away and asked for a postponement. Mr. Nehal Chand, the learned Counsel appearing for the opposite parties, objected to a postponement on the ground that his clients were already here and waiting for the disposal of the appeals. Mr. Aziz was, therefore, told that if he was going away he should hand over his brief (if indeed any brief is left) with a brother practitioner to argue the point if he was so advised. Evidently Mr. Aziz left no instructions, for nobody is appearing to-day on behalf of his client.

The learned Government Advocate appeared and stated that as a Government Counsel he had examined the cases and he was not prepared to take up the appeals preferred by Nehal Ahmad and to prosecute them before this Court.

I do not quite see how the learned Government Advocate could come in and express his opinion on the merits. Section 476B gives a right of appeal to a private person and it has nothing to do with the Government. Indeed, it is a Government Officer, who has refused to order a prosecution and unless there is an instruction to the contrary from the Government, the learned Government Advocate is not likely to make an application to upset the judgment of a Government Officer. However, the matter is not of any importance. The fact remains that the private party who was entitled to move in the matter did move, but has died and there is no question of any survival of the right of appeal. Section 476B says that any person on whose application a Civil, Revenue and Criminal Court has refused to make a complaint may appeal etc. etc. The language does not indicate that any legal representative of the deceased appellant may file an appeal, or support it on the death of the appellant.

Mr. Nihal Chand, the learned Counsel representing the other side has argued that under ss. 404 and 431 of the Cr. P. C. the appeal abates on the death of the appellant. But so far as I can see, the appeal referred to in s. 431 is an appeal either against an acquittal or by a convicted person. This is not a case like that. Section 404 has apparently no application for this is an appeal under the Code.

Although ss. 404 and 431 have no application, in my opinion, the right of appeal does not survive.

I declare that the appeals have all abated.

JOWAHIR SINGH AND ANOTHER—DECREE-HOLDER AND JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—RESPONDENTS.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), ss. 17 (1) (b), 49—Surety—Hypothecation deed, unregistered, whether admissible to prove personal liability.

Appellant stood surety for a judgment-debtor and executed a deed hypothecating his house as security for the performance of the decree. The deed was not registered. In a statement made before the Court the appellant made himself personally liable for the decretal amount:

Held, (1) that the surety having made himself personally liable for the decretal amount, the unregistered hypothecation deed may be ignored and by virtue of the personal liability of the surety the very house which he had hypothecated by the unregistered deed could be attached and sold in satisfaction of the personal liability;

(2) that the hypothecation deed, though inadmissible in evidence in order to affect the house, for want of registration, was admissible in evidence in proof of the personal obligation which the surety had thereby undertaken.

Second appeal against an order of the District Judge, Amritsar, dated the 18th February 1924, reversing that of the Sub-Judge, Fourth Class, Amritsar, dated the 16th May 1923.

Mr. Nanak Chand Chopra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—One Basant Lal stood surety for a judgment-debtor named Narain Das. He executed a deed hypothecating his house which should have been registered and was not. It has been held by the learned District Judge that in spite of this want of registration, the fact that Basant Lal in a statement before a Court made himself personally liable for the disputed amount, justifies the decree-holder in proceeding against him. Counsel urges that this statement can only be treated as a repetition of a fact which cannot be proved. In my opinion the unregistered deed may be ignored and as held by the District Judge the surety is personally liable and in virtue of his personal liability the very house which he hypothecated in the unregistered deed can be attached.

Not only is this so but the deed itself recites that he is standing surety and will pay personally the amount due from his principal in case of default. It goes on to say that in lieu of this liability he hypothecates this house. This puts the case, in my opinion, on all fours with Pulaka Veetil Muthalakulangara Kunhu Moidu v. Thiruthipalli Madhava Menon (1), where a mortgage-deed though inadmissible for want of registration was still allowed to be tendered as evidence in proof of the debt. This view is also in accordance with that expressed in Khuddu Mal v. Kunji Lal (2) and Prem Singh v. Mulla Mal (3). I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Hindu Law—Succession—Bandhus—Maternal uncle's son and maternal aunt's son, priority between.

The rules to be applied for determining priority among the atma bandhus are

(1) that propinquity should be the governing factor; [p. 614, col. 1.]

(2) that if both are equal in degree the spiritual benefit conferred may be used as a test for preference. [ibid.]

A maternal uncle's son and a maternal aunt's son are bandhus in the same degree, but the former must be preferred to the latter on account of superior spiritual efficacy. [p. 620, col. 1.]

Rules relating to succession among bandhus explained.

Case-law and texts discussed.

Second appeal against the decree of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Guddapah, in A. S. No. 40 of 1922, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Proddatur, in Original Suit No. 601 of 1920.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—The only question to be decided in this second appeal is one of succession to the properties of one C. Subbayya who died in 1906 or 1907 leaving a widow Narakka who died in October 1918. The plaintiff is a vendee (under a sale-deed, dated 14th October 1919) from A. Venkatareddi and Balireddi who are the mother's sister's sons of Subbayya. The District Munsif found that Subbayya has also left his mother's brother's sons but held relying on Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1), that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The Subordinate Judge confirmed his judgment. The defendants file this second appeal and contend that the mother's brother's son is entitled to priority over the mother's sister's son under the Hindu Law. They point out that the decision in Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1) has been dissented from in Ramcharan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (2) and it must be regarded as shaken if not overruled by the decision in Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3).

The question is one relating to the succession of bandhus. It is desirable to clear the ground by stating the principles of succession among bandhus at least such of them as may help to solve the question.

There is no doubt as to the meaning of the term 'bandhu' for purposes of succession. Though only some bandhus are enumerated in the well-known ancient Smriti text (attributed variously to Vridha Statapa and Baudhayana), it has been laid down that the enumeration is not exhaustive and that it includes all bhinnagotra sapindas: see Gridhari Lal Roy v. Bengal Government (4) and Martand Waikar v. Vinayak Venkatesh Kothekar (5).

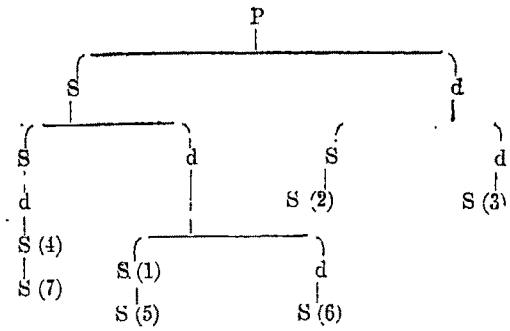
Relying on this definition, Saravadhikari (Tagore Law Lectures 1882) attempted to construct exhaustive tables of bandhus. He restricted the bandhus to four famalies: (1) the family of the agnates of the propositus; (2) the family of the agnates of his mother's father; (3) the family of the agnates of his father's mother's father; and (4) the family of agnates of his mother's mother's father. Whether the bandhus ought to be limited to these four families though they otherwise satisfy the definition of bhinnagotra sapindas has not arisen for judicial decision and does not arise in this case. With the said limitation and also excluding, the so-called sapindas by 'frog's leap (see Sarvadhikari, 2nd Edition, pages 592, 597 and 600) and remembering that sapindaship is mutual, he tabulated the possible bandhus in four tables (facing pages 606, 607). Some of his views as to priority of succession (as expounded in the 1st Edition) based on the separation into four families were not accepted by the Privy Council in Muthusami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliyar (6). All these bandhus can be grouped in one table. Such a table is shown in the 9th Edition of Mayne's Hindu Law facing page 852. The table is exhaustive and accurate subject to the limitation mentioned above. The order of succession among the persons in the table has to be determined.

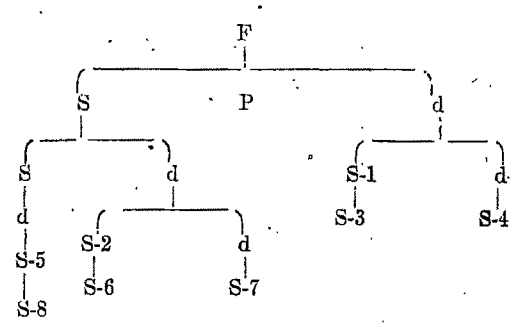
Now, apart from any texts of Hindu Law, the bandhus so enumerated will naturally fall into the following groups depending on the nearness of the ancestor.

(1) Descendants of the propositus whom I indicate hereafter by the letter P. They are numbers 1 to 7 in the table in Mayne's Hindu Law and in the annexed table.

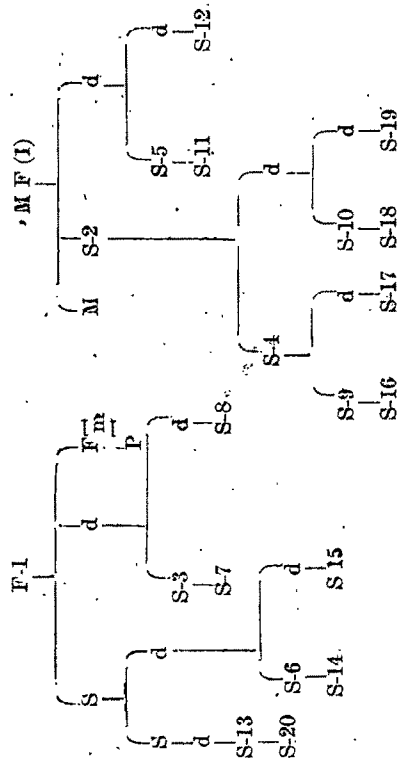


(6) 19 M. 405; 23 I. A. 83; 6 M. L. J. 113; 7 Sar. P. C. J. 45; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 987 (P. C.).

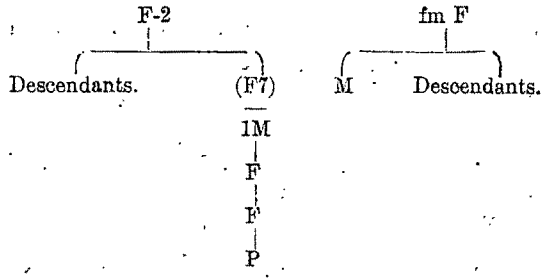
(2) Descendants of P's father, collateral to P, i. e., excluding group 1. They are Nos. 1 to 8 in the annexed table and Nos. 8 to 15 in the table in Mayne.



(3) Descendants of P's grandfathers (paternal and maternal) collateral to P's father, i. e., excluding groups 1 and 2. They correspond to Nos. 1 to 20 in the table annexed and are Nos. 16 to 35 in the table in Mayne.

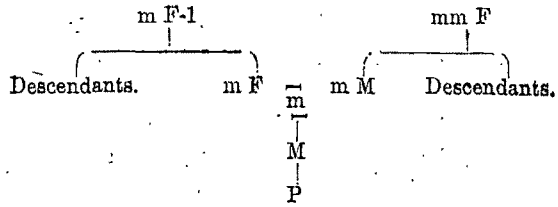


(4) Descendants of P's father's grandfathers (paternal and maternal) collateral to P's grandfather (F-1) (i. e.,) excluding groups 1 and 2 and left half of group 3. They are Nos. 36 to 55 in the table in Mayne.



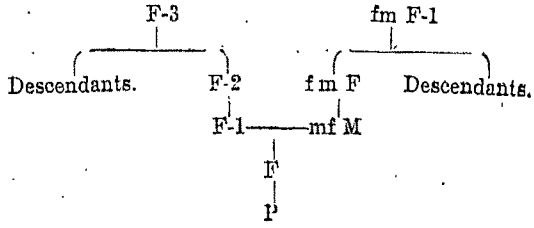
The descendants are formed exactly as in the table for group 3.

(5) Descendants of P's mother's grandfathers (paternal and maternal) collateral to P's mother's father (i. e., excluding groups 1 and 2 and right half of group 3). They are Nos. 56 to 75 in the table in Mayne.



The descendants are formed exactly as in table for groups 3 and 4.

(6*a*) Descendants of P's paternal grandfather's (F-1) paternal grandfather (collateral to P's paternal great grandfather (F-2) i. e., excluding groups 1 and 2 left half of group 3, and left half of group 4; and descendants of P's paternal grandfather's (fM) paternal grandfather, collateral to her father (fmF) i. e., excluding groups 1, 2 and right half of group 4. These are Nos. 56 to 75 in the table in Mayne.



The descendants are formed as before.

(6*b*) Descendants of P's mother's father's (mF) paternal grandfather collateral to mother's father's father (mF-I) i. e., excluding groups 1, 2, right half of group 3, and left half of group 5; and descendants of P's mother's mother's (mM) paternal grandfather, collateral to mother's mother's father (mmf) i. e., excluding groups 1, 2, right half of group 3 and right half of group 5 They are Nos. 105 to 125 in Mayne.

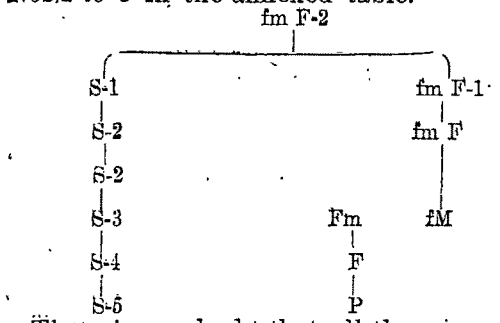
The descendants are formed as before.

(7) Descendants of P's paternal grandmother's (fm) great grandfather collateral to her grandfather (fM f-1). These are Nos. 76 to 80 in the table in Mayne and are Nos.1 to 5 in the annexed table.



There is no doubt that all the persons in the above seven groups are bandhus. groups 1, 2 left halves of groups 3, 4 (6*a*) constitute Sarvadhikari's Table 1 (a). Right half of group 3, left half of group 5, and left half of group (6-b) constitute his Table 1 (b). Right half of group 4, right half of group (6*a*) a and group 7, constitute his Table II. The right half of group 5, and right half of group (6*b*) constitute his Table III.

I now come to the expressions 'atma bandhns' 'pitrubandhus' and 'matru bandhus' used in the ancient Sanskrit Text. It is, evident that the word 'bandhu' in these expressions has a narrower significance than bhinnagotra sapinda'. The question that naturally arises is—Are bandhus other than those enumerated, included in each of these three expressions and if so, who? The three persons enumerated as atma bandhus are in group 3 being Nos. 18, 19 and 20 in Mayne's Table. The Privy Council held No. 17 to be atma bandhu in Muthuami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliyar (6) and Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3), No 22 to be an atma bandhu in Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3) and No. 26 to be an atma bandhu in Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (7). Therefore it follows that Nos. 21, 23 to 25 and 27 who are in the same degree as Nos. 22 and 26 should be regarded as atma bandhus. Similarly not only Nos. 38, 39 and 40 who are enumerated as pitru bandhus but also Nos. 41 to 47 (on the analogy of Vedachela Mudaliyar v. Subramaia Mudaliyar (3) and Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (7) should be regarded as pitru bandhus. Similarly not only Nos. 86, 87, and 88 who are expressly enumerated but also 85 who is in the same line and (on the analogy of Muthusami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliyar (6) and Adit Narayan Singh v. Mahabir Prasad Tiwari (7), Nos. 89 to 96 should be regarded as matru bandhus. But, beyond these, it is not clear to me how the bandhus should be classified. For instance, it is not clear to me how Nos. 36, 81 and 82 who are the ancestors should be classified. I doubt, if the expressions 'atma bandhus' etc., were ever intended to be the basis for a scientific classification and share in the doubts of Mullick and Jwala Prasad, JJ., in Uma Shankar Prasad Parasari v. Nageswari Koeri (8). If we assume that the expression 'atma bandhu' includes all the persons in my third group, the expression 'pitru bandhu' includes all the persons in my fourth group and the expression matru bandhus includes all the persons in my fifth group, even then the question arises in what class should groups 1, 2, 6 and 7 be placed. That is the first question is whether there are only these classes or more? If groups 1 and 2 are to be classified under the named classes, they should obviously be classed as atma bandhus. For if it is said that the expression 'atma bandhu' is not quite appropriate for these, the other expressions are still less appropriate. This is the view taken in *Balusami Panditha*r v. Narayana Rau (9) and Sham Devi v. Birbhadra Prasad (10) (where persons in group 2 were held to be atma bandhus) and by Dawson Miller, C. J., and Imam, J., in Uma Shankar Prasad Prasari v. Nageswari Koeri (8) (as to a person in group 2). But Mullick and Jwala Prasad, JJ., doubted the propriety of attempting to class the unnamed bandhus under the expressions 'atma bandhus' etc.,—a view which has much to commend itself. In Ajudhia v. Ram Sumer Misir (11) and Ramphal Thakur v. Panmati (12) person in group 1 was regarded as an atma bandhu though, no question of priority and hence no question of classification arose in the case. If the connotation of the term 'atma bandhu' is extended as in Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (9) and Sham Devi v. Birbhadra Prasad (10) so as to include group 2 for satisfying the requirement that all bandhus should be divided into three classes, we are landed in anomalies as to the similar connotation of the expressions pitru bandhus, and 'atma bandhus.' Again how should groups 6 and 7, be classified? if they are classed as pitru bandhus, groups (6*a*) and (7) take priority over group (5) and group (7) takes priority over group (6*b*) a result as to the equity of which I have considerable doubt. The doubts indicated by me above do not arise in this case and have not got to be solved by us. Such as relate to groups (6)and (7) have never arisen and may never arise.

Confining myself to the enumerated persons, among whom are ten claimants, the first rule to be applied is that atma bandhus should take precedence over the rest. Muthusami Mudaliyar v. Simambedu Muthukumaraswami Mudaliyar (6).

Confining to myself to groups (3), (4) and (5) as to the division of which into three classes, there is no difficulty, the first rule to be applied is that atma bandhus take precedence over the rest: Muthusami Mudaliyar v. Simambeda Muthukumaraswami Mudaliyar (6). This rule does not help us in this case as both the claimants are in group (3) and are atma bandhus on any view of the expression. We have to find the rules regulating priority among atma bandhus.

The only decision of the Privy Council dealing with a case of rival claimants who are both atma bandhus is Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3). The passage from the Mitakshara (II 6-1) was quoted at page 758 and again referred to at page 764. At page 765 the Smriti Chandrika (XI-5, 13 to 15) and Sarasvati Vilasa 595—S were cited. At page 766*, the conclusion is thus stated: "A very small consideration would show that that passage has nothing to do with the members of the same class inter se." After this conclusion of the Privy Council, I think it is unnecessary for me to deal in detail with the arguments of Mr. Chandrasekhara Iyer based on (1) the sentence, bhandhava asannathara krameniya smrithyantharam darsithah) in the Smriti Chandrika and in Sarasvati Vilasa.

(2) Jaimini Mimamsa sutras Adhikaram V and Parthasaradhi Misra's Sastra Dipika—a commentary on Nyayamala of Madhwacharya. I may add as to the passage from Smriti Chandrika, there are two versions—one containing the word (Vachanika) and the other not containing it, and version relied on by Mr. Chandrasekhara Iyer, (i. e., containing the word (vachanika) is the one referred to by their Lordships at page 765. I will only add that Dayavibhaga of Madhwacharya (Dr. Bernall's translation), another Madras authority, supplemental to Mitakshara says that the enumerated bandhus take according to nearness. In my opinion the basis of the decision in Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1) has been destroyed by the reasoning of their Lordships in Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3). It still remains for us to determine the rules that have to be applied to atma bandhus.

At page 762, His Lordship Right Honourable Amir Ali after referring to the proposition that: 'each class should be divided into sub-classes according to the side of relationship and that in any case preference should be given to the father's side' observes: "Their Lordships do not think it necessary to express an opinion how far this proposition is in conformity with the express rule that in each class propinquity should be the governing factor." At page 763* the principles laid down by Mathuswami, Aiyar, J., in Muthusami v. Muthukumarasami (13) were quoted. The second principle refers to the decision into three classes and the third runs thus:

"(3) That the examples given therein are intended to show the mode in which nearness of affinity is to be ascertained." The fourth relates to spiritual benefit. At page 766*,

His Lordship says: "Among modern writers both Golap Chandar Shastri (page 296) and Raj Coomar Sarvadhikari (page 726) affirm that nearness of blood is the governing principle in the succession of bandhus." The Shastri lays down the rule in the following words: "(1) The nearer in degree on whichever side is to be preferred to one more remote.'" His Lordship then says that the rules quoted from Muthusami v. Muthukumarsami (13) furnish a safer guide (page 767*.) The conclusion is thus stated: "The appellant is undoubtedly nearer in degree to the deceased than Subramania. He also offers oblations to his father and grandfather to whom the deceased was also bound to offer pinda."

Accordingly I infer from Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3) that the rules to be applied to the atma bandhus for determining priority are: (1) propinquity should be the governing factor; (2) if both are equal in degrees, the spiritual benefit conferred may be used as a test for preference.

The first of these rules does not help us in the present case, as both the claimants are of the same degree. I am unable to agree with the statement in Ram Charan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (2) stated at page 425*: "As we hold that the matenal uncle's son is of nearer consanguinity than the maternal aunt's son, the question of funeral oblations need not be considered." It is not clear whether the expression "nearer consanguinity" is used in a different sense from "nearness in degree." If the expressions mean the same, I am not able to see how the maternal uncle's son is nearer in degree than maternal aunt's son. To this extent, viz., that both are equal in degree, I agree with the decision in Rajeppa Ranappa Kundagol v. Gangappa Jotappa Mandwe (14).

Mr. Chandrasekhara Iyer adduced an ingenious argument based on the rules relating to marriage. In Southern India, a man may marry his maternal uncle's daughter but not his mother's sister's daughter. Therefore, he argues, that a maternal aunt's daughter is nearer than maternal uncle's daughter, and, therefore, a maternal aunt's son is nearer than a maternal uncle's son for purposes of succession. According to the ancient Sanskrit texts, both maternal uncle's daughter and maternal aunt's daughter are sapindas and are ineligible for marriage. I believe the rule is strictly observed in Bengal and probably in other parts of Northern India. But a custom has grown up in Southern India, (probably a Dravidian custom) by which a mother's sister's daughter is regarded equivalent to a sister and is ineligible for marriage, while a mother's brother's daughter, or a father's sister's daughter is regarded equivalent to a wife or wife's sister, and, therefore, eligible for marriage. This notion has nothing to do with nearness. Even the South Indian ancient Sanskrit texts (e.g., Vyavahara Madhaviya a commentary on Parasara Smriti, of Madhawacharyya of which Dayavibhaga translated by Dr. Burnell is a portion) that recognise the marriageability of a maternal uncle's daughter base the recognition on local custom.

We have, therefore, to resort to the second test enumerated by their Lordships in Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3), viz., spiritual benefit. We have to see which of the two claimants confers higher spiritual benefits on the propositus. There is no doubt that both confer some spiritual benefit.

In discussing the question of spiritual benefit, we have to remember (1) that a claimant offers oblations to his ancestors in which the propositus participates through his ancestors (2): the offering to a paternal ancestor is superior to the offering to a maternal ancestor; and (3) it follows by the principle of mutuality that the participation through a paternal ancestor is superior to the participation through a maternal ancestor. Thus, as between two persons (propositus) and C (claimant) there are four possible cases.

(1) C offers to his paternal ancester and P participates through paternal ancestors.

(2) C offers to maternal ancestors and P participates through paternal ancestors.

(3) C offers to paternal ancestors and P participates through maternal ancestors.

(4) C offers to maternal ancestors and P participates through maternal ancestors.

The first case is a case where C and P are sagotra sapindas and does not come under the discussion relating to succession by bandhus. In the other three cases C is a bandhu of P. Mr. Chandrasekhara Iyer concedes that C in the second case is superior to C in (3) and (4), e. g., a father's sister's son is superior to mother's sister's son or mother's brother's son, i. e., he concedes that the participation through paternal ancestor is superior to participation through maternal ancestors. (Mayne, pages 736, 508, r. 4). But he does not concede that offering to maternal ancestors is inferior to offering to paternal ancestors. If we remember that all sapindaship and all bandhuship is mutual, it seems to me that the same inferiority attaches to offering to maternal ancestors, in comparison with offering to paternal ancestors. as in the case of participation. That offering to maternal ancestors is inferior to offering to paternal ancestors is an a fortiori case can be inferred from the following facts:—In all schools of Hindu Law, bandhus descended from agnate ancestors are certainly postponed to agnates (subject to certain exceptions in Bengal which it is unnecessary to note here). For instance, in the four simple cases, mentioned above, a father's brother's son is superior to a father's sister's son. In this case, the participation in each case is through paternal ancestors. So far is the rule recognised that agnates, even if remote, are preferred to cognates, even if near (except in Bengal in the case of daughter's sons of agnate ancestors and in Mitakshara Law in the case of daughter's sons). In fact, the principle is the very foundation of the whole system of Hindu Law, by which agnates are preferred to cognates. If so, among cognates, one degree of cognateness is certainly superior to two degrees of cognateness.

Divested of the religious, spiritual or ceremonial veil, the same principle of religious effieacy or spiritual superiority may be stated as (1): claimants through father of propositus are superior to claimants through mother of propositus, other circumstances being equal (2) a claimant through his father is superior to a claimant through his mother. The caution is necessary that these rules should not be applied as they were applied in Sundrammal v. Rengasami Mudaliar (15) so as to defeat the rule as to nearness in degree. The case in Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliyar (15) has been overruled by Vadachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3). They should be applied subject to the rule of nearness in degree: [see Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3).] (15) 18 M. 193; 4 M L. J. 275; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 484.

In the above discussion I have attempted to establish the superior spiritual efficacy of the mother's brother's son by mother's sister's son from general principles. As a particular case, the fact has been recognised in Dharma Sindhu, tadhabave gotrajah tadhabave matamaha matula Tatputradhayah matrusapindah anukramena; matru sapindaabhava svapitrushvasru matru shvasru putrah,—a book which, though mentioned by West and Buhler as an authority in Western India, is of high authority, along with Niranya Sindhu, in the Telugu country (the parties in this case are Telugus) being constantly referred to by Pandits and Purohits (See translation in Sarvadhikari, pages 86-89) anukrama ena matruspinda.

It is true that the text shows a mother's brother's son should have priority in the performance of shraddah over even father's sister's son. I do not wish to concede that the order of succession is the same among them. The point does not arise here.

If every step in cognateness, compared to agnateness denotes a mark of inferiority, it follows that two steps in cognateness are inferior to only one step in cognateness and one in agnateness. The principle has been recognised in this Court in Tirumalachariar v. Andal Ammal (16). The decision in Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1), itself recognises the superior spiritual efficacy of a maternal uncle's son to mother's sister's son. Finally the Bengal School of Law which depends on spiritual efficacy gives preference to mother's brother's son: (see Daya Krama Sangraha Ch. I-X 14 to 26. Mayne, 584, page 859). A text somewhat in conflict with the passage in Dayakrama Sangraha, viz., the commentary of its author (Sri Krishna Tarkalankara)—on Jimutawahana's Dayabhaga has been cited in Ghose's Hindu Law, Vol. II, page 928 but its authenticity is doubtful and it is inconsistent with the main work of the author. This is also the view of Sarvadhikari.

For all the reasons, I would agree with the conclusion in Ram Charan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (2) and regard Appandai Vathiyar v. Raghubali Mudaliar (1) as overruled by Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3) and allow the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs only in the First Court. Each party will bear his costs in this and in the lower Appellate Court.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I agree.

The question to be decided in this case has reference to the priority in regard to succession to a deceased Hindu, the competing claimants being his maternal uncle's son and his maternal aunt's son. The rules respecting succession of bandhus are involved in considerable obscurity, and the specific point with which we have to deal has been the subject of great controversy. The case has been fully and ably argued by Mr. Somayya whose contention has been that the maternal uncle's son is to be preferred and by Mr. N. Chandrasekhara Iyer who has maintained that the maternal aunt's son has the preferential right.

I have come to the conclusion that the maternal uncle's son must be preferred. A Bench of this Court held in Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1) that a mother's sister's son is to be preferred to a maternal uncle's son. But, in my opinion, the reasons given for the decision cannot now be accepted as sound, in view of the recent judgment of the Judicial Committee in Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3).

I shall first examine the texts of Hindu Law on this subject and shall then discuss the case referred to above, namely, Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1).

I may preface my remarks on the original texts, with the observation that the ancient writers, after stating that on failure of agnates, cognates succeed invariably, quote a text that is variously attributed to Vriddha Satatapa and Baudhayana. That text merely enumerates the bandhus and has no bearing on the question of succession. Though it has been repeatedly quoted by the exponents of the law, there is nothing to show that the text, whatever may be its origin, had any connection with any discussion of legal questions, and it is more than probable that the author intended to do no more than merely enumerate the bandhus. The text itself is this:

"The sons of a man's own paternal aunt, the sons of his own maternal aunt, and the sons of his own maternal uncle, are recognised as a man's own bandhavas (atma bandhus). The sons of his father's paternal aunt, the sons of his father's maternal aunt and the sons of his father's maternal uncle are recognised as his father's bandhavas. (pitri bandhus.) The sons of his mother's paternal aunt, the sons of his mother's maternal aunt and the sons of his mother's maternal uncle are recognised as his mother's bandhavas (matri bandhus)."

I shall now proceed to examine the texts,

(1) Vignaneswara in his Mitakshara says thus:—

(1) On failure of agnates, the cognates are heirs. Congates are of three kinds, related to the person himself (atma bandhus), to his father (pitru bandhus) or to his mother (matru bandhus) as is declared by the following text." Here is quoted the famous text attributed to Vriddha Sataapa. Then the Mitakshara continues.

(2) "Here by reason of near affinity, the cognate kindred of the deceased himself (atma bandhus) are his successors in the first instance. On failure of them, his father's cognate kindred (pitru bandhus) or if there be none, his mother's cognate kindred (matru bandhus). This must be understood to be the order of succession here intended." See Ch. II, s. 6, Setlur's Hindu Law Books on Inheritance.

The Mitakshara thus prescribes that the atma bandhus are to be preferred to the pitru bandhus and the pitru to the matru. As regards the order of succession among the bandhus of each class, it says nothing. The Mitakshara, therefore, is not an authority for the proposition that the maternal aunt's son is to be preferred to the maternal uncle's son.

ii. Saraswati Vilasa thus deals with the succession of the bandhus:

"595. The bandhus are exhibited in another law Code, in the order of their greater propinquity." The text of Vriddha Satatapa is then quoted.

"596. If there are no gotrajas, the connection through property belongs to these."

"597. There also the order to be recognised is that a man's own bandhavas first take the property on account of their nearer relationship; if there are none, the father's bandhavas take the property; if there are none, the mother's bandhavas." (See Translation of Saraswati Vilasa by Rev. Thomas Foulkes, page 119).

A reference to the original Sanskrit texts will show that the passage in Saraswati Vilasa, stanza 597, is identical with para. 2 of the above quotation from the Mitakshara.

Now turning to the opening words of sloka 595

"The bhandus are mentioned in another Smriti in the order of their propinquity." I cannot agree with the contention that the learned author intended in this passage to lay down the order of succession in regard to bandhus mentioned in each of the three categories. Sloka 597 puts the matter beyond doubt, because there, it is expressly stated that the order prescribed is only as regards the three classes of the bandhus.

(iii) Smriti Chandrika after stating that after sapindas, samanodakas take the wealth of a deceased kinsman, says that bandhavas come in next in order. Then s. 5, sloka 13 continues:

"The bandhavas are exhibited in another Law Code, in the order of their greater propinquity." Then follows the text of Vriddha Satatapa, which is numbered sloka 14. So far it will be seen that Smriti Chandrika is in complete agreement with Saraswati Vilasa. In the original Sanskrit the same words are used in both the treatises to express the idea conveyed by the words "are exhibited in another Law Code in the order of their propinquity." Then comes sloka 15 which according to one reading is as follows:—

"Of the kinsmen (gnatiyah or sapindas) distant kinsman (Sakulyah or samanodakas), and cognate kindred (bandhavas), in default of one that stands nearest in the order expressly given, he that may be somehow viewed to stand on a par with him may be selected; it being generally declared by Gautama, "Let those take the inheritance who give the funeral cake (pinda), who are the descendants from the same gotra or who are sprung from the same Rishi." See Setlur page 297.

The other reading is that which is adopted by Ghose and is as follows:

"Of the agnates, sakulyas and bandhus, on failure of near heirs, those that may be some how considered near, may be considered as heirs, from what Gautama says generally, thus: "sapindas, sagotras or those connected by descent from the same Rishi take the estate." See principles of Hindu Law, Vol. II, page 471 for the Sanskrit text and page 403 for the English rendering.

In the first place, whichever reading is adopted, sloka 15, is somewhat obscure and in any event, it contains no indication that a different rule was intended to be laid down from what was prescribed in the Mitakshara.

iv. Parasara Madhavya is even less explicit on the point. It does not set out the priority, even in regard to the main three classes. This is how the law is stated:—

"In default of gotrajas, bandhavas take the property and they are of three kinds, as has been shown by Budhayana." Here the writer gives as usual the well-known text and then proceeds to say "But he who is nearest among the bandhavas takes first. So Brihaspati says: "Where there are many kinsmen sakulayas and bandhavas, he who is nearest to them should take the property of a man who leaves no issue." (See sloka 41 in the translation by Mr. A. C. Burnell page41). As I have observed, on the point at issue, this passage throws little light.

(v) Varadaraja's Vyavahara Nirnaya merely states that bandhavas succeed in default of sagotras and then cites the text of Vriddha Satatapa. See Burnell's translation of Vyavahara Nirnaya, page 37.

(vi) Vyavahara Mayukha enunciates the law thus:—

"If no distant kinsman exists then come the cognate kindred (bandhu) who are thus specified in another Smriti." The Smriti of Vriddha Satatapa is then as usual quoted. Then the author continues: "Here also the order of succession follows the order of the text." (See s. 8, verse 22, p. 101 of Burnell's translation.)

A careful examination of these texts reveals, that so far as the Mitakshara is concerned it settles priority only in regard to the three main categories of the bandhus and that excepting a doubtful and obscure passage of the Smriti Chandrika, there is nothing in these authorities which indicates that the order in which the bandhus of each class are enumerated, is intended to determine their respective priority.

I shall next deal with Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1), the case to which I have referred. The reasons for holding that a mother's sister's son is to be preferred to a maternal uncle's son are, according to the judgment in that case, the following:—

(1) "The express authority of the Smriti Chandrika, the Sarasvati Vilasa and the Vyavahara Mayukha must be given effect to" page 445*).

With all respect, in my opinion, as I have shown, this reason is not sound. The translator of the Smriti Chandrika who is referred to in the judgment (Mr. Krishnaswamier) no doubt gives the 24th place to the son of the mother's sister and the 25th to the son of the maternal uncle. This is merely the opinion of the translator and it is not correct to say that the Smriti Chandrika itself supports the view. Again Mr. Mandlik in his translation of the Vyavahara Mayukha adds in a foot-note that the order applies to the three classes as well as to the several members of those three classes. Whatever may be Mr. Mandlik's opinion, it does not receive any support from the original which he has translated. I have sufficiently shown that the texts of the Hindu Law do not support the view which the learned Judges have taken in this case.

(2) The second reason given in support of their judgment may also be stated in the words of the learned Judges: "There is a rule of Mimamsa that effects should be given to the order in which persons and things are named unless the sense requires a different order. In the absence of any decisive principle dictating a different order, the duty of the interpretor of the law is to accept the order in which they are named as based upon some rule which they may be unable to discover or upon the mere ipse dixit of the law-giver." Jaimini in his Mimamsa Sutras refers to what are called Krama.

The three chief Kramas are thus defined.

(i) The order of succession is sometimes declared by express Srutis. This is called Sruti-Kramas.

(ii) In the absence of express Sruti, it is in some cases to be determined by the sense of the passage. This is called Artha-Krama (determination of order by sense).

(iii) It is sometimes indicated by the order in which the texts appear. This is called Patha-Krama, (succession by reading). See Sircar, Tagore Law Lectures on Mimamsa Rules of interpretation, page 196.

It is the third rule that is referred to in the passage quoted above from the judgment. The first two Kramas are based on reason. The third Krama is purely arbitrary and cannot be relied on, excepting possibly, in the last resort. This artificial rule was treated by the learned Judges as the chief canon of construction. The mere accident of enumeration in a certain order was taken as decisive of the point at issue.

Moreover, in the light of decided cases, can any importance be attached to the order of enumeration? In Sundrammal v. Rangasami Mudaliyar (15), the sons of the daughter of the deceased's paternal uncle were preferred to the deceased's mother's sister's son. Both belonged to the class of atma bandhus, but a cognate not specified in the enumeration was preferred to a cognate specified. In Balusami Pandithar v. Narayana Rau (9), the son of the sister's son was preferred to the maternal uncle's son. Here again, the contest was between two atma bandhus, and a bandhu not mentioned was preferred to a bandhu mentioned. In Gunesh Chunder Roy v. Nil Komul Roy (17), a sister's son was given priority over a mother's sister's son and in Mohandas v. Krishnabai (18), the maternal uncle was preferred to the mother's sister's son. In each of these two cases again, a bandhu specified among the atma bandhus was rejected in favour of one not specified. In Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3), the Judicial Committee preferred a maternal uncle (an atma bandhu ex parte maternal to a son of the paternal aunt's son (an atma bandhu ex parte paterna).

It has been held that the enumeration in the text of Vriddha Satatapa is only illustrative and not exhaustive; and if cognates not included in the enumeration of atma bandhus are to be preferred to the first named pitru bandhu and if similarly pitru bandhus not in the list are to be preferred to the first mentioned matru bandhu, where then can priority come, by virtue of mere enumeration? I am, therefore, decidedly of the opinion that Pâdakrama rule ought not to be applied.

(3) I shall next deal with the third ground on which the judgment in Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1) is based. Referring to Bhattacharya and Sarvadhikari, who give precedence to the maternal uncle's son over the mother's sister's son, the learned Judges observe that the view of those writers is not entitled to weight as it is based on the theory of religious efficacy of oblations which has no place in the Mitakshara scheme of succession. The learned Judges say: "It is difficult to decide the question under consideration on any theory of superior efficacy." (page 444*). Similarly they dispose of the observation of Mr. Justice Muthuswami Iyer in Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (13), that the spiritual benefit conferred on a propositus is a ground of preference. A good portion of the judgment is devoted to showing that the Mitakshara "repudiates the notion of connection by spiritual offerings." There can be little doubt that the learned Judges were disposed to take the view that if the question had to be decided with reference to the theory of religious efficacy, the maternal uncle's son ought to be preferred to the maternal aunt's son. A very different view on the question of spiritual benefit has now been taken by the Judicial Committee in Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3), and the value of Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1), as an authority is thus lost.

(18) 5 B. 597; 3 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 393.

Page of 33 M.—[Ed.]*

In Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar (3), the contest was between the mother's brother and the father's sister's son's son. The Madras High Court (Miller and Sadasiva Iyer, JJ.), held that the latter was the preferential heir. In doing so, one of the learned Judges (Sadasiva Iyer, J.) refused to recognise the fourth rule laid down by Sir T. Muthuswami Iyer, J., in Muthusami v. Muttukumarasami (13), namely: "that as between the bandhus of the same class, the spiritual benefit they confer upon the propositus is as stated in Viramitrodaya a ground of preference."

Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee point out that the Viramitrodaya is regarded as a high authority, wherever the Law of the Mitakshara is in force and state their conclusion thus:—"Their Lordships think that in the absence of any express authority varying the rule, the propositions enunciated in Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (13) which on appeal was affirmed by the Judicial Committee, furnish a safe guide." The competing claimants, the maternal uncle and the father's sister's son's son, both belong to the class of atma bandhus. The maternal uncle was preferred on the grounds: (1) that he is undoubtedly nearer in degree to the deceased than the rival claimant; (2) that he effers oblations to his father and grandfather to whom the deceased was also bound to offer pinda, whereas the father's sister's son's son offers no pinda to the deceased ancestors. In the course of their judgment, their Lordships observe that it is not necessary to express any opinion, how far the proposition that preference should be given to cognates ex parte paterna over cognates ex parte materna, is in conformity with the express rule that in each class propinquity should be the governing factor, but it is noteworthy that the maternal uncle who was preferred by their Lordships is a cognate ex parte materna and that the sister's son who was rejected in favour of the maternal uncle, is a cognate ex parte paterna.

In Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1), the learned Judges, (White, C. J., and Krishnaswami Iyer, J.), expressed disapproval, as Mr. Justice Sadasiva Iyer did in the case that went up to the Privy Council of the fourth principle enuuciated by Sir T. Muthuswami Iyer, J., in Muttusami v. Muttukumarasami (13). It, therefore, follows that Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1) cannot now be regarded as an authority for the proposition that the maternal aunt's son is to be preferred to the maternal uncle's son.

I have so far examined the grounds of the decision in Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1) with a view to show that it cannot be followed. That is the only Madras case that deals with the question of preference between the maternal aunt's son and the maternal uncle's son. The same question arose in two other cases, one of the Allahabad High Court and the other of the Bombay High Court. In Ram Charan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (2), Banerji and Piggott, JJ., held, dissenting from the Madras view, that the maternal uncle's son was the preferential heir. The ground of decision was that precedence was to be determined by propinquity. They quote with approval the passage in Tirumalachariar v. Audal Ammal (16) which is to the effect that all other considerations being equal that claimant between whom and the stem there intervenes only one female link is to be preferred to the claimant who is separated from the stem by two such links. In Rajeppa Ranappa Kundagol v. Gangappa Jotappa Mandwe (14). Macleod, C. J., and Shah, J., held that the only test that ought to be applied is propinquity to the deceased, that the argument of relative religious efficacy was not well-founded and that the affinity of the maternal uncle's son and the maternal aunt's son is equal and that they being equally near to the propositus, they ought to take equally. The peculiar doctrine that prevails in Bombay enabled the learned Judges to treat a female's and a male's descendant as standing on a par and, therefore, being equally entitled.

We are bound by the decision of the Judicial Committee and giving effect to the view adopted in Vedachela Mudaliar v. Subramania Mudaliar, (3), we must hold that the maternal uncle's son is the preferential heir, on the ground of superior efficacy of oblations. The mother's sister's son as well as the mother's brother's son are both atma bandhus and are both expressly mentioned in the Mitakshara. They are both related on the mother's side and they are both equally removed from the propositus. The Allahabad High Court held that the maternal uncle's son is nearer to the deceased than the maternal aunt's son; but the Bombay High Court was of the opinion that both were equally near to the propositus. In my opinion, it is unnecessary to enquire whether the Allahabad view or the Bombay view is correct. I would prefer to base my judgment on the surer ground referred to by the Privy Council that of superior religious efficacy.

How then does the question of superior religious efficacy stand?

Sarvadhikari in classifying the heirs according to the Dayabhaga gives the thirty-fifth place to the maternal uncle's son and the thirty-seventh place to the maternal aunt's son. The doctrine of spiritual benefit, which is the foundation of the order given in the Dayabhaga, is discussed by Sarvadhikari at pages 700 to 710: (see Hindu Law of Inheritance by Sarvadhikari, 2nd Edition). Daya Krama Sangraha by Sri Krishna Tarkálankara similarly prefers maternal uncle's son to maternal aunt's son and superior spiritual efficacy is given as the ground: See Ch. I, s. 10, Pl. 14, 15 and 16. Ghose in his Hindu Law observes that in some copies of Sri Krishna's commentary on the Dayabhaga the maternal aunt's son is given a place higher than that accorded to the maternal uncle's son and the learned author points out that this order of succession is not only opposed to the authority of Daya Krama Sangraha, but on principle cannot be accepted.

I do not propose to discuss the theory of the relative superiority of the pindas. It is sufficient to say that Jurists of the Bengal School whose system of the Law of Inheritance is permeated by considerations of religious efficacy, recognise that the maternal uncle's son has precedence over the maternal aunt's son. It is also worthy of note that the learned Judges in Appandai Vathiyar v. Ragubali Mudaliar (1), as also in Ram Charan Lal v. Rahim Bakhsh (2), were disposed to take the view that if the question was to be decided with reference to the ground of superior spiritual efficacy, the maternal uncle's son would be the preferential heir.

I, therefore, agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 418 OF 1923.

February 4, 1925.

Present:—Justice Sir Theodore Caro Piggott, KT., and Mr. Justice Mukerji.

Sheikh MUHAMMAD HASHIM AND ANOTHER —DECREE-HOLDERS—APPELLANTS

versus

RADHA KRISHUN—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR —RESPONDENT.

Procedure—Decree conditional on payment of money within prescribed period—Court closed on last day for payment—Payment, whether can be made on re-opening.

Where a decree is passed conditional on the payment of money and a period is specified within which the payment must be made, it is open to the decree-holder, if the Court is closed on the last date on which the money could be deposited under the terms of the decree, to make the deposit on the day on which the Court re-opens.

Muhammad Jan v. Shiam Lal, 78 Ind. Cas. 1014; 22 A. L. J. 110; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 218; 46 A. 328; L. R. 5 A. 104 Civ., followed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 19th December 1922.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Appellants.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises under the following circumstances. A decree was passed by this Court in second appeal on the 4th of April 1922 in favour of the appellants Sheikh Muhammad Hashim and Baldeo Singh against the respondent Radha Kishan, conditional on payment of the sum of Rs. 1,940 within two months. The amount thus ordered to be paid was not paid into Court until the 21st of June 1922. The Courts below were closed for the vacation between the 20th of May 1922 and the 20th of June 1922. On the re-opening of the Court the deposit was made. The question between the parties arose whether in the circumstances the decree in favour of the appellants stood or vacated itself. The Courts below came to the conclusion, following two cases decided by this Court, that the appellants were bound to deposit the money in terms of the decree, and the fact that the Courts were closed was of no help to them.

It has since been held by a Full Bench of three learned Judges of this Court that where a conditional decree is passed on payment of money it is open to the decree-holder to deposit the money after the re-opening of the Court, if the Court was closed on the last date on which the money could be deposited: see Muhammad Jan v. Shiam Lal (1).

In view of the authoritative pronouncement the decision of the Court must be in favour of the appellants, and it must be held that the deposit was within time.

That being so, the present appeal is allowed with costs in all the three Courts including fees in this Court on the higher scale.

The result is that the application of the respondent to be restored into possession will stand dismissed. If under that application the respondent has been put into possession, the appellant will recover possession under the present order.

Will, construction of—Bequest to daughters followed by clause creating right of pre-emption—Estate taken—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 50, 187—Hindu Wills Act (XXI of 1870)—Attestation—Witnesses, whether must attest in each other's presence—Unprobated Will, whether can be set up in defence—Caste Disabilities Removal Act (XXI of 1850)—Hindu widow, conversion of, to Islam—Claim to succeed to property under Will, whether affected—Probate, application for—Dismissal for default, effect of—Subsequent application, whether maintainable—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11, O. IX, rr. 8, 9.

A testator directed his executors to alter a certain house belonging to him so as to convert it into four houses and to give one house to each of his four daughters after getting grants issued in their names. This was followed by a clause that in case any of the four daughters should be in need of money and should wish to sell her share, she should sell to the other daughters and not to strangers:

Held, that the Will conferred an absolute estate on the daughters and that the subsequent clause which only amounted to a direction in the nature of pre-emption did not operate to cut down the right of each of the daughters in the property given to her to a life-estate. [p. 625, col. 2; p. 626, col. 1.]

Where a person asks another to attest a document it may be legitimately inferred that he admits that the document has been executed by him and the person whom he wants to attest is required to attest the document in token of the executant's admission of execution. [p. 627, cols. 1 & 2.]

Section 50 of the Succession Act, which is made applicable to Hindu Wills by the Hindu Wills Act, does not require the witnesses to a Will to attest the Will in the presence of each other. [p. 627, col. 2.]

Where a Will is disputed several years after its alleged execution, one important test is to see what was the conduct of the parties; and where the conduct of the parties can only be rationally explained by the fact of the existence of a Will, it will have a considerable bearing in appreciating the evidence of the witnesses as to its genuineness. [ibid.]

Section 187 of the Succession Act does not say that an unprobated Will should not be looked into for any purpose whatever. It only says that title cannot be proved to establish a claim as a legatee without taking out Probate of the Will. Where a plaintiff comes into Court claiming as on an intestate succession, his claim can be displaced by proving that the deceased did not die intestate but left a Will. In such a case the plaintiff who claims adversely to the Will is out of Court irrespective of any proof of claim or title by the defendant. In cases where the plaintiff necessarily fails on the ground that there is a Will left by a deceased person and that by reason of the Will his claim to succeed to the estate of the deceased on the ground of intestacy under the ordinary law is not sustainable, there is nothing to prevent the defendant from pleading and proving the existence of the Will. It is unnecessary in such cases for the defendant to prove any independent title of his own. [p. 628, cols. 1 & 2.]

The dismissal for default of an application for Probate would not debar an application by another person claiming an interest under the Will or by the executor himself. An executor presenting an application for Probate of a Will cannot be regarded as a plaintiff who brings a suit in respect of a cause of action. [p. 629, col. 1.]

Where a suit is dismissed for default it does not extinguish the right of the party whose suit is dismissed. All it involves at best is that he cannot file fresh suit in respect of the same cause of action. Where he is in the position of a defendant in another action it is open to him as defendant to set up his title as a bar to the plaintiff's suit. [p. 629, col. 2.]

A dismissal for non-prosecution or for the absence of the plaintiff does not operate as res judicata. [ibid.]

Where a Hindu widow becomes a convert to Islam her conversion does not affect her right to property to which she is entitled under the Will of her father. [p. 630, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—These suits relate to house and ground No. 2/100 Perumal Mudali Street, Madras, described in the schedules to the plaint.

The following facts are not in dispute. One Govindoss Ghanshamdoss had two wives. The first wife was Krishna Bai, and the second wife was Ganga Bai. By Krishna Bai, he had a son Narayandoss and a daughter Kaveri Bai. Narayanadoss had a son Ghanshamdoss, who is the plaintiff in C. S. No. 755 of 1920, Kaveri Bai died issueless, in October, 1908, and it is alleged that she left a Will, dated 5th of April 1908. By the socond wife, Ganga Bai, Govindoss Ghanshamdoss had three daughters, Saraswathi Bai, who died in 1923, Bhagirathi Bai who died in October 1909, leaving a son Jamnadoss who is the plaintiff, in C. S. Nos. 557 of 1921 and 290 of 1923 and Gula Bai who is a defendant in C. S. Nos. 755 of 1920 and 557 of 1921. Saraswathi Bai, who was left a widow, when she was quite young, subsequently became a convert to Muhammadanism and married a Muhammadan and died professing the Muhammadan religion in 1923. Gula Bai who also became a widow when she was young married a Muhammadan and is now professing the Muhammadan faith. Govindoss Ghanshamdoss died on the 18th December 1891, having left a Will, of which Probate was granted by the High Court. The Will is filed as Ex. A. He appoints as executors his son Narayandoss and one Goverdhandoss. The material portions of the Will run as follows:—

"3. My second wife Ganga Boyee's pulla (or dowry) jewels worth about six thousand rupees are with me. The documents of the house door No. 3 in Narayana Mudaly Street, which my wife purchased from Mundapathi Ramakrishniah are with Goverdhan Doss Jumna Doss. Krishna Doss Vittal Doss shall take those documents from Ghoverdhan Doss Jumna Doss. I delivered the above mentioned jewels to the aforesaid Krishna Doss Vittal Doss. My son Narayana Doss and Goverdhan Doss Jumna Doss together shall within six months get proper prices for and sell the aforesaid jewels. Should these two persons fail to sell the same within the aforesaid six months, the aforasaid Krishna Doss Vittal Doss shall get good prices, according to the market rates and sell the same and shall with that money itself construct four separate houses, out of the house door No. 3 in Narayana Mudali Street and give them to my four daughters, after getting grants issued in their names. In case any of these four persons may, through want of money, wish to sell her share, any of the remaining daughters may then purchase the same. In case they may not consent to do so, she herself shall enjoy the same and shall not in the least sell it to others.

4. My deceased second wife Ganga Boyee has left four per cent, interest bonds for Rs. 8,500, with Goverdhan Doss Jamnadoss. Out of this, my son Narayana Doss shall receive Rs. 1,750 for expenses at the time of the marriage of my second wife's daughter Bhagirathi Bai. My son Narayana Doss shall receive Rs. 1,750 for expenses at the time of the marriage of my third daughter Goolab Bai. Out of the balance of Rs. 5,000 one share shall be given to Sow. Saraswathi Boyee, out of the three daughters of my second wife, as soon as the 20th year of her age begins. The two other shares shall be given to the others, when the 20th year of their age begins, respectively by Goverdhan Doss Jumnadoss or his heirs; in case any of these may die by act of King or by act of God, a division shall be made between the survivors; out of the three girls, when occasions may arise for expenses for the aforesaid children, money shall be drawn for proper expenses from the interest on the bonds."

It is not disputed that according to the terms of this Will, houses were built and given to each of the daughters Kaveri Bai, Saraswathi Bai, Bhagirthi Bai and Gula Bai,; Kaveri Bai with whom we are concerned, got the house in 1893, and she was in possession and enjoyment of the same, till her death in 1908. It is alleged that she left a Will dated the 5th of April 1908; which is marked as Ex. II in this case. I shall refer to the terms of this Will and the evidence about it later on; but it is sufficient at this stage for me to state that I am of opinion that it has been proved that she executed the Will Ex. II and that it is valid.

C. S. No. 755 of 1920 is filed by Gansham Doss Narayana Doss, who is the son of Narayana Doss and nephew of Kaveri Bai, for a declaration that house No. 2,100 Perumal Mudali Street, belongs to him and, for possession from Sarasvathi Bai, who it is alleged, got into possession of the property without any title and has no right to the property. His case is that the property belonged absolutely to Kaveri Bai, that Kaveri Bai died intestate in 1908, that he was a minor at the date of her death, that his father also died in 1912, that on the death of Kaveri Bai, Saraswathi Bai took unlawful possession of the property and that he is entitled to the relief claimed. He says that he was born in October 1896, and that as Kaveri Bai died in October 1908 and as the suit was filed, within 12 years of her death, the suit is not barred by limitation.

As I said before, the suit was against Saraswathi Bai, who was then alive and she filed a written statement, putting the plaintiff to the proof of the various allegations in the plaint, denying his title and pleading that Kaveri Bai died leaving a Will, by which she bequeathed the property to her (Saraswathi Bai) and her two sisters, and that under the Will the house belongs to her. She says that the plaintiff is not entitled to any mesne profits and that the mesne profits claimed are excessive. She also says that the suit is barred by limitation, as she has been in adverse possession for over 12 years. She further states that under the terms of Gansham Doss's Will, the properties which were given were properties, which belonged to her mother and that the plaintiff has no right to the property.

The following issues were settled:—

(1) Did Kaveri Bai die intestate, as alleged in para. 5 of the plaint, or after making a last Will and testament, as alleged in para. 3 of the written statement?

(2) If there was such a Will, can the defendant set up a right, as legatee thereunder, without producing Probate of the said Will?

(3) What was the date of the death of Kaveri Bai?

(4) Has the defendant acquired an absolute right to the suit property by adverse possession, for over 12 years, after the death of Kaveri Bai and previous to the institution of the suit, as alleged in para. 7 of the written statement?

(5) Was the plaintiff's father the heir to Keveri Bai, as alleged in para. 6 of the plaint?

(5) (a) When did plaintiff attain majority?

(6) Is the plaintiff's claim barred by the Law of Limitation?

(7) To what mesne profits, if any, is the plaintiff entitled? and

(8) To what relief isthe plaintiff entitled?

C. S. No. 557 of 1921 is filed by Jamnadoss, who is the son of Bhagirathi Bai against Saraswathi Bai and Gansham Doss Narayan Doss, plaintiff in C. S. No. 755 of 1920 to recover possession of house No 2,100 Perumal Mudali Street; Saraswathi Bai died pending suit and her sister Gula Bai was brought on record and she is described in the plaint as legal representative of Saraswathi Bai. After setting out the relationship between the parties and the Will of Goverdhan Doss Ghansham Doss and after stating that Kaveri Bai obtained possession of the property described in the schedule to the plaint and was in possession and enjoyment of the same, till her death in 1908, when she died issueless and intestate, the plaintiff states that Govindoss Ghansham Doss had no power to dispose of any of his wife's properties, including the suit property, that he had no power to give to Kaveri Bai any property built out of the monies belonging to Ganga Bai, her step-mother, that Kaveri Bai could not acquire any title to the suit house as the legatee under the Will, that even if she purported to claim any title thereunder, it could not prevail against the title of Saraswathi Bai, Bagirathi Bai and Gula Bai, that Kaveri Bai died intestate and issuless in October 1908, and on her death, Saraswathi

Bai took possession of the property claiming that she obtained the same under a Will, alleged to have been left by Kaveri Bai, that the plaintiff's mother Bagirathi Bai died at Madras, on or about the 24th October, 1909, leaving the plaintiff her only son, a minor, as her heir and legal representative that as the three daughters of Ganga Bai were minors, at the time of the death of their father and mother, Kaveri Bai could not claim any title to the suit property, even as a trespasser as against them that even if Kaveri Bai could claim any title to the property under the Will of her father, she could claim no more than the life-estate of a daughter under her father's Will and that she having died before she acquired any title to a daughter's estate by prescription, she could not transmit any property to her heirs. The plaintiff also says that Kaveri Bai had no power to dispose of the property by Will and that he became entitled to the share of his mother on her death. He stated that the 2nd defendant, who is the plaintiff in C. S. No. 755 of 1920, has no right to the property, as he could not under any circumstances succeed to the property, belonging to Ganga Bai. He says that Saraswathi Bai and Gula Bai, the 1st and 3rd defendants, became out castes, having married Muhammadans and that they could acquire no title to the properties of their mother. In the alternative, he states that in any event, he is entitled to one-third of the property and mesne profits.

The 1st defendant Saraswathi Bai filed a written statement in the same terms as the written statement in Civil Suit No. 755 of 1920. She states that Kaveri Bai acquired full and absolute title to the suit property that she left a Will of which she (the 1st defendant) is going to obtain Probate. She denies that she is an outcaste, or that she is not entitled to the property and states that in any event, Kaveri Bai acquired complete title by adverse possession.

The 2nd defendant, Ghansham Doss Narayan Doss, filed a written statement, which sets out the contentions contained in his plaint in C. S. No. 755 of 1920. He says that even if Govindoss Ghansham Doss has no power to dispose of the property by Will, Kaveri Bai acquired an absolute title to the property.

The following issues were settled:—

(1) Was the suit house the property of Ganga Bai, as alleged in the plaint, or had it been purchased in her name only benami by Govindoss Gansham Doss?

(2) If it was the absolute property of Ganga Bai, is the plaintiff estopped from setting up the same by reason of Kaveri Bai and the plaintiff's mother, or either of them having taken under the Will of Govindoss Gansham Doss?

(4) If it be found that Kaveri Bai took under the Will, what, on the true construction of the Will, was the estate given to her? Whether it was an absolute estate or only a life-estate and if the latter, in whom did the remainder become vested?

(5) Did Kaveri Bai leave a Will, as alleged by the 1st defendant and can the 1st defendant set up any right thereunder, until and unless she obtains Probate of the same?

(3) If issues Nos. 1 and 2 should be found for the plaintiff, had Kaveri Bai acquired a right to the suit property by adverse possession, as alleged in paras. 5 and 6 of the 2nd defendant's written statement?

(6) Have the 1st and 3rd defendants lost their rights, if any, to the suit property, by reason of their conversion to Muhammadanism and marriage?

(7) What are the rights, if any, in the suit property, of any of the parties to the suit?

(8) To what mesne profits, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

(9) Is the suit barred by limitation? and

(10) To what relief is the plaintiff entitled?

Civil Suit No. 290 of 1923 was filed by Jamnadoss, who is the plaintiff in C. S. No. 557 of 1921, after the death of Saraswathi Bai against her husband Syed Imam Sahib and Ghansham Doss Narayan Doss the plaintiff in C. S. No. 755 of 1920. The plaint contains the same allegations, as the plaint in C. S. No. 557 of 1921, the parties only being different and his case is that Saraswathi Bai is only entitled to a qualified estate, inherited from her mother Ganga Bai, that on her death the heirs of Ganga Bai are entitled to succeed and that the plaintiff is the nearest reversioner of Ganga Bai.

The 1st defendant is ex parte.

The 2nd defendant filed a written statement, in which he sets up the same title, as he sets up in his plaint in C. S. No. 755 of 1920.

No issues were settled separately in this suit; but the issues in the other two suits will cover all the contentions raised in this suit.

These three suits were tried together, by consent of parties and the evidence in one was treated as evidence in the other suits.

Before dealing with the material issues I may dispose of certain issues, which raise no difficulty.

The first point is as regards the date of the death of Kaveri Bai. It is proved by the death certificate Ex. B that Kaveri Bai died on the 16th of October 1908. This date is not disputed by any of the parties. It is also proved that Ghansham Doss Narayan Doss, the plaintiff in C. S. No. 755 of 1920, was born on the 19th of October 1896. As C. S. No. 755 of 1920 was filed on the 14th of October 1920, that is, within 12 years after the death of Kaveri Bai, the suit cannot be barred by limitation.

As regards the property in dispute, in these suits, it is not disputed that houses were built, in accordance with the directions contained in the Will, Ex. A, and Kaveri Bai was put in possession of one of the houses, which is the house now in dispute. Paragraph 5 of the plaint, in C. S. No. 755 of 1920, distinctly alleges that from 1892, Kaveri Bai was in possession and enjoyment of the suit property, as her absolute property till her death which took place in 1908. It is clear from the plaint and it is the case of all the other parties, that Kaveri Bai was in possession of the house from 1892 or 1893, she having been put in possession of the property by the executors under the Will of her father. As Kaveri Bai died only in 1908, it is clear that she was in possession of the property for over 12 years and unless there is anything shown to the contrary, she would have acquired a right to the property by adverse possession. As regards the possession of Saraswathi Bai, though the plaintiff in C. S. No. 755 of 1920, wanted to throw some doubt as to when she got possession, the plaintiff in para. 8 of his plaint admits that on the death of Kaveri Bai, the defendant Saraswathi Bai, taking advantage of her having been with Kaveri Bai till her death, took possession of the house and has continued to be in possession and management of the same. This is also the case of the other defendants that Saraswathi Bai took possession of the property on the death of Kaveri Bai. It is, therefore, clear that Saraswathi Bai was in possession of the property from the year 1908, up to her death in 1923.

The next question for determination is as to the interest that Kaveri Bai took under the Will of her father Govindoss, Ghansham Doss. I already referred to para. 3 of Will, Ex. A, which deals with this house. The contention of the plaintiff in C. S. No. 755 of 1920, is that under the term of this Will Kaveri Bai acquired an absolute estate, whereas the contention of Jamna Doss, the plaintiff in the other two suits, is that Kaveri Bai acquired only a life-estate. I do not think, on a proper construction of this Will, Kaveri Bai can be said to have acquired only a life-estate. The Will says that, house No. 3 Narayana Mudali Street will be altered in such a way that four houses ought to be built and that the executors should give them to his four daughters, after getting grants issued in their names. So far, there is nothing to qualify the gift. It is a gift without any reservation. I do not think, that the next sentence, which, in my opinion only amounts to a direction for pre-emption would cut down the absolute nature of the gift. What the testator says is that in case any of the four daughters should be in need of money and wish to sell her share, she should sell to the other daughters and not to strangers. The evident intention of the testator was that the houses should not pass out of the hands of the members of the family; but that would not cut down the right of each of the donees to a life-estate. One test would be to see whether, if one daughter was willing to buy her sister's house the money would not be money which the sister would take absolutely and do what she pleased with. The mere contingency of sale, which under the Will would only arise, in case any of the daughters wanted money, shows that the testator did not want to give them only a life-estate in the money. Reference has been made to a recent decision of the Privy Council in Ashrafi Singh v. Bidya Prasad Narayan Singh (1), but I do not think it was intended that all the previous decisions of their Lordships, where the word "malik" was treated as absolute owner, were overruled. There is this additional fact, in the present case, that the testator does not anywhere indicate an intention that his daughters should have only a woman's estate. I am not prepared to hold that the clause, as to pre-emption, coupled with the direction that they should not sell the houses to strangers cut down the estate to a mere life-estate. I am of opinion that Kaveri Bai took an absolute estate in the suit property. In the view I take of the case, the fact that the property bequeathed by the testator in paras. 3 and 4 of the Will, Ex. A, was the property of his wife Ganga Bai to which Kaveri Bai would not, in the ordinary course, under Hindu Law get any right and the fact that Govindoss Ghansham Doss had no power to dispose of the stridhanam property of his wife Ganga Bai, do not assume much importance. There can be little doubt that Govindoss Ghansham Doss had no power to dispose of his wife's dowry properties which are her stridhanam and which would, in the ordinary course, under Hindu Law have descended to her three daughters, but it is clear from the facts, which I have referred to above, that Kaveri Bai was in possession of the property as legatee with an absolute estate, without any objection, by Saraswathi Bai, Bhagirathi Bai, or Gula Bai, for over 12 years; and it seems to me to be clear that Kaveri Bai, at the date of her death, acquired an absolute title, to the property, whatever may have been the infirmity of her claim, under the Will of Govindoss Ghansham Doss, owing to his want of disposing power over the properties.

The next question to be decided is as to who in law would be the heirs of Kaveri Bai. There can be little doubt that, in the absence of any testamentary disposition by Kaveri Bai, the plaintiff Ghansham Doss Narayan Doss would be entitled to succeed to her absolute properties, in preference to Saraswathi Bai, Bhagirathi Bai, Gula Bai and Jamna Doss. I need only refer to Kanakammal v. Ananthamathi Ammal (2) and Ganpat Rama Joshi v. Secretary of State for India (3). This would be equally so, whether the parties are governed by Mayukha or Mitakshara. But the question is whether the plaintiff could have any right, in view of the fact that Kaveri Bai left a Will, and this takes me to the two chief questions, raised in these suits; first, as to whether Kaveri Bai left a Will, and secondly, whether in the absence of Probate, the Will can be pleaded as a bar to the plaintiff's claim.

The evidence as to the Will, left by Kaveri Bai, consists of the evidence of two of the attesting witnesses Rangal Doss and Poolji Vyas. One of the attesting witnesses Mr. Seshacharlu a Vakil of this Court, who evidently was the legal professional gentleman consulted in the matter, died in 1909 or 1910 and the evidence of Sripati Rao, who was his gumastah proves that the Will, Ex. II, bears the attestation of Mr. Seshacharlu. The witness also says that he used to accompany Mr. Seshacharlu, when he went to prepare Wills to the houses of his clients; but he is not sure, as to what was done in this particular case. He is, however, perfectly sure that the attestation in the Will, Ex. II, is that of Mr. Seshacharlu's.

Before dealing with the evidence, I may remark that there is considerable force in the argument of Mr. Venkatasubbaramayya that the conversion of his client, Gula Bai, to Muhammadanism and her living with a Muhammadan husband, has estranged the members of the community from her, that although he took out subpœnas to the available attesting witnesses, there was considerable difficulty in getting them to state what actually happened and that the sympathies of the attesting witnesses are naturally against his client. This I found, in the way in which both Rangal Doss, and Poolji Vyas gave their evidence.

Rangal Doss, who was examined as defendant's first witness, says that he saw Kaveri Bai put her mark to the Will Ex. II, that he attested the Will and that there are three other attestations, before his attestation in the Will. He had to admit this because he had committed himself in the testamentary proceedings, to the statement that Kaveri Bai made her mark in the Will. In cross-examination, he states that the executor under the Will Ranchordoss took him to Kaveri Bai's house, that she was then ill and that the Will was not read over to her, in his presence. He, however, had to admit that he saw her put her mark to the Will, Ranchordoss having given her the pen to do so. He wants to make out that when she put her mark, nobody but Ranchordoss, Kaveri Bai and himself were present and that the other attesting witnesses were not present when he attested the Will. He wants to get over the fact, that his attestation comes last, by saying that Ranchordoss asked him to sign his name below, so as to leave space for the other attesting witnesses. Why it is not explained. He says that Kaveri Bai was very ill, and that she died; soon after the execution of the Will, that he does not know whether she was in such a condition, as to execute a Will or not, and that although Ranchordoss told her that the witness had come to attest the Will, she did not give any answer, by word or sign. It appears, however, from the evidence that Kaveri Bai died on the 16th of October 1908, while the Will was executed on the 5th of April 1908, so that she lived about six months, after the execution of the Will. Poolji Vyas, who was examined as defendants' second witness, is also an attesting witness. He denies some more facts, as he has not committed himself till now to any statement as to the Will. He admits that he attested the Will but says that he did not see her put her mark to the Will. He says that he was called by Ranchordoss, that the lady was sitting there, that Ranchordoss told him that it was the Will of Kaveri Bai and wanted him to attest it, that she was lying on the bed and that she told the witness that he should attest the Will. The words which he says she used, were "put your signature in this." He says that he does not remember whether her mark was there, when he attested the Will. When asked, whether he thought she was in a condition to execute the Will, he says that he does not think she was in a condition to understand the Will. I have little doubt from the way in which this witness gave his evidence, that he is evidently trying to help the other side, as much as possible. His evidence, however, is clear on one point, that Kaveri Bai asked him to attest the Will and that he did so, at her request. Although he wants to make out that does not remember, whether she had put her mark on the Will or not, when he attested it, it seems to be fairly clear, that where a person asks another to attest a document it can be quite legitimately inferred that she admitted that the document was executed by her and that the person whom she wanted to attest, had to attest the document, in token of her admission of execution.

So far as Vakil Seshacharlu is concerned, he died several years ago. Nobody suggests that this signature in the Will is not his signature; and one thing is quite clear that the Will could not have been brought into existence, after 1909 or 1910, when he died and long before there were any disputes between the parties.

Section 50 of the Succession Act, which is made applicable to Hindu Wills by the Hindu Wills Act, does not require the witnesses to attest, in the presence of each other. Clause (3) is clear and I think the Will has been validly executed and attested.

There is one circumstance, which, in my view, strongly corroborates the case for the defendants, that Kaveri Bai left a Will and which probablises the genuineness of the Will. It is admitted that Saraswathi Bai, who was under the Will, Ex. II, the legatee of this house, continued to be in possession of the same, ever since the death of Kaveri Bai even though she had no legal title and even though Narayana Doss, the plaintiff's father, would have been the next heir and he lived for about four years, after the death of Kaveri Bai. It is also significant that the plaintiff who was born in 1896, and who attained majority in 1914, took no steps to recover the property, till he filed the suit in 1920, even though Saraswathi Bai had no title to the property and was in possession and enjoyment of the same, till her death in 1923. No explanation has been offered, why if Kaveri Bai left no Will bequeathing the property to Saraswathi Bai and Saraswathi Bai had no title to the property, except under the Will, both the plaintiff's father and the plaintiff allowed Saraswathi Bai to be in possession of the property, till her death in 1923. It is hardly likely that they would have done so, unless they were aware that Kaveri Bai had left a Will, disposing of the property and that the legatee Saraswathi Bai was in the rightful possession of the same. One important test, in cases where Wills are disputed and disputes arise several years later, is to see what was the conduct of the parties; and where the conduct of the parties can only be rationally explained, by the fact of the existence of a Will, I think this fact will have considerable bearing, in appreciating the evidence of the witnesses as to its genuineness.

It was argued by the plaintiff's Vakil, on the strength of the power-of-attorney, Ex. C, dated the 14th of February, 1885, executed by Kaveri Bai, in favour of the plaintiff's father, that Kaveri Bai put her mark in that document, differently from the mark in Ex. II, executed by her in 1908. The mark in Ex. C is like a Swasthika mark: whereas the mark in Ex. II is a cross-mark. There is nothing to show that Kaveri Bai's usual way of marking was the Swasthika mark. Exhibit C is the only document put in which contains such a mark. I do not think it can be said that because an illiterate woman put a particular kind of mark in 1885, the mark put in 1908, i. e. 23 years afterwards, which differs slightly from the mark of 1885, could not be genuine.

Giving the oral evidence on this point, my best consideration, I have little hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the Will, Ex. II is genuine.

The next question is as to whether the Will not having been probated, it can be used to defeat the plaintiff's claim. On this part of the case, there is some conflict of authority. Janki v. Dhanu Lall (4) Carlapatti Chinna Cunniah v. Cota Wammalivariah (5), Parthasrathy Aiyar v. Subbaroya Gramony (6) and Shadagopa Naidu v. Thirumalaswami Naidu (7) are authorities for the view that a defendant can rely upon a unprobated Will, as defence to an action. The contrary view is suggested in Lakshammma v. Ratnamma (8) and C. S. No. 521 1919. I have in Shadagopa Naidu v. Thirumalaswami Naidu (7) considered the authorities and I see no reason to change my view, as there is no clear authority against the view I have taken and which is supported by the cases I have already referred to. Section 187 of the Succession Act does not say that an unprobated Will should not be looked into, for any purpose whatever. It only says that title cannot be proved to establish a claim as legatee. In the present case, the plaintiff comes to Court, saying that Kaveri Bai died intestate and that he is the heir under the Hindu Law, claiming by intestate succession. There is no authority which says that where a plaintiff comes to Court, claiming as on intestate succession, his claim can only be displaced, by one who has obtained Probate of the Will. Where it is, shown that the person did not die intestate, but left a Will, the plaintiff, who claims adversely to the Will, is out of Court, irrespective of any proof of claim or title, by the defendant. In cases where the plaintiff necessarily fails, merely on the ground that there is a Will left by a person and that by reason of the Will, his claim to succeed to the estate of the deceased, on the ground of intestacy, under the ordinary law, is not sustainable, there is nothing to prevent the defendant from pleading and proving the existence of the Will. It is unnecessary, in such cases, for the defendant to prove any independent title of his own. Just as he could plead jus tertii, he could also plead facts, that would bar the plaintiff's title. Even assuming, therefore, that the authority in Lakshmamma v. Ratnamma (8) and C. S. No. 521 of 1919 correctly, state the law, which I doubt very much, it seems to me that the plaintiff would still be out of Court, if the defendant proves that there can be no question of heirship or intestate succession, because of the existence of the Will. I may refer to the observations of the learned Chief Justice, in Parthasarathy Aiyar v. Subbaroya Gramony (6).

"Now the law as stated in s. 187, in my judgment, is the same, as the Law of England on the subject. And I think that it is that a person who in Court has to prove title and has to deduce that title from a Will, whether that person is plaintiff or defendant, cannot do so without producing Probate, and I do not agree with the cases which have suggested to the contrary, such as Carlapatti Chinna Cunniah v. Cota Wammalivariah (5) which seems to have decided that a defendant can claim, as a legatee under an unproved Will. This would not prevent a defendant resisting a claim, by an heir-at-law, by producing and proving a Will, of which Probate had not been granted."

It is not necessary in this case, for the defendant to prove his title, claiming as legatee under the Will of Kaveri Bai. It is sufficient for him to show that the plaintiff could not succeed, by reason of the existence of the Will. Even assuming, therefore, that the defendant cannot seek to prove his title, on an unprobated Will, he could use it for a collateral purpose, namely, to defeat the plaintiff's title to succeed on the basis of intestacy.

I am, therefore, of opinion that it is open to the defendant to prove the Will of Kaveri Bai, although it has not been probated, for the purpose of showing, that the plaintiff would not be entitled to succeed as heir.

The next question raised is as to the effect of T. O. S. Nos. 6 of 1921 and 8 of 1921. Saraswathi Bai applied for Probate of the Will of Kaveri Bai. A caveat was entered by the present plaintiff. The application was numbered as T. O. S. No. 6 of 1921 and it was dismissed for default. When the case was taken up it was alleged that the plaintiff was ill and he could not attend; but it was dismissed for non-prosecution. Saraswathi Bai applied again for Probate. It was also contested and it was numbered as T. O. S. No. 8 of 1921; but Saraswathi Bai died and matters dropped.

The contention of the plaintiff is that these proceedings are a bar to setting up a title under the Will, by the defendant, who claims under Saraswathi Bai. It is urged that the provisions of the C. P. C. apply, that, therefore, the second application by Saraswathi Bai would have been a bar and that consequently, it must be taken that the Will could not be proved for any purpose. Reference has been made to ss. 55 and 83 of the Probate and Administration Act; but these sections do not say that all the provisions of the Code apply. Section 55 says that the provisions of the Code will apply, as far as the circumstances of the case will admit, and s. 83 states that the provisions of the Code will apply, as nearly as may be. It has been held in Ramani Debi v. Kumud Bandhu Mukherjee (9) by Mookerjee and Carnduff, JJ., in an elaborate judgment reviewing the authorities, that the dismissal, for default of an application for Probate, would not debar an application by another person, claiming an interest under the Will and, therefore, necessarily also by the executor himself, and that an executor, presenting an application for Probate of a Will, cannot be regarded as a plaintiff who brings a suit, in respect of a cause of action. With this judgment I respectfully agree. It would lead to many anomalies if the dismissal of an application for Probate of a Will for default would preclude legatees or persons claiming under them, from filing a fresh application for Probate. In this case, there is the further fact that under Kaveri Bai's Will, legacies have been given to Gula Bai a defendant, in two of those suits; and it is open to Gula Bai to apply for Probate, as legatee, in her own right, and Probate once granted would cover all the properties and it cannot be said that because Saraswathi Bai applied for Probate and the application was dismissed for default, Letters of Administration cannot be issued to Gula Bai, who is also a legatee under the Will. I am also of opinion that where a suit is dismissed for default, it does not extinguish the right of the party, whose suit is dismissed. All it means at best is that he connot file a fresh suit, in respect of the same cause of action. Where, therefore, he is in the position of a defendant in another action, and his title is not extinguished, it is open to him, as defendant, to set up his title as a bar to the plaintiff's suit. That a dismissal for non-prosecution, or for the absence of the plaintiff, would not be res judicata, is clear from the decision of the Privy Council in Chand Kour v. Partab Singh (10), where it was held that s. 102 of the old C. P. C., which corresponds to O. IX, r. 8 of the present Code cannot operate as res judicata between the parties. Even assuming that Saraswathi Bai could not have filed a fresh application, the title acquired under the Will not being extinguished, Saraswathi Bai's heirs can always plead, as defendants, the existence of the Will, as to which there has been no adjudication, that it is not genuine.

A question has been raised as to estoppel; but it was not pressed or argued. It is difficult to see how there can be an estoppel in this case.

As to the law, governing the parties, there is no evidence that the parties, who migrated from Bombay, gave up Mayukha and adopted Mitakshara. But in any view of the case, it seems to me that Jamna Doss, the plaintiff in C S. No. 557 of 1921, and C. S. No. 290 of 1923, would not be entitled to the possession of the suit property, till Gula Bai's death. It is unnecessary to determine in this suit, what his rights would be, on the happening of that contingency; and I make no declaration as to his rights, as the daughter's son of Ganga Bai, the original owner of the property and wife of the testator, Govindoss Ghansham Doss.

The conversion of Saraswathi Bai and Gula Bai to Muhammadanism, after they became widows, will not affect their rights to the property. No right they got from their deceased Hindu husbands is in question. Section 2 of the Hindu Widows Re-marriage Act will not apply and the Castes Disabilities Removal Act of 1850, prevents any forfeiture, by reason of conversion.

It follows from my findings that the three suits must be dismissed. As regards costs in C. S. Nos. 755 of 1920, and 557 of 1921, the plaintiff will pay the costs of Gula Bai and in C. S. No. 290 of 1923 the plaintiff will pay the costs of Ghansham Doss Narayan Doss, the 2nd defendant.

The Receiver will hand over possession of the property to Gula Bai.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff against a number of defendsnts for possession of 90 plots of land on the allegation that they appertain to his towji of which he is an ijaradar under the patnidar of Towji No. 203. The defendants are numerous. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are said to be the legal representatives of one Sarola Sundari who held a tenancy under the owners of the plaintiff's towji at a jama of Rs. 50 which was subsequently reduced to Rs. 30. Defendant No. 4 is said to be a patnidar of a neighbouring Towji No. 2498. Defendant No. 5 is alleged to be one of the co-patnidars with defendant No. 4 who, we are told, has disclaimed his right as a patnidar. Defendants Nos. 6 to 9 are zamindars of Towji No. 2498. I should have stated that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 also claim to be tenants under the proprietors of Towji No. 2498. The other defendants are either tenants of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 defendant No. 4 or defendants Nos. 6 to 9. It is not necessary for the purpose of this appeal to go into details of the cases of the various defendants. It appears that the main defence in the case was that the lands in suit did not appertain to the tenancy of Sarola Sundari the predecessor of defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The plaintiff's case further was that Towji No. 203 was let out in a patni so far back as 1891, that the patni was purchased by the plaintiff in 1902 and that the patni having been transferred to the Jessore Loan Company, the plaintiff took an ijara for 99 years from the said Company. The plaintiff further alleged that the tenancy which I have mentioned before held by Sarola fell into arrears of rent and a decree was obtained by the plaintiff and the tenancy was sold on the 15th of July 1907. The plaintiff took symbolical possession on the basis of his purchase and he was dispossessed from the land by the defendants in February 1908. The present suit was brought in 1919 well within 12 years of the date on which the plaintiff took symbolical possession as against defendants Nos. 1 to 3. As I have already stated, the main defence was whether the land appertained to Towji No. 203 or to the neighbouring towji of defendants and also whether the lands were covered by the lease of Sarola. It appears that the Munsif directed a local investigation for the purpose of ascertaining whether the lands did appertain to the plaintiff's towji or outside it, and also for the purpose of ascertaining the boundaries of the jote held by Sarola. The Commissioner reported that in the absence of a correct thak map and in the absence of field books of the thak, it was not possible to ascertain definitely whether the lands appertained to Towji No. 203 or not. It seems to have been admitted in the Court of first instance that three plots of land really appertained to the tenancy of Sarola. Numerous plots were given up by the plaintiff in the course of the trial and so far as I can gether, the number of the plots was ultimately reduced to about 55. The decree of the First Court was confined to the three plots in favour of the plaintiff and the rest of his claim was dismissed. On appeal to the District Judge by the plaintiff, the learned Judge agrees with the Munsif as regards the plots which had been decreed in favour of the plaintiff. As regards the other plots the learned Judge says that it was argued before him on behalf of the plaintiff that the plaintiff's claim really was based upon his claim to Towji No. 203. So far as the tenancy of Sarola was concerned that having been sold was wiped out and, therefore, whether the lands appertained to the jote of Sarola or not, so far as they appertained to Towji No. 203, they could be her property as owner of Towji No. 203. The learned District Judge in discussing that view of the case says that the plaintiff claimed all lands which appertained to Towji No. 203 beyond those which were covered by the lands of Sarola on the ground that defendants Nos. 1 to 3 must have been in possession of those of Towji No. 203 by their encroachment as tenants under the plaintiff of the waste lands or unoccupied lands of the plaintiff within Towji No. 203; and, therefore, if the plaintiff could establish that the lands did apperation to Towji No 203 the defendants were bound to give the lands back which they held by encroachment after the determination of the tenancy held by their predecessor. The learned District Judge after discussing the authorities came to the conclusion that if the plaintiff had established that those lands were held by defendants Nos. 1 to 3 and those who claimed under them on the ground that they had encroached upon those lands, then all that the plaintiff would be entitled to would be merely a decree for rent for the encroached lands because the tenants when the tenancy continued had acquired a title by adverse possession of a limited interest as tenants. In that view the learned District Judge refused to direct a local investigation which, it appears, he was inclined to grant, if any useful purpose would have been served by a further investigation, because in one part of his judgment the learned District Judge thought that the report of the Commissioner would be no safe guide for the determination of the question as to whether the lands were within the Towji No. 203 or Towji No. 2498, because the thak map was not supported by field books; but it appears that at the trial before the District Judge the field books were produced by the defendants themselves and partly by the plaintiff and, therefore, there were materials upon which a proper investigation was possible. But as we have already stated the learned District Judge appears to have refused to direct a further investigation because he thought that the plaintiff would not be entitled to a decree for khas possession. In that view the learned District Judge dismissed the plaintiff's appeal who has now preferred this second appeal to this Court.

In support of this appeal it was contended by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the view taken by the learned District Judge as to the rights of the plaintiff as regards the encroachment made by the tenant upon the waste land of the landlord the tenants' rights to resist khas possession on the determination of the tenancy was wrong and for the ends of justice the case should be sent back for investigation by a Commissioner as to whether the lands did appertain to one towji or the other. Dr. Mitter, who appeared for the defendants, pointed out to us that there was difference as to the defence raised by the various defendants; but we cannot at this stage go into that question. The learned District Judge disposed of the case on the view that the case related so far as the lands of Towji No. 203 were concerned only between the plaintiff and the defendants who claimed through Sarola. We think that the view expressed by the learned District Judge as to the right of the plaintiff as to the encroached lands after the determination of the tenancy is not correct. In fact Dr. Mitter frankly admitted that the general law is that after the determination of a tenancy if a tenant had encroached upon any land and made it a part of his tenancy he is bound to give up those lands to his landlord at the determination of his tenancy. We think upon this ground that the decision of the learned District Judge should be set aside and that he should be directed to order a local investigation by a competent Commissioner to determine the question upon the materials on the record or upon fresh materials to be supplied, to determine how far the lands in suit appertained to Towji No. 203. So far as the lands which fell within Towji No. 203 and are in the possession of defendants Nos. 1 to 3 or in the possession of anyone claiming through defendants Nos. 1 to 3, the plaintiff would be entitled to a decree for possession of those lands. We do not here discuss or determine any question or issue which any of the defendants might raise in the Court below on a title apart from the title of a tenancy held by Sarola. After the local investigation and after the determination of what lands fell within Towji No. 203, the learned District Judge will dispose of all the issues which may be raised before him in view of the observations which I have made above.

I need hardly add that this remand only affects the plots which the plaintiff did not abandon.

Costs will abide the result.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

The appeal has abated against defendants Nos. 10, 20, 40, 44, 48, 55 and 58 named in the affidavit filed in Court on 26th November 1924 and stands dismissed as against their heirs. Appeal allowed. case remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, rr. 4, 9—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5, Sch. I, Arts. 171, 177—Appeal—Death of respondent—Application for substitution made after expiry of limitation—Order permitting substitution, effect of.

One of several respondents died during the pendency of a suit and an application was made after the expiry of the period of limitation for substitution of his legal representatives on the record. The application was allowed ex parte and the substitution was made. On the day fixed for the hearing of the appeal the Judge, in ignorance of the order for substitution, decided that the appeal had abated. On second appeal:

Held, that an order having actually been passed permitting substitution and the substitution having been made and the order not having been objected to at the hearing by the other respondents, it must be held that time had been extended and that the legal representatives of the deceased respondent had properly been brought upon the record.

Sayed Mohsin Shah, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In two connected appeals against a large number of respondents one of the respondents, Shadi, died and an application to bring his representatives on the record was made nearly eight months after his death. By an order in vernacular this application was granted on the 7th January 1921 and notice was issued to the other side. Before the hearing of these appeals the memorandum were corrected and the names of the legal representatives were substituted for that of Shadi. On the day fixed for hearing neither Counsel appears to have appreciated the fact that this order had been passed and this action had been taken, and the fact was not noticed by the District Judge, who proceeded to decide that the appeals having abated against Shadi and no representatives having been brought on the record the whole appeals must abate on the view taken in Hadu v. Lala (1). On second appeal it has been pointed out by Counsel that orders had actually been passed substituting the legal representatives for the deceased Shadi. These were no doubt ex parte orders and it was open to the other side to take exception to them at the hearing of the appeals. They took no such exception and under the circumstances we are of opinion that we must hold that time had been extended and that the legal representatives had properly been brought upon the record.

We, therefore, accept the appeal on this preliminary point and set aside the decree

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Darjeeling, dated the 13th of June 1923, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Darjeeling, dated the 30th November 1922.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for the Appellant.

Babus Sarat Chandra Roy Choudhury and Santi Kumar Roy Choudhury, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises an interesting question of law, which, so far as we are aware, is not covered by authority. In execution of a money-decree obtained by the appellant against the respondent, the respondent contended that the decree had been fully satisfied out of Court and that the appellant practising fraud on the respondent did not certify payment in Court. The appellant contended that the uncertified payment could not be enquired into under O. XXI, r. 2, C. P. C., but the learned Subordinate Judge in the Execution Court decided to investigate the allegation of fraud. After he had examined several witnesses, the parties filed an application referring the dispute about payment to two arbitrators and an Umpire. The case was thereupon referred to the arbitrators who by their award found a much lesser amount due to the appellant than he was claiming in execution. Various objections to the legality of the award were raised by the appellant which were overruled by the Subordinate Judge. The concluding portion of the learned Subordinate Judge's judgment is in these words:—"The application of the decree-holder to set aside the award is, therefore, rejected, the suit is consequently decreed in terms of the award with proportionate costs". The meaning of the last clause is not sufficiently clear but it appears that the learned Subordinate Judge was of opinion that a proceeding under s. 47, C. P. C., followed as it is by a judgment is a suit which was decided in accordance with the award. Against this decision the appellant decree-holder appealed to the District Judge of Darjeeling who held that no appeal lay to him under s. 16, Sch. II, C. P. C.

The decree-holder has preferred this second appeal on the ground, among others, that the learned District Judge is wrong in holding that no appeal lay to him. A preliminary objection is raised to the competency of this appeal on the ground that as no appeal lay to the Court of Appeal below no second appeal lies to this Court. The preliminary objection really begs the question in this case which is the determination of the nature of the proceedings in the Execution Court.

It is contended by the appellant that the reference to arbitration was invalid in law in as much as there was no dispute between the parties within s. 1, Sch. II, C. P. C., because the Court could not take notice of uncertified payment alleged by the judgmentdebtor. There is no force in this argument. Whether or not the Court can legally enquire into it, any question on which the parties join issue is a dispute within the meaning of that section.

The next point urged is one of substance and deserves careful consideration. It is argued that the Second Sch. of the C. P. C. does not apply to execution proceedings and, therefore, the reference to arbitration was without jurisdiction and ultra vires of the Executing Court; the award is accordingly illegal and unenforceable. In our judgment this contention is right and ought to prevail. Section 1 of the Second Sch. empowers reference to arbitration of a dispute between parties to a suit. Section 16 provides that a decree should follow the award. The decree must be a decree as is passed in a suit and capable of execution and not merely a judgment as the learned Subordinate Judge seems to think, for by that section the decree is made appealable as a decree where it is not in conformity with the award. It is admitted that all the provisions of the C. P. C. relating to suits are not applicable in execution proceedings. Order IX, [Hari Charan Ghose v. Manmatha Nath Sen (1), Bipin Behari Shaha v. Abdul Barik (2)]. Order XVII, [Tirthsami v. Annappayya (3).] Order XXII, (r. 12), O. XXIII (r. 4) and of course such other Orders that deal with parties to suits or pleadings do not apply to execution of decree. Nothing has been shown to us to persuade us to hold that there is any speciality in the Second Schedule which makes it applicable to questions arising in the execution of decrees. Section 141, C. P. C., is more an authority for the view we take and does not lend countenance to the contention of the respondent. As has been explained in Hari Charan Ghose v. Manmatha Nath Sen (1), the law is the same as it was under s. 647 of the Code of 1882 which expressly excluded execution proceedings from those to which provisions relating to suits were extended. The view that the special procedures in suits do not apply to execution of decrees is based on the supposition that O. XXI relating to executions is self-contained and exhaustive as to the special subject with which it deals.

(1) 19 Ind. Cas. 683; 41 C. 1; 18 C. W. N. 343.
(2) 35 Ind. Cas. 613; 44 C. 950; 21 C. W. N. 30; 24 C. L. J. 446.
(3) 18 M. 131; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 441.

But the learned Vakil for the respondent maintains that an order passed under s. 47, C. P. C., is a decree under s. 2 and, therefore, a proceeding under s. 47 is a suit. The contention is untenable as a proceeding under s. 47 comes into being after the termination of the suit and in course of execution of the decree which concludes the suit. The second clause of s. 47 clearly indicates that the proceeding under that section is distinct from a suit.

It is next argued for the respondent that Execution Court having jurisdiction over the proceeding under s. 47, the reference to arbitration was not without jurisdiction. We have not been able to follow the reasoning for the appellant's objection is directed against the jurisdiction of the Execution Court in following a procedure not warranted by law.

It is further argued that the objection with regard to the illegality of the award must be taken to have been made under s. 15 cl. (c) of the Second Sch. as an award "being otherwise invalid" and even if the reference was without jurisdiction the appellants' objection having been overruled and the award confirmed, no appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court from the order of the First Court. The answer to this contention is simple. Section 15 and s. 16 of the Second Sch. depend for their operation on a valid reference under s. 1 of the Schedule. The reference to arbitration by the Executing Court being without jurisdiction must be totally ignored and the question that is left for consideration is one relating to the satisfaction and discharge of the decree under s. 47, C. P. C. The appeal to the lower Appellate Court and a second appeal to this Court are, therefore, competent.

It is faintly suggested that the appellant being a party to the submission to arbitration he should not in equity be allowed to question the validity of the proceedings initiated at his instance. It is also submitted that the Court having jurisdiction over the subject of the litigation, parties can by consent invest it with power to do something not strictly within its jurisdiction. It is an elementary principle of law that parties by consent cannot confer jurisdiction where it does not exist. In Girija Nath Roy Choudhury v. Kanai Lal Mitra, (4) and Seth. Dooly Chand v,

(4) 43 Ind. Cas. 169; 27 C. L. J. 339.

Mamuji Musagir (5), one of the parties to the submission was permitted to successfully question the validity of an award on the ground that all the parties to the suit had not joined in the reference. These decisions afford complete answer to the other contentions raised by the respondent.

We are not called upon in this case to consider the question of the validity of an award on a reference to arbitration without the intervention of Court by way of adjustment of the decree under O. XXI, r. 2.

Though we look upon the conduct of the appellant with disapproval we are constrained in the view we take of the law to uphold his contention that the Execution Court had no jurisdiction to refer the dispute between the parties to arbitration under the Second Sch. of the C. P. C. In this view we are of opinion that an appeal lay to the lower Appellate Court from the order of the First Court giving effect to the award but it is not necessary to remit the case to the Court of Appeal below for a re-hearing of the appeal as we have by our judgment decided the sole question raised in that Court.

In the result the appeal is allowed and the order of the Execution Court upholding the award set aside. The case will be sent back to that Court with a direction to proceed with the execution according to law. We make no order as to costs of this appeal; the order relating to costs passed by the Courts below will stand.

Appeal allowed;
Case remanded.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 2—Execution of decree—Adjustment pleaded after expiry of period prescribed for certification—Court, whether can go into question of adjustment.

Where in execution of a decree an adjustment is pleaded after the expiry of the period of limitation prescribed for the certification of the adjustment, the Executing Court cannot go into the question whether there has or has not been any adjustment.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Gurgaon, dated the 23rd June 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Nanwan Mal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In execution of a decree of this Court, the decree-holder sought to attach and sell certain property of the representatives of a judgment-debtor Kishori Lal. They were met with a plea put forward on the 1st of April 1924, that there had been an adjustment on the 27th of December 1923, by relinquishment, the story told being that on the death of Kishori Lal the decree-holder, who is a near relation, waived his claim for costs against the widow and children. The Trial Court has given a finding that there was such a relinquishment and on appeal it is urged by Mr. Shamair Chand that the period of limitation had expired for the certification of such an adjustment before it was pleaded. This is true and, although taken at this late stage, the plea is good, and the Executing Court acted ultra vires in going into the question of whether there had been an adjustment or not. I, therefore, accept the appeal but inasmuch as this legal plea was not taken as soon as it could have been, I leave the parties to bear their own costs.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Salem, in A. S. No. 5 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Namakkal, in Original Suit No. 254 of 1918.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Krishnamachariar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—The facts of this case are as follows:—In this case one Ramanadan Chetty had obtained a decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in S. C. S. No. 296 of 1915. In execution of that decree (E. P. No. 959 of 1915), the decree-holder attached the suit property. The order to attach was made on 11th August 1915, and the attachment was actually made on 6th September 1915. The sale was posted to 8th January 1916. On 6th January 1916, the present 3rd defendant filed a claim petition. On 8th January 1916, the sale was adjourned to 15th January 1916 in order to enable the Court to enquire into the claim. But the claim petition was actually disallowed only on 17th January 1916. The order disallowing the claim petition runs as follows:—"In these two cases rival claimants have preferred claims to the property in dispute. The judgment-dobtors are minors and two persons purporting to be their guardians have sold in one case the whole property and in another half the property to the two purchasers respectively who are adjacent land owners. The contest is practically between the two claimants and a suit is inevitable. On the grounds that the claims have been preferred too late and the delay is not satisfactorily explained, I disallowed the claim." Seeing that the attachment was made on the 6th of September 1915 and the claim petition was filed on 6th January 1916, it is difficult to believe that there was such a serious delay in the case as to justify a dismissal without enquiry. It is doubtful that the District Munsif really meant to dismiss the claim petition on the ground of delay in view of his remark. "The contest is practically between two rival claimants and a suit is inevitable." He seemed to think that whatever his order was, a regular suit was so certain that to enquire into the merits at that stage would be a waste of time and it was desirable to avoid waste of time at that stage. It is, therefore, difficult to construe the District Munsif's judgment as one dismissing the petition on the ground of delay in spite of the express statement to that effect. If the judgment of the District Munsif cannot be regarded as one disposing of the claim petition on the ground of delay, then the Full Bench decision in Machi Raju Venkataratnam v. Vadrevu Ranganayakamma (1) does not apply; and the issue which raises the question of title will have to be gone into. But I do not wish to rest my judgment in this case solely on this ground, in view of the ambiguous nature of the District Munsif's order. Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer has contended that E. P. No. 959 of 1915 was dismissed and with its dismissal the attachment has ceased to exist under r. 57 of O. XXI, C. P. C. The E. P. No. 959 of 1915 with all orders thereon up to 1st February has now been exhibited in second appeal as Ex. A. E. P. No. 196 of 1919 is exhibited as Ex. B. What happened was that on 17th January 1916 after the claim petition was disallowed, the decree-holder requested the Court to stop the sale. At any rate that is the note made on the execution petition. Mr. Krishnamachari who appears for the respondent now suggests that that was not the result of the unwillingness on the part of the decree-holder to proceed with the sale but it was at the suggestion of the District Munsif that he stated he would file another petition and was willing to withdraw the same. He relies on E. P. No. 196 of 1916 which was filed on the 31st January 1916 and on which an order was made directing notice for fresh proclamation. This was ordered on 21st February 1916. In that petition, the petitioner stated that the Court suggested that another petition may be filed on 1st February. No doubt the facts are somewhat suspicious and support Mr. Krishnamachari's suggestion. But the first petition was not very old at the time and there does not seem to be any particular reason why the District Munsif should be anxious to have it taken out of the file for statistical purposes being only five months old and suggest to the party to file another petition. If the District Munsif did so for such purposes no doubt it is improper. The decree-holder seemed to be willing to oblige the District Munsif. Anyhow he was willing that the fact should appear as if he was not prepared to proceed with the E. P. No. 959 of 1915 on 17th January 1916. The final order in E. P. No. 959 of 1915 on the 1st February was that the petition was dismissed. Whatever the effect of that order was between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, persons who are not parties to the execution proceedings and who do not know all that passed between the Court and the decree-holder are entitled to rely on the fact that the petition was dismissed on account of the unwillingness of the decree-holder to proceed with E. P. No. 959 of 1915. The result of this was that the attachment ceased to exist under O. XXI, r. 57. Though a fresh order on E. P. No. 196 of 1916 was taken without a fresh attachment and is final and binding between the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor and cannot be questioned on account of want of attachment, the present 3rd defendant is entitled to rely on the result of the dismissal of the earlier petition and say that the attachment has ceased to exist, so far as he is concerned.

(1) 48 Ind. Cas. 270; 41 M. 935; 24 M. L. T. 197; (1918) M. W. N. 599; 8 L. W. 292; 35 M. L. J. 335.

If the attachment has ceased to exist, the next question that arises is whether the order on the claim petition dated 17th January compels the 3rd defendant to set it aside within one year and precludes him from raising his title in the absence of his suit within one year. On this question, it is convenient if I make an extract from my judgment in A. S. No. 36 of 1920, referring this identical point to the Full Bench:

"The appellant next contends that the order of 8th August 1916 has not got to be set aside because the attachment to get rid of which, the claim petition was filed, had ceased to exist."

I will first observe that the effect of an order on a claim petition may be different according as the judgment-debtor is or is not a party to the inquiry. It was pointed out in Moidin Kutti v. Kunhi Kutti (2) that the judgment-debtor may not be a party to the inquiry on the claim petition and in such a case the order though in favour of the claimant and opposed to the judgment-debtor's rights need not be conclusive against the judgment-debtor if no suit is filed by him within one year to set it aside. Conversely, if adverse to the claimant and in favour of the judgment-debtor it need not be set aside by the claimant to the full extent it may sound in favour of the judgment-debtor and has to be set aside only in so far as the order is in favour of the decree-holder concerned. If the judgment-debtor is a party, then the order on the claim petition decides not only questions between the claimant and the decree-holder, but also questions between the claimant and the judgment-debtor the latter being in general much broader in scope than the former. To put it in other words: as soon as a claim petition in filed, there are three possible parties to the enquiry the claimant, the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor and we may have two classes of cases.

1. Cases in which all three are parties. In such a case an order against the claimant will be wider in scope and has effects reaching much farther than in the 2nd class.

2. Cases in which the claimant and the decree-holder are the only parties. In this case the order is narrower in scope and its consequences are not so far-reaching as in class 1.

An example will make my meaning clear. A obtains a decree against B for Rs. 200 and attaches a house worth Rs. 3,500. C claims ownership of the house and objects to the attachment. If A, B and C are parties to the inquiry and the claim petition is dismissed, it is obvious that the effect of the order is to hold that C is not the owner of the house and B is the owner, the order in favour of B operating to help A and other creditors of B. A regular suit by C in such a case to set aside the order to the fullest extent, has to be valued at Rs. 3,500 and has to be filed in a Court competent to try that suit.

But if only A and C are parties to the enquiry, the effect of the dismissal of C's petition is simply to hold that A has got a right to pursue the attachment and C has not got a right to object to the attachment. It is not to decide that C is not the owner of the property and that B is. A regular suit to set aside the order should be valued at Rs. 200 and not at Rs. 3,500 and may be filed in the District Munsif's Court. It may be that the reason of the order is that C is not the owner and it may be that, in the regular suit that follows, the issue that may be framed relates to the title of C (especially so if B is a party to the suit). These remarks follow from Krishnasami Naidu v. Somasundaram Chettiar (3), Sadaya Pillai v. Amurthachari (4) and Vedalingam Pillai v. Veerathal (5). I will refer to these cases later on again but at present I have made these general remarks as it is useful to remember the distinction in the discussion of cases.

The earliest case on the point raised before us is Umesh Chunder Roy v. Raj Bullubh Sen (6). At page 281, Tottenham, J., says: "the finding of the Court in the Execution Department that the sale was invalid, only meant that the sale was invalid as against the judgment-creditor, and as against any purchaser who might purchase at a sale held in execution following that attachment." In view of the later clause, I do not see what meaning can be obtained by laying special emphasis on the words "against the judgment-creditor." It may be that the reason of the order on the claim petition in that case was that the sale was made during attachment (See s. 64 of the present Code) but I do not see what argument can be derived from this fact unless the order on the claim petition which held that "the sale was invalid" expressly limited the operation of the order to claim petitions objecting to the particular attachment and saved other claim petitions to other possible attachments. The fact remains that the claim was dismissed with a general opinion that the sale was invalid, without any limitation on the effect of the opinion.

The next case is Ibrahimbhai v. Kabulabhai (7). Birdwood, J., said:—"The second attachment was a new and distinct act giving a new cause of action on which the plaintiff is entitled to a fresh enquiry and decision." This was followed in Gopal Purshotam v. Baidivali (8) in which Sargent, C. J., says "When that attachment was removed by the judgment-creditor's own act on 20th November 1888 there was no longer an attachment or any other proceedings etc." In Krishna Prosad Roy v. Bipin Behary Roy (9) their Lordships say at page 231: "The object of the claim preferred by the plaintiff under s. 278, C. P. C., was to obtain the removal of the attachment and when that attachment had been removed after payment of the decretal amount there was no longer an attachment or any proceeding in execution on which the order could operate to the prejudice of the plaintiff, and therefore there was no necessity to bring a suit to set aside the order. We are unable to accept the view suggested on behalf of the appellants that, in spite of the withdrawal of the attachment, the dismissal of the claim under section 283, C. P C., could, by virtue of the provision of s. 283, C. P. C., have the effect of finally determining the question of title between the parties."

The next case is Koyyana Chittamma v. Doosey Gavaramma (10). It does not appear clearly from the facts whether the judgment-debtor was a party to the claim proceedings though, on the whole, it looks as if he was not. The order on the claim petition was held conclusive against the claimant as between him and a subsequent vendor from the judgment-debtor. I am indebted to my learned brother, (Spencer, J.,) for the suggestion that this case can be justified on the ground that the subsequent vendor paid off the amount of the decree in execution of which the claim was preferred and, may, therefore, be regarded as having been subrogated to the rights of the execution-creditor. This was not the actual ground of the judgment which seems to proceed on a too literal reading of s. 283. The learned Judges distinguish the cases in Umesh Chunder Roy v. Ray Bullubh Sen (6), Ibrahimbhai v. Kabulabhai (7), Gopal Purshotam v. Baidivali (8) and Krishna Prosad Roy v. Bipin Behary Roy (9) on the ground that in all these cases, the raising of the first attachment was within a year of the order on the claim proceedings. I find it difficulty to follow this ground of distinction. In the first place, if it is conceded that the order becomes useless and inoperative when the attachment ceased within one year of the order, this is a concession not allowed by the literal reading of the section. Secondly, if the operativeness of an order on a claim petition is to be regarded as conditional on the continuance of the attachment, it is difficult to see why the cessation of the attachment within one year should destroy the operativeness and the cessation of it beyond one year should have just the opposite effect merely because a suit to set aside could not be brought more than one year after the date of the order. It seems to me a novel legal conception. Thirdly, the fact that the decrees were paid off within one year seems to be an accident. Not one of the eight Judges laid any emphasis on the fact. The only difference I can see between the two cases (the raising of the attachment within one year and its raising beyond one year) is that in the former case, the unsuccessful claimant who waits incurs no risk as he knows for certain within one year that the attachment in execution of it has ceased to exist and in the latter he takes a risk by not suing as he cannot be certain that the attachment will be raised. But I do not see why when the event, on which he takes his chance, viz., the cessation of the attachment by the payment of the decree or for other reason, happens, he should not take advantage of it simply because he took risks in so waiting. This distinction has not been proved by Seshagiri Iyer, J., in Vedalingam Pillai v. Veerathal (5) and the decision in Koyyana Chittemma v. Doosey Gavaramma (10) must be regarded as unsound except on the ground that the judgment-debtor must be regarded as a party to the order on the claim proceedings. This is how it was treated in all the cases in which it was cited with reference to this point—in Krishnasami Naidu v. Somasundaram Chettiar (3), Sadaya Pillai v. Amurthachari (4) and Ponaka Balarami Reddi v. Hazi Mahomed Abdul Aziz (11). In my opinion, after these cases, it is futile to rely on Koyyana Chttiemma v. Doosey Gavaramma (10) as a authority of any value.

Another distinction has been suggested by the respondents in respect of the cases in Umesh Chunder Roy v. Raj Bullubh Sen (6), Ibrahimbhai v. Kabulabhai (7), Gopal Purshotam v. Baidivali (8) and Krishna Prosad Roy v. Bipin Behary Roy (9). It is that the question of the conclusiveness of the order arose in a proceeding unconnected with the decree in the execution of which the claim was preferred. In Umesh Chunder Roy v. Raj Bullubh Sen (6) and Ibrahimbhai v. Kabulabhai (7) the point arose in connection with the execution of a second decree though in Umesh Chunder Roy v. Rao Bullubh Sen (6) it was a second decree based on the same right as the first. In Gopal Purshotam v. Baidivali (8) and Krishna Prosad Roy v. Bipin Behary Roy (9), the question arose in later suits unconnected with the decree though in the former the party opposed to the unsuccessful claimant was the successful decree-holder claiming in some other right. The contention amounts to this, viz., the order is conclusive against the claimant in so far as he seeks to resist the particular decree though the attachments may be different but not conclusive as against the different decrees though of the some decree-holders and a fortiori of different decree-holders. The distinction no doubt helps the respondents in the present case but is opposed to the decision in Gollampalli Subbayya v. Sankara Venkataratnam (12). Incidently I may observe this distinction concedes that the decision in Koyyana Chittemma v. Doosey Gavaramma (10) and Sangariah Chetty v. Chinnabhai (13) are erroneous and that the language of O. XXI, r. 63, should not be taken too literally. I think the distinction in so far as it seeks to apply the conclusiveness of an order to different attachments in execution of the same decree is opposed to the principle of Krishnaswami Naidu v. Somasundaram Chettiar (3) the reasoning in which equally applies to a case where there is a decree for costs to the extent of Rs. 200 and for mesne pofits of the value of Rs. 3,500 and the first attachment was for costs only and the latter attachment is for the mesne profits. I also observe that the emphasis in all the four cases is on the non-identity of the attachments and not of the decree as the words underlined (italicised) by me in the quotations from those judgments show.

If the language of O. XXI, r. 63 is read literally it may apply not only:—

(a) to claimants resisting rights worked out in pursuance of the attachment to which the claim is made (in my opinion the operation of the rule ought to be confined to this class) but also to,

(b) (1) between the claimant and other attachments under the same decree,

(2) between the claimant and attachments under other decrees of the same decree-holder,

(3) between the claimant and the decree-holder, whatever the right on which he relies,

(4) between the claimant and all other decree-holders of the same judgment-debtor and all other persons claiming rights against the same judgment-debtor such as mere creditors who have not obtained decrees,

(5) between the claimant and judgment-debtor (including his assignees),

(6) between the claimant and all persons (even if unconnected with the judgment-debtor) interested in denying the title of the claimant, (see Vedalingam Pillai v. Veerathal (5).

To allow the extension of the section so as to apply to class (6) is to create a species of order in rem which are unknown except in Probate and Matrimonial Proceedings. Even the doctrine of res judicata does not apply so as to bar a person (A) from urging his right against C by reason of a former adjudication (adverse to A) between A and B. (Justice Holloway points out in Sri Raja Kakarlapudi Suriyanarayanarazu Garu v. Chellamkuri Chellamma (14) that such a plea is allowed in continental jurisprudence.

To allow the extension to (5) is to ignore the distinction between the cases where a judgment-debtor is a party and where he is not which I pointed out at the beginning of the judgment.

To allow the extension to class (4) is to imagine that mere simple creditors and money decree-holders have got some interest in the property of their debtors and judgment-debtors though there is no charge on the property and not even attachment of it.

To allow the extension to classes (2) and (3) is to imagine that a person A, by merely obtaining a decree against B and attaching B's property under it has got a right to predicate that B is the owner of the property and not C for the purposes of all possible decrees he may obtain against B and all other purposes in respect of which he may come into conflict with C a right unknown to law.

To allow the extension to class (1) is inconsistent with Krishnasami Naidu v. Somasundaram Chettiar (3) and ignores the possibility of a decree being paid by the judgment-debtor, or of an attachment being raised.

My view is supported by the two Bombay decisions and the two Calcutta decisions I have already mentioned by Ponaka Balarami Reddi v. Hazi Mahomed Abdul Aziz (11) (though the point was not necessary for the decision), by Gollampalli Subbayya v. Sankara Venkataratnam (12) (a very strong case on the facts) and by Manilal Girdhar Patel v. Nathalal Mahasukhram (15). Ignoring Koyyana Chittemma v. Doosey Gavaramma (10) the only decision in favour of the appellants is Sangariah Chetty v. Chinnabhi (13). I have already commented on this in Lakshmi Ammal v. Kadiresan Chettiar (16) and none of the decisions I have referred to in this judgment [except Gollampalli Subbayya v. Sankara Venkataratnam (12)] has been cited in it. It was based on a decision in Ramasamy Chetty v. Alagiri Chetty (17) in which the only question decided was whether the suit abated by reason of the satisfaction of the decree. The Code provides for no abatement except on death. Their Lordships held that the suit did not abate. I do not think it is permissible to infer from this that the order on the claim inquiry continues operative after the cessation of the attachment in a case where no suit was filed. I think the filing of the suit makes all the difference. The decisions in Ponusami Pillai v. Samu Ammal (18), Lakshumon Chettiar v. Parsivdu Pillai (19) and Velu Padayachi v. Arumugam Pillai (20) do not help us as they are plain examples of the applicatton of O. XXI, r. 63 without the complications of the cessation of the first attachment. I think the decisions in Sangariah Chetty v. Chinnabbi (13) and Gollampalli Subbayya v. Sankara Venkataratnam (12) are irreconcilable. Some reliance has been placed on the language of s. 64 of the Code. When we remember that s. 64 and O. XXI, rr. 58—62 used to be in the same Chapter of the former Codes, s. 64 supports my view and shows that the object of the Legislature in providing against obstacles and objections to an attachment is the protection of rights created in pursuance of the attachment only.

The view I there took was that an order on a claim petition is final against the claimant in so far as the rights worked out in pursuance of the particular attachment are concerned. The only thing that I would now add in addition to the reasons given there is that O. XXI, r. 58 runs "where any claim is preferred to, or any objection is made to the attachment of, any property attached in execution of a decree on the ground that such property is not liable to such attachment, etc." The language of the rule, especially the words "such attachment" think, supports my reasoning in the passage quoted above. Seeing that there are a number of decisions of this High Court taking this view, namely, Ponaka Balarami Reddi v. Haji Mahomed Abdul Aziz (11), Gollampalli Subbayya v. Sankara Venkataratnam (12) and Sadaya Pillai v. Amurthachari (4) inasmuch as my learned brother agrees with my view, I do not think it is necessary to refer this case to the Full Bench solely on account of the decision in Sangariah Chetty v. Chinnabi h(13). The second appeal will, therefore, be allowed and the suit remanded for fresh disposal as regards 3rd defendant. The appellant will have a refund of the Court fees paid in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. Costs in the first appeal and second appeal will be paid by the appellant as he had not raised the point about the cesser of attachment by filing the two execution petitions which have not been exhibited. Costs in the Court of first instance to abide the result.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I agree and have nothing to add.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47 —Execution of decree—Sale—Dispute as to extent of property sold, whether must be decided by separate suit or in execution proceedings.

When a question arises between an auction-purchaser and the judgment-debtor as to what was the property that was sold, the matter is one to be investigated by a separate suit and not by an application in the Execution Court. The fact that the decree-holder is himself the auction-purchaser makes no difference. [p. 642, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 30th January 1923.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for decision in this appeal is whether the suit was maintainable or whether the plaintiffs-appellants' remedy lay in an application under s. 47 of the C. P. C. to the Executing Court.

The facts of the case are given in the judgment of the Court below and are briefly these, for the purposes of this judgment. The respondent No. 1 had a mortgage from one Har Prasaed. This was dated the 9th of August 1897. Har Prasad sold his share which was four annas to appellant No. 1 and the predecessor-in-title of the remaining appellants. There was a pre-emption suit by Musammat Akbari Begam, the predecessor-in-title of the respondents other than the respondent No. 1, with respect to the four annas share sold by Har Prasad. Musammat Akbari Begam's suit was compromised and by that compromise Musammat Akbari Begam obtained two annas' share out of four annas and the plaintiffs retained the remaining two annas. The plaintiffs or their predecessor-in-title also held a mortgage from Har Prasad, but nothing turns on that for the present. Chiranji Lal brought a suit for sale of Har Prasad's four annas property but omitted to make Musammat Akbari Begam or her representatives parties to it. He made the present appellants or their predecessors-in-title parties with the allegation that they had purchased the entire property sold. The suit was not defended and was decreed ex parte. In the execution proceedings the decree-holder described the property as property in the possession of the appellants. That is a description which finds place in the sale certificate and also in the dakhalnama or acknowledgment of delivery of possession executed by the auction-purchaser. Chiranji Lal himself purchased in execution of his decree. The appellants now come and say that they held only two annas share in the property of Har Prasad, that the remaining two annas share was in the possession of the respondents other than Chiranji Lal and that, therefore, Chiranji Lal should give back possession over two annas. It seems to be the case that by several purchases the appellants own 12 annas share in the mahal, while the respondents other than Chiranji Lal own the remaining four annas share. It was because the plaintiffs owned more than two annas share that Chiranji Lal found it convenient to obtain possession over four annas share and also a mutation of name in his own favour in the Revenue Court.

The Courts below have dismissed the suit on the ground that a suit would not lie and the remedy of the appellants lay by an application to the Executing Court.

The question seems to be concluded by a recent judgment of this Court, viz: Munna Lal v. Collector of Shahjahanpur (1). That case is very similar to the facts of this case. In that case also the purchaser was originally the decree-holder and their Lordships held that when a question arose between auction-purchaser and the judgment-debtor as to what was the property that was sold the matter was one to be investigated by a separate suit and not by an application in the Execution Court. This ruling follows the Full Bench case of Bhagwati v. Banwari Lal (2). I may point out that the opinion that the position of a decree-holder is changed by his purchasing at auction is also supported by a recent Full Bench case of Bombay in Hargovind Fulchand v. Bhudar Raoji, (3).

If such be the case, viz: if Chiranji Lal's position as a decree-holder has been altered by his auction-purchase the question raised is no longer one between a decree-holder and a judgment-debtor. In this view the suit was maintainable.

For the respondent No. 1 it was argued that the question of fact in issue is really concluded by the judgment in the case. This point was not decided by the Courts below and I have not got enough material before me to decide it.

I allow the appeal, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and remand the suit to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court with the direction that it be restored to its original number and dispose of according to law.

Costs here and hitherto will abide the result. The costs in this Court will include Counsel's fees on the higher scale.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 1391 OF 1922.

November 21, 1924.

Present:— Justice Sir Ewart Greaves, KT., and Mr. Justice Chakravarti.

ANU BISWAS AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS —APPELLANTS

versus

Declaration of title and possession, suit for—Plea of tenancy—Title, proof of—Procedure—Form of decree.

In answer to a suit for declaration of title to and recovery of possession of a certain piece of land the defendant pleaded that he was in possession of the land in dispute under a lease granted to him by one of the co-sharers of the plaintiff's vendor, to whose share the land in dispute had fallen on a partition, and that he was, therefore, not liable to ejectment. It was found that the plaintiff had established his title to the land in dispute but his suit was dismissed on the ground that he had failed to prove that the defendant was not a tenant or that the tenancy had been lawfully determined:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff having established his title to the land in dispute it was the duty of the defendant who set up a tenancy from one of the co-sharers of the plaintiff's vendor to establish such a tenancy, and to show that the nature of the tenancy was such that it was binding upon the plaintiff; [p. 643, col. 2.]

(2) that if the defendant failed to prove the existence and the binding nature of his tenancy the plaintiff's suit must be decreed; [ibid.]

(3) that if the defendant was successful in establishing a tenancy which would be binding against the plaintiff, the plaintiff would still be entitled to a decree declaring his title to the property and the liability of the defendant to pay rent to the plaintiff. [p. 644, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs against a judgment and decree of the Officiating Subordinate Judge of Faridpur dismissing the plaintiffs' suit. The plaintiffs' allegations upon which they claimed are shortly these: That one Idu was the original owner of the property in suit. That on Idu's death the property devolved upon the plaintiffs Nos. 2, 3 and defendant No. 2 and that defendant No. 2 sold his interest in the property to the plaintiff No. 1 by a conveyance executed on 21st December 1917. That the plaintiffs were in possession of the property but they were dispossessed by the defendant No. 1 in execution of a decree which that defendant obtained against them in a case under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act. On these grounds, the plaintiffs prayed for declaration of their title as alleged and also for possession from defendant No. 1. The defence of defendant No. 1 was that, as a matter of fact, there was a partition between the heirs of Idu and that defendant No. 2 let out the lands in suit which fell exclusively to his share on partition to the defendant No. 1 in November 1917. Therefore, the defendant contended that he was rightfully in possession as a lessee under defendant No. 2 and was, therefore, not liable to be ejected.

The learned Munsif found that the title alleged by the plaintiffs was established. The learned Munsif further came to the conclusion that the partition set up by the defendant No. 1 was not proved. The lower Court further found that the tenancy set up by the defendant was not also established. On these findings the learned Munsif gave a decree to the plaintiffs. Then there was an appeal by the defendant No. 1 before the learned Subordinate Judge who, as I have already stated, set aside the decree of the learned Munsif and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. It appears to me that the learned Subordinate Judge has entirely misapprehended the scope and the nature of the suit. The learned Subordinate Judge has started with the finding which is in affirmance with the finding of the First Court that the plaintiffs had made out their title to the land as it was recorded in the Record of Rights, i. e., the title as alleged in the plaint. Having found that, the learned Subordinate Judge says that the defendant being in possession under the decree under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, the onus is upon the plaintiffs to show that he had no tenancy right on the land. Then the learned Subordinate Judge says that it is not necessary to find whether there was an actual partition as alleged by the defendant. Then the learned Subordinate Judge concludes his judgment in these words: "the incidents of the tenancy and the nature of it are not clear from the evidence before me and however flimsy that tenancy might be the plaintiffs cannot ask ejectment unless that tenancy has been lawfully determined."

In my opinion, these findings of the learned Subordinate Judge are insufficient for the disposal of the case, much less is it sufficient for the reversal of the decree made by the First Court. The plaintiffs having established their title to the land it was the duty of the defendant who sets up the tenancy from one of the co-sharers to establish such a tenancy and to show that the nature of the tenancy was such that it was binding upon the purchaser as the plaintiff No. 1 in this suit was. Then again, in order to make that lease binding against all the co-sharers, it was the duty of the defendant to establish satisfactorily that there was a partition between the co-sharers, before the alleged lease to the defendant No. 1, under which his lessor obtained a complete title to deal with the land by way of a lease in favour of defendant No. 1. Until the partition is established and until the defendant No. 1 shows the nature of the tenancy which he had obtained from defendant No. 2, he cannot successfully resist the claim of the plaintiffs. We think, therefore, that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge should be set aside and the case is sent back to him so that the appeal may be re-heard in the light of the observations which we have made in this judgment. I may, however, point out that although the learned Subordinate Judge agreed with the Munsif that the plaintiffs had made out their title, he dismissed the suit altogether. He was clearly wrong there. If the defendant No. 1 establishes a tenancy which would be binding against the plaintiff No. 1 subject to the rights of the defendant No. 1, there should be a decree declaring the title of the plaintiff No. 1, the defendant No. 1 should be declared liable to pay rent to the plaintiff No. 1, but if the defendant fails to prove the partition and the tenancy, as I have already indicated, the judgment of the learned Munsif will stand.

Costs of this appeal will abide the result.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

CIVIL APPEAL No. 185 OF 1921.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL REPRESENTED BY THE COLLECTOR OF KISTNA —DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 20, 65—Inam, resumption of—Ryotwari patta, grant of—Resumption declared illegal—Revenue, recovered from holder of patta, refund of—Mistake.

Government resumed a devadayam inam attached to a temple and granted a ryotwari patta in respect of it to the trustee of the temple and thereafter to a purchaser from him. Subsequently at the instance of third parties the resumption was declared illegal. In a suit by the purchaser from the trustee for refund of the assessment levied from him by Government during the whole period of litigation:

Held, (1) that the plaintiff when he accepted the patta was aware that the right of resumption by Government was being questioned and that, therefore, there was no mistake so as to render s. 20 of the Contract Act applicable; [p. 645, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that the issue of a ryotwari patta by Government to the plaintiff not only did not convey the land from Government to the grantee but did not even create a contract in respect of the land between them, and that plaintiff was consequently not entitled to any relief. [p. 646, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Court, Kistna at Masulipatam, in O. S. No. 3 of 1919.

The Government Pleader, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and A. Venkatachalam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Odgers, J.—Government appeals from a decree of the District Court of Kistna whereby the plaintiff-respondent was held entitled to recover a sum paid by him to Government as cist of a certain village between 1912—16. The village in question was originally a Devadayam inam attached to a temple at Kara. Government resumed the inam in 1908 or 1909 on the ground that the services were not being performed and granted a ryotwari patta to one Ankitam Raja Rao who was in fact the hereditary trustee. The validity of the resumption was challenged in O. S. No. 28 of 1911 of the Temporary Subordinate Judge's Court, Masulipatam. Meanwhile Ankitam Raja Rao had transferred the village to three others. The suit (O. S. No. 28 of 1911) was instituted on 20th April, 1911, and on 26th April, 1911, the present plaintiff-respondent entered into an agreement with the three persons aforesaid to purchase the village. This was completed by Ex. K, 19th August 1911. Subsequently plaintiff-respondent paid the assessment demanded by Government and obtained a patta, Ex. N, of the village in his own name on 26th January 1914. The suit (O. S. No. 28 of 1911) was decided on 8th February 1916 the Court holding that the resumption was illegal and in the absence of an appeal this declaration became final and established the right of the temple to the inam. The plaintiff's case in the present suit under appeal was that the consideration for the levy of the assessment had failed, he having purchased the property in the belief that Government was the owner and that his title had been recognised by the grant of the patta to him. The plaintiff also pleaded that he had obtained no benefit by the sale and grant of patta as the tenants had disputed his title to recover rent from them. The District Judge held that there was a contract between Government and plaintiff and that this contract was void under s. 20, Contract Act, as both parties were under a mistake as to a matter of fact essential to the agreement and that it was not necessary for plaintiff to show that he had had to pay damages to a 3rd party (in this case, the temple) before he could recover. Consequently under s. 65 of the Contract Act the plaintiff was held entitled to recover. It has not in fact been decided by the lower Court whether plaintiff did obtain any and what benefit from this transaction and we were urged by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer to send the case back on this ground alone but on the view of the matter that I take, I think this will be unnecessary. I am by no means convinced that plaintiff was in April 1911 under any mistake of fact. Exhibit K recites that the lands sold to plaintiff are in the claim and enjoyment of the vendors. On 30th May 1912 plaintiff petitioned to relinquish 102 acres of what he had bought by Ex. I (a) which was accepted on 16th November 1912. In Ex. P plaintiff asks that in a suit between himself and a tenant, the case should be kept pending a possible appeal by Government against the order declaring the resumption illegal. That was in 16th February 1916. That suit and others were dismissed on 21st February 1916. In Ex. III, dated 25th August 1917, plaintiff applied for a refund of the assessment paid. The Collector in his order Ex. IV, dated 6th June 1918 points out that no mesne profits were claimed or allowed to the temple in O. S. No. 23 of 1911. He contends that no refund can be allowed as the patta with the fixed amount of assessment was accepted by the petitioner who was in possession of the village on strength of the patta and made the payment of assessment voluntarily. On these documents it is impossible to say that a case of mistake has been established. The facts are equally consistent with the plaintiff having with his eyes open contracted for the village in question and as being willing to run the risk either of an appeal by Government succeeding or of his ability to extract rent from the tenants. There is no evidence that plaintiffs did not know that suit, O. S. No. 28 of 1911, had been instituted at the date of his contract on 26th April 1911, and he had not gone into the witness-box to deny it. That suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge on 11th January 1913 and on remand, decreed on 8th February 1916. The plaintiff applied for patta on 26th January 1914 and was thus perfectly well aware at least at the latter date that the matter of the resumption of the inam was being litigated.

The Privy Council case cited in Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (1) depended on a misapprehension of the private rights of the vendor. There can be no such misapprehension here when plaintiff accepted patta and when he knew the title of Government was being questioned in litigation. On the point of the existence of a contract between plaintiff and Government, it is necessary to consider the nature of the patta, as to whether it is a contract or a grant of the land itself. In the Secretary of State for India v. Penumacha Venkatapatha Raju (2), it was held that the liability to pay revenue does not rest on a contract or some relation resembling contract. In Secretary of State for India v. Kasturi Reddi (3), Bhashyam Iyengar, J., says it is in the nature of a mere bill and is not and does not purport to be in the nature of a grant or conveyance. He held that the question whether a patta was issued or not was immaterial on a question of title. See also Secretary of State for India v. Raghavachariar (4). The same learned Judge in Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (5), considering the nature of resumption says: "Even when the Government exercises its right of resumption, it rarely, if ever, resumes the land even if the land itself had been granted as inam. It simply resumes the full assessment and it does so by the imposition of full assessment upon the land and converts it into ordinary ryotwari tenure." [See also Boddupalli Jagannadham v. Secretary of State for India (6) and Muhammad Esuf Sahib v. Abdul Sathar Sahib (7)].

These authorities are, in my opinion, conclusive on this question and, therefore, the issue of patta not only did not convey the land in question from Government to the respondent but did not even create a contract in respect of the land between them.

The remaining question is one of limitation. The District Judge has held that Art. 96 applies and that the suit was brought within 3 years of plaintiff's discovery of the alleged mistake. The respondent here relies on Art. 96 or 120. On the other hand appellant refers to s. 59 of the Revenue Recovery Act (II of 1864) made applicable by s. 29 (1) of the Limitation Act and alleges that the cause of action arose on 8th February 1916 when the resumption was declared illegal. Section 59 of Act II of 1864 reads as follows:—

"Nothing contained in this Act shall be held to prevent parties deeming themselves aggrieved by any proceedings under this Act, except as hereinbefore provided, from applying to the Civil Courts for redress; provided that Civil Courts shall not take cognizance of any suit instituted by such parties for any such cause of action, unless such suit shall be instituted within six months from the time at which the cause of action arose."

It was held in Secretary of State for India v. Nagaraja Aiyer (8) that the section was confined to cases of persons being aggrieved by illegal or irregular proceedings taken for collection of revenue under the provisions of the Act. I am of opinion that the collection of assessment from the plaintiff might fall within this definition; but we have no details and there is no evidence of the circumstances under which the collections were made. It is not, however, necessary in the view I take of the facts in this case and of the effect of the grant and acceptance of a patta to decide the point definitely. In my opinion the appeal succeeds as to the return of the assessment levied and must be allowed with costs throughout.

LAHORE HIGH COURT.

MISCELLANEOUS FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 2380 OF 1924.

March 18, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Campbell.

YUSAF ALI MAMOONJI—APPLICANT—APPELLANT

versus

ALIBHOY AND OTHERS—OPPOSITE PARTIES—RESPONDENTS.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 13—Application for appointment of guardian—Procedure—Evidence, opportunity to produce.

The appellant, who was one of the paternal uncles of a minor Muhammadan girl, made an application for appointment as guardian of the girl. The other uncles of the girl objected to the appointment on the ground that the minor's father had appointed the objectors guardians of the minor by Will, and that at the time of the application the appellant was prosecuting a suit against the minor in which he sought a decree that the minor had no share in her father's property. On the basis of these allegations, and without giving the appellant any opportunity of producing evidence, the Court dismissed the appellant's application. Under the Will relied upon by the objectors the whole of the property of the deceased had been left to them and nothing had been left to the minor. The appellant alleged that the Will was a forgery:

Held, (1) that the appellant should have been given an opportunity to prove his allegations and to rebut the allegations made by the objectors;

(2) that if the Will was in fact a forgery it was not desirable to appoint the objectors as guardians of the minor;

(3) that in any case the Court could not have made an order relying on the genuineness of the Will without taking evidence in support of the Will;

(4) that, therefore, the order dismissing the appellant's application must be set aside and the case remanded to the lower Court for a fresh decision after giving parties an opportunity to produce evidence.

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 20th June 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand and Lala Hargopal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Aziz Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order by the District Judge, Rawalpindi, refusing to appoint a guardian to Musammat Zuhra Bai, the minor daughter of the deceased Seth Hassan Ali Mamoonji. The applicant was Yusaf Ali Mamoonji, one of the deceased's four full brothers.

The learned District Judge issued notice to the other relatives, and they appeared and objected by written petition that the applicant was not a fit person to be appointed guardian, that Seth Hassan Ali Mamoonji had appointed his other three full brothers guardians of the girl by Will, dated the 29th April 1916, and that at the time of the application the applicant was prosecuting a suit against the minor and others in which he sought a decree that the minor had no share in her father's property. These written objections were put into Court on the 18th June 1924, and on the 20th of June the order under appeal was passed and the application was rejected solely on the assumption that the alleged Will of the 16th June 1914 was genuine.

In appeal to this Court Seth Yusaf Ali Mamoonji contends that the Will is not genuine and that he was given no opportunity of producing any evidence in support of his application. According to the terms of the Will as quoted in the learned District Judge's order, the whole of the deceased's property was bequeathed to three of his full brothers who were enjoined to consider Musammat Zuhra Bai as their own daughter, but nothing was left in the way of property to the girl. If the Will is in fact a forgery it manifestly would be desirable to appoint some person other than these three uncles guardian of the minor girl.

There is nothing on the record over the signature of the learned District Judge to show either that the applicant was given a full hearing on the 18th June or that he was given any opportunity of producing evidence to show that the alleged Will was not genuine. There is nothing on the record to support the statement in the written pleas of the relatives that the applicant was at the time litigating against the minor, and this is denied by the applicant's Counsel before me. The case must go back to the lower Court for further inquiry, and the applicant must have an opportunity of giving evidence in support of his application. The alleged Will admittedly has never been proved, and the reasons for assuming it to be genuine have not been explained by the learned District Judge.

I accept the appeal with costs, set aside, the order of the Court below and return the application for a fresh decision. The respondents have resisted the remand strenuously on grounds which are not supported by the present contents of the record, and full Counsel's fee entered in the certificate will be granted to the appellant.

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra, dated the 13th October, 1922.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of the property in suit and that the defendants have no right therein except as representatives of the mortgagee.

The Court of first instance decreed the claim and disallowed the various objections raised by the defendants.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit on three grounds:—

(1) That the suit was barred by time:

(2) That the suit was barred under s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act; and

(3) That the claim was barred by the provisions of s. 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act.

The facts of this case are slightly complicated and it is necessary to refer to them briefly.

Dilsukh and Mansingh were two brothers and in 1876 they made a mortgage of their 3/16th share each in favour of the plaintiff's ancestor for a sum of Rs. 700 each. Subsequently Dilsukh died and in 1896, his widow Musammat Phulo and Mansingh made a second mortgage of their 6/16th share in the village to the same mortgagee for another sum of Rs. 1,400. In 1910 Mansingh purported to sell the entire 6/16th share to the defendants. By that time Musammat Phulo had died. When the defendants applied to the Revenue Court for entry of their names by virtue of this last sale-deed the daughters of Dilsukh raised certain objections but their objections were disallowed and the names of the defendants were entered in the revenue papers in 1911. In 1915, the two daughters proceeded to sell their 3/16th share to the plaintiff.

The defendants made a deposit under s. 83 of the C. P. C. to redeem the previous mortgages and the plaintiff submitted to redemption of the second mortgage which had been executed by Musammat Phulo and Mansingh jointly and also of Mansingh's half share in the first mortgage but they declined to allow redemption of the alleged half share of Dilsukh under the earlier mortgage of 1876.

Accordingly in 1916 the present defendants instituted a suit for redemption against the plaintiff. In that suit the defendants put forward two alternative claims. They said that, in the first place, they had acquired the interests of Dilsukh by virtue of the sale-deed of 1910 inasmuch as Dilsukh and Mansingh were really joint and in the alternative they alleged that in any case as they had redeemed the second mortgage of 1876 they were entitled to redeem the first mortgage as persons who had stepped into the shoes of the subsequent mortgagees. The Court tried the question of title and recorded clear findings that Mansingh and Dilsukh were really separate and that Mansingh had no right to Dilsukh's share in 1910. It accordingly held that the present defendants had no right to redeem the mortgage of 1876 as proprietors and representatives of Dilsukh but it held that inasmuch as the defendants had been allowed to redeem the second mortgage of 1896 made by Musammat Phulo and Mansingh they had stepped into the shoes of the subsequent mortgagee and in that way they were entitled to redeem the first mortgage as subsequent mortgagees. A decree for redemption was accordingly passed.

We may note that all this time the names of the defendants had been recorded in the revenue papers as mortgagees. They after the redemption applied that their names should be recorded as proprietors inasmuch as the mortgage had been satisfied in or about 1917. After the redemption decree they were actually entered as full proprietors.

In 1921 the present suit was instituted for the declaration mentioned above. The lower Appellate Court has held that the present claim is barred by limitation because the cause of action in favour of the plaintiff arose in 1911 when the objections of the daughters of Dilsukh, the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiff, were disallowed. It has thought that the subsequent proceedings of 1917 in the Revenue Court were in continuation of the previous proceedings and did not give a fresh cause of action to the plaintiff. In our view this view is clearly erroneous. The lower Appellate Court has ignored the fact that in between 1911 and 1917 there was an adjudication by a Civil Court by which it was clearly held that the present defendants had not acquired the proprietary interest of Dilsukh and that they were merely in the position of subsequent mortgagees. After that adjudication it is difficult to hold that it was still the duty of the present plaintiff to bring a suit for a declaration to the same effect within six years of 1911. The proceedings of 1917 in the Revenue Court were taken in spite of and subsequent to the adjudication by the Civil Court.

The denial of the plaintiff's title was, therefore, a fresh denial and not necessarily in continuation of the proceeding one. Under the circumstances the present suit having been instituted within six years of 1917 was not barred by time.

The learned Subordinate Judge seems to have been of opinion that inasmuch as it was open to the present plaintiff to bring a suit for redemption on payment of the mortgage money, but he has chosen merely to ask for a declaration, he has omitted to claim a consequential relief which he was entitled to claim and his suit for a mere declaration is, therefore, not maintainable. In support of this view he has relied on the case of Mufti Ali Jafar v. Fazal Husain Khan (1). In that case all that was held was that a relief by way of a declaration regarding the validity or invalidity of an alienation made by a trustee comes within the provisions of cl. (h) of s. 92 of the C. P. C. and a suit in respect of it must be brought in conformity with the provisions of that section and that, therefore, a mere suit for a declaration that the transfer was invalid without the sanction of the Legal Remembrancer was not maintainable. On the other hand the appellant relied on the case of Nathu Singh v. Gumani Singh (2) which is directly in point. It seems to us that the suit cannot fail on the technical ground that a further consequential relief has not been asked for. The plaintiff has sixty years from the time of the mortgage to redeem the property by tendering the mortgage money. If long before the expiry of that period it turns out that the defendants are denying the title of the mortgagor and are casting a cloud on his title and there is a danger that by lapse of time reliable evidence may disappear it is open to the plaintiff to bring a suit for a mere declaration even though he is not prepared to pay the mortgage money at that time. This was the view clearly expressed in the case last quoted with which we fully agree. The suit, therefore, cannot fail on this technical ground.

The last point taken by the learned Subordinate Judge was that the claim was barred by s. 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act. The Courts below have proceeded on the assumption that Inderjit, the plaintiff's father was somehow or other bound by the partition proceedings and if he had been alive he himself would not have been entitled to maintain the suit. They have then proceeded to consider whether the present plaintiff could also be bound. This they have held to be so even though his name was not actually entered in the revenue papers. On the abstract question of law it is impossible to differ from the view taken by the Courts below. If the effect of the partition proceedings was to bind Inderjit conclusively it seems to us that the present plaintiff who is a member of a joint Hindu family with him would be equally bound even though his name was not actually entered in the revenue papers. If Inderjit as the head of the family and as the recorded proprietor had full opportunity to object then the other members of his family may be equally bound. The Courts below, however, have not set forth the necessary facts which would enable us to dispose of this point finally as to whether the effect of the partition proceedings was really such as to operate as a bar to the present case. All that appears at present is that some co-sharers had applied for the partition of the original mahal Himmat Singh, in which the property now in suit was then situated in khewats Nos. 1 and 7. Inderjit the father of the plaintiff was made a party to the partition proceedings. He died during the pendency of the proceedings and the plaintiff was brought on the record in his place at some probably late stage in the case and the only other thing that is known is that the property now in dispute was as a result of the partition allotted in mahal Bhanwar Singh which we understand belongs to the defendants. It is not quite clear whether Inderjit Singh had any share in the original mahal independently of the mortgaged property nor is it clear whether Inderjit was arrayed on the side of the applicants for partition or was on the side of the non-objectors. It is further not clear whether the result of the partition was that Inderjit's separate property, if any, (other than the property in suit) went out of Bhanwar Singh mahal. Without these facts having been made clear it is impossible to say whether there was or was not any express or implied conflict of interest between the plaintiff's predecessor-in-title Inderjit and the present defendants. It is, therefore, impossible to decide this appeal without clear findings on the following points :—

We accordingly send down the following issues to the lower Appellate Court for determination :—

(1) Did Inderjit possess any share in mahal Himmat Singh other than the properties mortgaged which are not in dispute?

(2) If so, did any property of Inderjit go out of a mahal other than mahal Bhanwar Singh ?

(3) Did Inderjit die before the expiry of the time fixed for filing objections ?

The Counsel for the parties are agreed that only fresh documentary evidence should be allowed and no oral evidence be permitted. The lower Appellate Court will allow parties to produce documentary evidence only. The findings should be returned preferably within one month, but if that be not possible then two months. On return of the findings the usual ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890)—Order appointing guardian—Order directing third person to make payment for minor's support, legality of.

There is nothing in the Guardians and Wards Act which entitles a Court when appointing a person guardian of a minor to order a third party, who is not in possession of any property belonging to the minor, to pay anything towards the minor's support. [p. 650, col. 2.]

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, dated the 14th April 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Jagan Nath Agarwal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will dispose of appeals Nos. 1652 and 2465 of 1924. They arise out of an order by the Senior Subordinate Judge, Ambala, appointing Mansa Ram, a collateral of her deceased father, as guardian of the person of Musammat Jota Devi, a minor. On Mansa Ram's application the learned Senior Subordinate Judge held, after taking evidence, that Musammat Naurati, the step-mother of the child in whose care she is at present, was living an immoral life and was, therefore, unable to retain custody of the minor. In regard to property it was decided that, since the minor had no property, it was only necessary to appoint Mansa Ram guardian of the person, and a rider was added to the order directing Musammat Naurati, who has succeeded to the property of the minor's father, to pay Rs. 12 per mensem for the maintenance of the minor and that that maintenance and also the girl's marriage expenses should be first charge on the property of her deceased father.

Musammat Naurati and Mansa Ram have both appealed. Musammat Naurati complains, firstly, that she has not been proved to be an improper person to look after the minor, and, secondly, that the order directing her to pay Rs. 12 per mensem was without jurisdiction.

This second contention is correct. There is nothing in the Guardians and Wards Act which entitles a Court, when appointing a person guardian of a minor, to order a third party to pay anything towards the minor's support. As regards the question of Musammat Naurati's character the learned Senior Subordinate Judge has stated that there is no direct evidence of immorality but that there is a great deal of reliable indirect evidence that her character is bad. I am not disposed to differ from this conclusion. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge had the witnesses before him and was in the best position to decide in respect of their credibility. I accept Musammat Naurati's appeal to the extent of setting aside the order that she should pay Rs. 12 per mensem for the maintenance of the minor. Mansa Ram, if so advised and if the Court permits, can sue for such sums as he may consider payable by Musammat Naurati out of Chuhar Mal's estate for the minor's maintenance and marriage expenses ; but the learned Senior Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to make the order which he has passed. In other respects the appeal is dismissed.

Mansa Ram's appeal is No. 1652, and he contends that he should also be appointed guardian of the minor's property. In his original application he specified certain property as belonging to the minor. The Court below has held that the minor has no property, and there is no evidence that the property scheduled to the application belongs to the minor. Should any property be acquired hereafter by the minor Mansa Ram can make another application for being appointed guardian of that property.

In both appeals parties will bear their own costs.

A plaint was rejected under O. VII, r. 11, of the C. P. C., owing to the failure of the plaintiff to pay the deficit Court-fees directed to be paid by the Court. The plaintiff appealed against the order and valued his appeal at the original valuation put by him upon his claim and questioned the finding of the Trial Court as to the valuation of the suit. The Appellate Court rejected the appeal on the ground that the memorandum of appeal was insufficiently stamped:

Held, that it was the duty of the Appellate Court to decide the question as to what the real value of the suit was, and what the Court-fees payable upon that finding should be, and that after deciding that question the Appellate Court should have given an opportunity to the plaintiff to pay the deficit Court-fees and then remanded the case to the First Court for trial on the merits after the payment of proper Court-fees by the plaintiff. [p. 651, col. 2.]

Dr. Basak and Babu Prokas Chandra Pakrasi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff and arises out of an order made by the District Judge of Dacca, dated the 15th of June 1921. It appears that the plaintiff brought a suit for declaration of title to and recovery of possession of certain immoveable property. He valued his suit for the purpose of Court-fees at Rs. 60 and paid Court-fees ad valorem on that valuation. After the quantity and situation of the land had been ascertained by local investigation, the defendants raised a question that the suit had been undervalued and the Court-fee paid was insufficient. The learned Subordinate Judge enquired into the matter and found that the true value of the land in suit should be assessed at Rs. 9,905 and gave the plaintiff an opportunity of paying the deficit Court-fees. The plaintiff defaulted and the result was that the plaint was rejected under O. VII, r. 11. The plaintiff appealed against that order to the District Judge and valued his appeal at the same value as he had put upon the original plaint and questioned the finding of the Subordinate Judge as to the valuation of the suit. The learned District Judge disposed of the appeal in these words. As the memorandum of appeal is insufficiently stamped 'it is rejected.' It is clear from this order that the District Judge did not go into the question as to the true value of the properties in suit for the purpose of Court-fees and it is also clear that without coming to a finding upon the question he could not hold that the memorandum was insufficiently stamped.

The result is that we set aside the order of the District Judge and send back the case to him for a trial of the question as to what the real value of the property in suit is and what the Court-fees payable upon that finding should be. The plaintiff, after that question is decided, will be given an opportunity to pay the deficit Court-fees upon that value and then the District Judge will remand the case to the First Court for trial on the merits after payment of proper Court-fees before that Court.

The appellant will be entitled to his costs in this appeal. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Muhammad Rafi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case sued for pre-emption in respect of a sale of land effected by defendant No. 1 in favour of defendants Nos. 2 to 7, of whom defendants Nos. 4 to 7 had rights of pre-emption equal to those of the plaintiffs. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 had inferior rights, but before the institution of the suit they executed a sale-deed conveying their share to Rohilla, defendant No. 9, who is the son of defendant No. 1 and has a right of pre-emption superior to that of the plaintiffs. The Trial Court dismissed the suit, but the District Judge on appeal held, (1) that defendants Nos. 4 to 7, having joined defendants Nos. 2 and 3, who were strangers, with themselves in the purchase, had lost their right of pre-emption, and (2) that the re-sale by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 to Rohilla was a fictitious transaction intended to defeat pre-emptors, and he, therefore, gave the plaintiffs a decree. The defendants have filed a second appeal.

In Mughal v. Jalal (1), it was held that if out of several vendees the one whose rights were inferior to those of the pre-emptor sold his share before the institution of the suit to a person having rights not inferior to the pre-emptor's the claim of the latter would be defeated, and that ruling was followed in Hira v. Sardara (2) to which reference is made on page 170 of Ellis' Law of Pre-emption, 4th Edition. If, therefore, the sale to Rohilla was a genuine sale the claim will fail.

Both Rohilla and his vendors say that there was an actual sale by the latter to the former, and there is no evidence to show that the sale was fictitious. There seems to have been a confusion in the mind of the learned District Judge between a fictitious or sham sale and a genuine sale which has been effected for the purpose of defeating pre-emptors. The circumstances which he mentions in his judgment in support of his finding show nothing more than that defendants Nos. 2 and 3, as soon as they came to know that plaintiffs were going to claim pre-emption, proceeded to sell their shares to Rohilla. From the fact that they intended to outwit the plaintiffs, it does not in the least follow that the sale to Rohilla was not a genuine sale. Counsel for the respondent relies on Fazl Din v. Lal Singh (3), but it is to be observed that in that case the second purchaser was the father of the first purchaser, whilst in the present case the second purchaser Rohilla is not related to the first purchasers. The lower Appellate Court's finding that the sale to Rohilla is fictitious, not being based on any evidence, cannot be supported.

It is urged for the respondents that Rohilla waived his right by attesting a sale-deed executed by defendant No 1, but this argument is met by Pandurang Krishnaji

v. Markandaya Tukaram (4) in which it was held by the Privy Council that the attestation of a deed does not by itself estop the person attesting from denying that he knew of its contends or that he consented to the transaction which it effects. There is no evidence as to the circumstances in which Rohilla attested the deed, and there is nothing to show that he attested it in token of his consent to the sale.

The sale by defendants Nos. 2 to 3 to Rohilla, not having been shown to be fictitious, defeats the claim of the plaintiffs, whose rights of pre-emption are inferior to Rohilla's.

I accordingly accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the Trial Court. The plaintiffs-respondents will pay the appellants' costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court. Costs in the Trial Court will be paid as directed by that Court.

Letters Patent (Cal.), cl. 15—Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 66—Reference to High Court—Opinion, whether "judgment"—Appeal, whether lies.

The opinion pronounced by the High Court on a reference made to it under s. 66 of the Income Tax Act is merely advisory and is pronounced by the High Court in the exercise of its consultative jurisdiction and is not a "judgment", within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court. No appeal, therefore, lies against such an opinion under this clause. [p. 654, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Rankin, differing in opinion from Mr. Justice Page, dated the 4th and 8th of January 1924, in Reference No. 5 of 1923 and reported as 84 Ind. Cas. 31.

Mr. H. D. Bose (with him Babu Mohini Mohan Chakravarti), for the Appellant.

Babu Surendra Nath Guha (with him Moulvi Nur-ud-din Ahmed), for Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Chatterjea, J.—This appeal is preferred under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent against a decision of Mr. Justice Rankin. There was a Reference under s. 66 (2) of the Indian Income Tax Act (XI of 1922) made by the Commissioner of Income Tax to the High Court. It was heard by a Bench consisting of Mr. Justice Rankin and Mr. Justice Page. The learned Judges differed in opinion and under cl. 36 of the Letters Patent the opinion of the Senior Judge Mr. Justice Rankin prevailed. As against that judgment the present appeal has been preferred.

A preliminary objection has been raised on behalf of the respondent that no appeal lies in this case under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, and reliance has been placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Tata Iron and Steel Company Limited v. Chief Revenue Authority Bombay (1). The question in that case was whether an appeal lay to the Privy Council under cl. 39 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court from a decision of the High Court upon a case stated and referred to the Court by the Chief Revenue Authority under s. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, which corresponds to s. 66 of the present Income Tax Act of 1922. Clause 39 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court which is similar to the Letters Patent of the Calcutta High Court provides for an appeal to His Majesty in Council from a "final judgment, decree or order" of the High Court. Their Lordships in that case held that the judgment given by the High Court upon a case stated and referred to the Court under s. 51 of Act VII of 1918 was not a "final judgment, decree or order" within the meaning of cl. 39 of the Letters Patent. The expression "final judgment" does not occur in cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. The word "judgment" only appears there. But so far as the present question is concerned there is no difference between a "final judgment" and a "judgment." The question is whether the word "judgment" is to be taken in the strict legal sense or as merely advisory. In the case quoted above their Lordships observe: "One must, therefore, ask oneself what is the nature and character of the acts which s. 51 of the Income Tax Act authorises and empowers the High Court to do....It provides that if, in the course of any assessment under this Act, or in any proceedings in connection therewith (save an immaterial exception) a question arises with reference to the interpretation of any provision of the Act or any rule thereunder, the Chief Revenue Authority may, either on his own motion or on reference from any officer of Subordinate Authority, draw up a statement of the case, and refer it with his own opinion thereon to the High Court, and shall so refer any such question on the application of the assessee unless he be satisfied that the application is frivolous. The opinion of the Revenue Authority thus dominates and conditions the right of the assessee." Then it is pointed out that "sub-s. (3) provides that on the hearning of this case the High Court shall decide the question raised thereby, and shall deliver judgment thereon containing the grounds on which the decision is founded, and shall send to the Revenue Authority a copy of this judgment under the seal of the Court and signature of the Registrar, and the Revenue Authority shall dispose of the case accordingly." Their Lordships further point out that "the amount of the tax-payers' liability is thus, definitely fixed, but nothing more is done. The decision of the High Court does not in any way enforce the discharge of that liability. It would appear clear to their Lordships that the word 'judgment' is not here used in its strict legal and proper sense. It is not an executive document directing something to be done or not to be done, but is merely the expression of the opinion of the majority of the Judges who heard the case, together with a statement of the grounds upon which those opinions are based." And finally their Lordships observe as follows:—"It would appear to their Lordships that, having regard to the authorities cited, and for the reasons already stated, the decision, judgment or order made by the Court under s. 51 of the Income Tax Act in this case was merely advisory and not in the proper and legal sense of the term final, and thus so far as these considerations are concerned, that the appeal is incompetent." All these observations apply to the present case, and the judgment given upon the case stated is merely advisory made by the Court in exercise of its consultative jurisdiction, and is not a judgment within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. That being so we think there is no appeal under that section.

A question has been raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the decision of Mr. Justice Rankin who was the Senior Judge which was held to have prevailed was without jurisdiction. But that is a matter upon which both the learned Judges were agreed and this Bench constituted to hear the appeal under s. 15, cl. (3) of the Letters Patent is not competent to consider the question as to whether the decision of the Division Bench upon a matter upon which both the learned Judges were agreed is or is not right.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed on the preliminary point.

We make no order as to costs of this appeal.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

Letters Patent Appeal against a judgment of Mr. Justice Ryves, dated the 5th December 1922.

Sir Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, Mr. J. M. Banerji and Dr. K. N. Katju and Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellant.

St. C. Thompson, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was one the essential purpose of which, as rightly remarked by the learned District Judge before whom the suit came in first appeal, was to set aside an alienation of joint family property. This alienation had taken place by way of a sale in execution of a simple money decree obtained against the father alone. It is true that the son endeavoured to improve his position by bringing his case into Court in the form of a suit for partition of joint family property; but he asked the Court to treat the property sold at auction as part of the joint family property still capable of division between him and his father, and to assign the whole of it to the father's share. In effect this was asking the Court to hold that the auction-sale was void as against the son, or, at any rate, to the extent of the share which he would take on partition in the property sold. Now, it has been conceded before us in appeal that, on the principles laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Nanomi Babuasin v. Modhun Mohun (1) and reaffirmed recently in the case of Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad (2), the son could not succeed in this suit without proving that the debt in respect of which a decree was obtained and the joint family property brought to sale had been incurred by his father for what the Hindu Law would call an immoral purpose. The Court of first instance seems to have held on the evidence that the father had borrowed this money for an immoral purpose; but the learned Subordinate Judge went on to hold that the auction-purchaser defendant had taken the property in good faith for valuable consideration and without any knowledge of the immoral taint attaching to the father's transaction. On this ground the Trial Court passed a decree for partition, but in a form which virtually negatived the claim of the plaintiff to have the sale set aside. The learned District Judge in appeal re-considered the evidence regarding the immoral nature of the debt. It has been one of the principal matters of controversy in this Court as to what the learned District Judge intend to find, and actually did find, on this point. At the end of its judgment, however, the lower Appellate Court definitely agrees with the Trial Court that the auction-purchaser had no notice of the immoral nature of the debt, if it was in fact immoral, and had acted in good faith. On this express ground the learned District Judge dismissed the appeal before him and affirmed the decision of the Trial Court. There was a second appeal which came before a Single Judge of this Court for disposal and the learned Judge of this Court has based his decision wholly upon the view taken by him as to the meaning and effect of the judgment recorded by the lower Appellate Court. We do not think it necessary to go into detail as to the precise circumstances of the case. There was evidence produced which, if believed, would warrant a finding that this debt had been incurred by a Hindu father for immoral purposes, that is to say, in furtherance of immoral relations which he had contracted with a woman who was an actress and a courtesan. The learned District Judge says that the oral evidence on this point had not greatly commended itself even to the opinion of the Trial Court, and that, in his opinion, it was definitely worthless. He then goes on to remark that the finding of the Trial Court as to the immoral nature of the debt was based mainly on the evidence of the plaintiff's father. He adds the following words:

"Under the circumstances I would be inclined to demur to this finding."

Now, the expression "under the circumstances" does seem to us to refer back to certain remarks at the beginning of the judgment, where the learned District Judge, rightly or wrongly, expresses a definite opinion that the suit was collusive in its nature, the father and his son acting together in order to recover certain property from the hands of a bona fide purchaser for value. In this view of the judgment as a whole the learned Judge of this Court held that he had before him a definite finding that the debt which was the foundation of the entire transaction was not tainted with immorality; and he has accordingly dismissed the second appeal. He expressly remarked that he would have remitted the case to the lower Appellate Court for a specific finding on the issue regarding the immoral nature of the debt, if he did not feel perfectly satisfied from the judgment of that Court what its finding on such an issue must inevitably be. In the appeal which comes before us under the Letters Patent there are certain pleas which seem to suggest a contention that the plaintiff in this suit was not necessarily bound to prove the immoral nature of the debt. In so far as any such pleas appear in this memorandum of appeal, we are content to say that they have not been pressed in argument and are clearly unsustainable. There is a plea taken to the effect that certain admitted facts regarding the purposes for which the father had contracted the debt would be sufficient in themselves to warrant a finding that the purpose for which the loan was taken was an immoral one in the eye of the Hindu Law. This plea, again, has not been seriously pressed in argument and would not, in our opinion, be sustainable. The main contention before us is that the learned Judge of this Court has misunderstood and misinterpreted the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, and that the main issue in the case could not be determined against the plaintiff without a definite finding on the part of the lower Appellate Court as to the alleged immoral nature of the debt. On behalf of the respondents it was contended that the Trial Court and the lower Appellate Court were after all right, and that the question is concluded against the plaintiff by the finding that the auction-purchaser acted in good faith and had no notice of the alleged immoral nature of the debt contracted by the father. In this connection a number of authorities have been cited before us, and the real question is whether certain principles of law laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the well-known case of Suraj Bunsi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (3) have or have not been modified by later pronouncements of their Lordships and in particular by the two cases quoted at the beginning of this judgment. It has been suggested before us that there are two recent decisions of this Court, both reported in Volume 21 of the Allahabad Law Journal Reports, at pages 683 and 809 respectively [Sitla Prasad v. Chameli Bahu (4) and Judubir v. Gajadhar (5)] which show that three learned Judges of this Court have recently affirmed the principle apparently laid down in Suraj Bunsi Koer's case (3) in the sense in which it was understood by the Trial Court and by the lower Appellate Court in the present suit. On this point we desire only to make one comment, which is that the head-note on each of these two cases in the Law Journal Reports does, in our opinion, go beyond what the learned Judges actually decided, if the judgments themselves are carefully considered. We have come to the conclusion, however, that the learned Judge of this Court was substantially right in the manner in which he dealt with this case. The most that the plaintiff, coming before this Court in second appeal, could have asked this Court to do would have been to remit to the lower Appellate Court a definite issue regarding the immoral nature of the debt, or rather to insist upon a clear and specific finding on the part of the learned District Judge upon this issue, which was considered and discussed by him. Undoubtedly, if such a finding had been called for from the learned District Judge who actually heard and disposed of this suit in first appeal his finding would have been against the plaintiffs, as the learned Judge of this Court has rightly remarked. We do not think that the plaintiff is entitled to be allowed an off chance of success upon this question which is after all, in substance, a question of fact, because an issue, if now remitted, might conceivably come up for determination before a District Judge Landlord and tenant—Denial of landlord's title, proof of—Forfeiture of tenancy—Burden of proof—Duty of Court.

It is only in case of a tenant being inducted on the land by a landlord that the tenant cannot deny the title of his landlord at the inception of his tenancy. In cases where the landlord's title is merely derivative the tenant may, without incurring any forfeiture of his rights, put the landlord to proof of his title. In such a case it is the duty of the landlord who seeks to eject the tenant on the ground of forfeiture resulting from denial of the landlord's title to allege facts which would establish that the tenant had incurred forfeiture of his tenancy by such denial. This can only be done by proving the statement made by the tenant which is relied on as showing that he has denied the landlord's title. It is not enough for the landlord to bring forward merely a judgment pronounced in a former suit. It is necessary to prove the tenant's actual statement in order that the Court might judge what the tenant really meant to say and whether what he said amounted to a forfeiture. If such a statement is contained in a written document the primary evidence is the document itself which should be placed before the Court. The mere statement of the opinion of the landlord himself upon certain words used by the tenant that forfeiture has been incurred is no evidence at all for the purpose. [p. 658, cols. 1 & 2.]

Courts of Equity do not usually lean towards giving relief on the ground of forfeiture. They will enforce a forfeiture only when the facts are clearly established that the forfeiture has been incurred. [p. 658, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for a declaration of his title to four parcels of land and also for recovery of possession against all the defendants. But so far as defendant No. 1 was concerned the plaintiff's case was that that defendant was his tenant but in a suit for rent brought by the plaintiff against the defendant he (the defendant) put in a written statement denying the plaintiff's title to the land and set up a title of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as the owners of the land. The plaintiff alleges that on such a denial having been made he withdrew the rent suit and now brought this suit for khas possession against the defendant on the ground that the defendant No. 1 had forfeited his tenancy under the plaintiff. The defence was that the land belonged to defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and that if it was found that the plaintiff was the owner of the land then defendant No. 1 was ready to pay rent to him. The Court of first instance gave a decree to the plaintiff for possession against all the defendants. That decree was affirmed on appeal by the District Judge. This second appeal is on behalf of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. So far as defendant No. 2 is concerned, we think that the decree against him should be confirmed. So far as defendant No. 1 is concerned the learned Vakil who appeared for him urged in this second appeal that upon the facts found by the learned District Judge no case of forfeiture of defendant No. 1's tenancy has been made out. He further argued that the statement upon which the plaintiff's case of forfeiture was based was not proved in the case. The judgments of both Courts show that those Courts found a denial by the defendants upon the evidence other than the statement itself. Upon this ground it was contended that the decree so far as it allows the plaintiff's khas possession as against defendant No. 1 was not correct. We think that this contention is right. It appears to us that in this case there was an issue as to whether or not the plaintiff was entitled to get khas possession against the defendant. That issue raises the question of the plaintiff's right to get khas possession based on forfeiture incurred by the tenant, defendant No. 1 by the denial of the plaintiff's title. We do not know upon the facts found whether the defendant was really inducted on the land by the plaintiff or not. It is only in case of a tenant being inducted on the land by a landlord that the tenant cannot deny the title of his landlord at the inception of his tenancy. In cases where the plaintiff becomes the landlord by a derivative title it has been held that the tenant may without incurring any forfeiture to his landlord put him to the proof of his title. In these cases it is a clear duty of the plaintiff to allege facts which would establish that the tenant had incurred forfeiture of his tenancy by denial of his landlord's title. Then again so far as I know the law was laid down by Sir Richard Garth in the case of Ahollya Debya v. Bhairab Chandra Patra (1). Sir Richard Garth in the course of that decision observes as follows: "The plaintiffs sue to recover khas possession of certain land on the ground that the defendant, who is the tenant occupying that land under the plaintiffs, has forfeited her tenancy by denying the plaintiffs' title in a former suit which they brought against her for arrears of rent. She is alleged to have done this in the written statement which she made in that suit. In order, therefore, to prove this allegation in this suit, it was absolutely necessary for the plaintiffs to show what the statement of the defendant actually was; and this could only be done by proving the statement itself. It was not enough for the plaintiffs to bring forward merely the judgment of the Court in the former suit. It was necessary to prove the defendant's actual statement in order that the Court might judge what the defendant really meant to say, and whether what she said amounted to a forfeiture. There was no difficulty in proving this statement, and the issues which were raised in the case by the Munsif obliged the plaintiffs to do so, because one of those issues was, 'whether the defendant's tenancy will prevail against the plaintiffs, and whether the latter are entitled to khas possession.' Now the question whether the latter, that is, whether the plaintiffs, were entitled to khas possession, depended entirely on this alleged forfeiture."

Applying the principles laid down in that case it appears to us that the plaintiff did not lay down the foundation of his case so far as khas possession was concerned. In this case the denial is said to have been made in a written statement. The plaintiff was bound to put that statement in evidence so that the Court might determine upon the words themselves as contained in that written statement whether the forfeiture was incurred or not. Then if such a statement is contained in a written document the primary evidence is the document itself which should be placed before the Court. This was not done in the present case. The mere statement of the opinion of the plaintiff himself upon certain words used by the defendant that the forfeiture had been incurred is no evidence at all. The learned Vakil for the respondent has contended that the defendant did not deny that he had repudiated his tenancy under the plaintiff. For the reasons which I have indicated this is immaterial. It was the duty of the plaintiff to establish his case. We think that there was no evidence properly so called of the denial by the defendant. The decree was based upon that ground cannot be sustained. The learned Vakil for the respondent presses upon us for a remand with a view to enable him to prove the defendant's statement. In this matter also I am supported by the authority of Sir Richard Couch, when under similar circumstances he refused to adopt that course. It is not necessary to point out that Courts of Equity do not usually lean towards giving relief on the ground of forfeiture. It only operates when the facts are clearly established that the forfeiture has been incurred and we do not think that the plaintiff should have an opportunity again to establish his case. On the ground the decree so far as khas possession against defendant No. 1 is concerned should be varied. In other respects the decree will stand.

The appeal of defendant No. 2 fails and is dismissed with costs. The order as to costs by the lower Courts will stand.

It should be declared that the plaintiff will be entitled to receive rent from defendant No. 1.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

Plaintiffs sued to recover the sum of Rs. 149 from the defendants on the allegation that they were the owners of certain groves and had sold the crop of the groves for a particular season to the defendants who had failed to pay the balance of the consideration for such sale:

Held, that the suit was based on an allegation of pure contract and was cognizable by a Court of Small Causes and that the value of the suit being below Rs. 500 a second appeal was not competent in the case. [ibid.]

When an intricate question of title to property arises in the course of a small cause suit the Court of Small Causes is authorized, by s. 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, to return the plaint for presentation to a regular Court, but the character of the suit is not changed merely because a question of title has been raised by the defendant and a suit of the nature of a small cause is not thereby exempted from the operation of s. 102 of the C. P. C. [p. 659, col. 2; p. 660, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 16th August 1924.

Mr. Hamid Hasan, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—No second appeal lies in this case. The suit was brought by the plaintiffs-respondents on the allegation that they were the owners of certain groves, that they had sold the crop of the groves for a particular season to the defendants-appellants for a sum of Rs. 50, that they had paid Re. 1 as earnest money and had failed to pay the balance.

The suit succeeded partly in the Court of first instance and wholly in the Court of first appeal.

The defence was that the defendants were the occupancy tenants of the land and the grove and they never purchased any crop.

The first question that struck me at hearing of the appeal was that no second appeal lay to this Court. The learned Counsel for the appellants has relied on two cases—one decided by this Court and the other decided by the Calcutta High Court. The case of this Court was that of Churaman v. Balli (1). In this case the suit was for recovery of Rs. 25 per year as malikana and the decision of the Court was that such a suit was not a suit cognizable by Mofussil Small Cause Courts Act of 1865. That Act of 1865 is no longer in force and the Full Bench ruling was given on the language of that Act. The case of the Calcutta High Court was that of Sitab Rai v. Dubal Nagesia (2). The suit as it was brought contained a prayer for a declaration that a certain forest was a reserve forest. That itself would exempt the suit from the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes. The head-note shows that their Lordships laid down that no second appeal lay under s. 586 of the C. P. C., where the original suit was of the nature cognizable in a Court of Small Causes.

The question whether a suit is cognizable by a Court of Small Causes or not must depend on the nature of the suit and not on the nature of the defence set up. Under s. 15 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, 1887, all suits of a civil nature of value not exceeding Rs. 500 would be cognizable by a Court of Small Causes provided they are not specifically exempted from the cognizance of the Court. No clause in the Second Schedule has been pointed out to me as showing that a suit of the nature of the present one was exempted from the cognisance of the Court of Small Causes. The suit was based on an allegation of pure contract and it was, therefore, cognizable by a Court of Small Causes. It is true that when an intricate question of title to property arises, a Court of Small Causes is authorized by s. 23 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act to return the plaint for presentation to a regular Court. But from this it does not follow that merely because a question of title is raised in defence the character of the suit is changed.

Section 102 of the C. P. C., is clear in its terms and lays down that no second appeal shall lie in any suit of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes where the amount or value of the subject-matter does not exceed Rs. 500. There is no proviso attached to the section such as would exempt cases, in which a question of title has been raised by the defendant, from the operation of the section.

I have no doubt, therefore, that no second appeal lies and the present appeal is accordingly dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11, C. P. C.

There is no presumption of jointness in the case of a Muhammadan family, and when money is borrowed by one member of a Muhammadan family he alone is liable to repay it and the other members of the family do not incur any liability in respect of the loan, merely because they have also benefited from the loan.

Babu Bepin Chandra Bose, for the Respondends.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5 and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff for recovery of the money due on khata accounts, said to have been advanced to defendant No. 3, the brother of some of the minor defendants and their mother. It is the plaintiff's own case and the books show that the money was advanced to defendant No. 3. It appears that defendant No. 3 and all the other defendants are sons and the widow of one Moula Bux. The money was borrowed after the death of Moula Bux. The plaintiff sued defendant No. 3 and along with him the other defendants. The defence of defendants Nos. 2, 4 and 5 was that they did not borrow the money and in fact two of them were minors and that they, therefore, were not liable. The First Court dismissed the suit against these defendants and gave a decree against defendant No. 3 who had borrowed the money and who did not deny the loan. On appeal by the plaintiff the learned Subordinate Judge has not only made defendant No. 3, liable but with the other defendants also that is, the step-mother of defendant No. 3 and his two minor step-brothers. The sole ground upon which the learned Subordinate Judge decreed his claim against these defendants was that the whole family was jointly benefited by the advances which were meant for them and were enjoyed by all the members. Now it is quite clear that the judgment cannot be supported. This was a Muhammadan family no question of any presumption under the Hindu Law arising here. If defendant No. 3 chose to borrow money on his credit, he was alone liable for the money, simply and not the minors and their mother who were given the benefit of that money by defendant No. 3. That does not create any liability of these defendants for the loan. It seems to us, therefore that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is wrong and should be set aside and the judgment of the First Court restored with costs of this Court and the lower Appellate Court.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

Lakshmi Amma v. Janamajayan Nambiyar, 4 M. L. J. 183, followed.

The determination of the category to which a suit belongs must depend upon the relief which the plaintiff prays for, because Court-fees must be determined with reference to the prayer contained in the plaint. The Court must ascertain what the plaintiff actually asks for in his plaint and must not speculate what may be the ulterior effect of his success. [ibid.]

Where a plaintiff is bound to ask both for a declaration and the setting aside of a document but prays merely for declaration, the suit must be treated for purposes of Court-fee as one for a declaration. It is not for the Court to say that the plaintiff should have framed his plaint differently and that if he had done so a higher Court-fee would have been payable and that, therefore, the plaint before the Court should be treated as containing a prayer which it does not in truth contain. If a plaintiff contents himself with asking for a declaration, where he ought to ask for a declaration and consequential relief, the suit is liable to be dismissed not by reason of the improper valuation of the suit, but because it infringes the provisions of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act. Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tiruvalur, dated the 25th March 1924, in O. S. No. 12 of 1923.

Messrs. K. S. Ramabhadra Iyer and K. S. Sankara Iyer, for the Appellants.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and S. R. Dikshit, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This civil revision petition raises the question of the correctness of the order of the Subordinate Judge regarding the Court-fee payable on the plaint before him. The plaintiffs have filed this suit in respect of a mortgage executed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3, that is, their father and brother respectively, in favour of the 1st defendant. The plaintiffs claim that they are members of an undivided Hindu family along with defendants Nos. 2 and 3 that the mortgage is not supported by consideration and that it is not binding upon them. The plaintiffs contend that Court-fee is payable under Sch. II, Art. 17 (a) (1) of the Court Fees Act, that is, that the plaint is filed to obtain a declaratory decree and no consequential relief is asked. On the other hand, the defendants urge that the suit falls within s. 7, cl. (4) (c) of the Court Fees Act, in other words that the plaintiffs seek to obtain a declaratory decree as well as consequential relief. The learned Subordinate Judge agreeing with the defendants' contention directed the plaintiffs to pay additional Court-fee.

A preliminary objection was raised by the defendants-respondents that the decision of the lower Court is final under s. 12, of the Court Fees Act. This objection must be overruled as the question is concluded by the authority of Lakshmi Amma v. Janamajayan Nambiyar (1), where it was held that a decision as to the category to which a suit or appeal belongs is not final.

The real question, therefore, to be decided is, whether the suit is governed by s. 7, cl. (4) (c) or by Sch. II, Art. 17 (a) (1). The answer must, in my opinion, depend upon the relief which the plaintiff prays for, because Court-fee must be determined with reference to the prayer contained in the plaint. The plaintiffs here ask for a declaration that the mortgage is not supported by consideration and is not binding upon them. The learned Subordinate Judge thinks that the plaintiffs have asked, or perhaps he thinks ought to have asked, for not merely a declaration but also for consequential relief, namely the setting aside of the document. Maclean, C. J., seems with respect to have stated the law correctly on this point in his judgment in Zinnatunnessa Khatun v. Girindra Nath Mukeriee (2): "The safest course in these cases is to ascertain what the plaintiff actually asks for by his plaint, and not to speculate upon what may be the alterior effect of his success." If that test is applied, the suit has been properly valued, and the order of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be supported.

But the same result would follow although a different line of reasoning is adopted as has been done in Chingacham Vitil Sankaran Nair v. Chingacham Vitil Gopala Menon (3) and Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangaswamy Pillai (4) and Vellora Karuppan Vetil

v. Kallur Vengayil (5). The plaintiffs not being parties to the document, it is settled law, that they are not bound to get rid of it by having it actually cancelled. The first two of these three decisions lay down that the Courts must look at the substance of the plaint and not at the language of it, and if the plaintiff is bound to have the document set aside, the plaint must be treated as including a prayer for consequential relief; but if it is not incumbent on the plaintiff to get rid of the document, the plaint must be treated as one for a declaration only. In the present case, the plaintiffs are not parties to the document in question and even applying this test, the suit is merely one for declaration.

Were the matter res integra I would base my decision on the principle accepted by the Calcutta High Court. It seems to me not logical to say that the relief is not properly valued because the plaint does not ask for an appropriate remedy. If the plaintiff is bound to ask both for a declaration and the setting aside of a document but prays merely for a declaration, in my opinion, the suit must be treated for purposes of Court-fees as one for declaration. It is not for the Court to say that the plaintiff should have framed his plaint differently and, if he had done so, a higher Court-fee would become payable and, therefore, the plaint before the Court should be treated as containing a prayer which it does not in truth contain. If a plaintiff contents himself with asking for a declaration, whereas he ought to ask for a declaration and consequential relief, the suit is liable to be dismissed not because of improper valuation of the suit, but because it infringes the provision of s. 42 of the Specific Relief Act which enacts that no Court shall give relief by way of a declaration where the plaintiff is able to seek further relief but omits to do so. It is unnecessary to pursue this matter further. The matter is concluded by authority and so far as the present point is concerned, whichever line of argument is accepted, the same result follows.

Lastly, an objection was taken that the order having been made in the course of a suit, is not liable to be revised by this Court. In similar cases the High Court exercised its powers in revision and, in my opinion, rightly and I overrule this objection.

In the result, the civil revision petition is allowed and the costs will be costs in the cause.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.
Dr S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal has arisen was brought in order to avoid a certain transfer of what was alleged to be joint family property, made by one Madhuban Das on the 27th November 1903.

The suit was brought by two sons of Madhuban Das and one son of Sri Kishen who was brother of Madhuban Das. Sri Kishen himself was arrayed as a defendant in the case.

It is not necessary for me to enter into the grounds taken in the memorandum of appeal for a question of limitation has now arisen on the case put forward by Mr. Sen who appears for the repondents. According to this argument the suit was in reality time-barred, and so it appears to be having regard to the recent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Ranodip Singh v. Parmeshwar Prasad (1) decided by the Judicial Committee on the 17th of November 1924.

The principle laid down by their Lordships in that case is that, if at the date of the transfer there was in existence any person who had a cause of action for a suit to set aside the alienation, time begins to run and cannot be extended by the subsequent birth of other members of the family who would also be entitled to challenge the alienation. It is admitted here that on the date on which the alienation was made Sri Kishen was in existence and had a right to challenge the alienation which was made by his brother, and that being so, time expired, either after twelve years from the 27th November 1903 or after three years from the date on which Sri Kishan attained majority. It is admitted that, taking into account either period, the suit must be deemed to be barred. I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court-fees on the higher scale.

Partnership—Partner—Arrangement to share in profits, effect of—Appeal, second—Partner or agent—Mixed question of law and fact.

An arrangement to share in the profits does not necessarily show that the person who shares such profits is a partner of the firm; but this fact must be considered along with the evidence relating to other characteristics of a partnership, such as sharing of losses, etc., in arriving at a conclusion whether the parties intended to carry on business in partnership. [p. 664, col. 1.]

The question whether a person is a partner with or agent of another is a mixed question of fact and law, which the High Court is entitled to consider in second appeal. [ibid.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the District Judge, West Tanjore, in A. S. No. 254 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Tanjore, in O. S. No. 171 of 1919.

Appeal against an order of the Court of the District Munsif, West Tanjore at Tanjore, dated the 6th April 1923, in A. S. No. 71 of 1922, preferred against the final decree in, O. S. No. 171 of 1919, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Tanjore.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. Varada Chariar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal by the defendant arises in connection with a preliminary decree passed by the District Munsif of Tanjore in a suit instituted by the plaintiff for the recovery of the amount found due to him on settlement of accounts on the ground that he has been an agent under the defendant in a trade which the latter had been carrying on, on the understanding that his remuneration was to be one-fourth of the total profits of each year. The suit was for the recovery of one-fourth share in the profits deducting out of it Rs. 488-3-6 due by the plaintiff to the defendant The defendant-appellant contended amongst other things, that the plaintiff was not an agent, that he, the plaintiff and one Natesa Chetty not a party to the suit, had been trading in partnership business, that the plaintiff was entitled to one-fourth share of the profits only on the footing of a partner, that he was bound to bear a proportionate share of the losses like any other partner and that the account should be examined on that basis.

The main issue for decision is whether the plaintiff is a partner along with the defendant and another as alleged by the defendant, or whether the plaintiff was only an agent as alleged by him in the plaint. The learned District Munsif, on an examination of the evidence oral and documentary in the case, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was a partner entitled to one-fourth share of the profits after bearing his due share of the losses of the firm and that the amount due to the plaintiff should be found out on an examination of the accounts of the firm on that basis. In that view he passed a preliminary decree directing the appointment of a Commissioner to examine the accounts and settle the amounts due to the several partners. On appeal the learned District Judge in a very short judgment came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was not a partner but only an agent of the firm and that the accounts should be examined on the basis that he as an agent was entitled to one-fourth share of the net profits. He, therefore, set aside the decree of the District Munsif and remanded the suit to the lower Court for passing a final decree in accordance with his findings.

In this second appeal only one question has been argued, whether the plaintiff is a partner of the defendant or simply an agent. The learned Vakil for the appellant has contended before us that the conclusion of the learned District Judge that the plaintiff is only an agent is based upon a misconstruction of the accounts of the firm and a misreading of the documentary evidence in the case. As the question is one of mixed fact and law, we are entitled to test the correctness of the learned Judge's conclusion by an examination of the relevant evidence in the case and this is what has been done in the course of the arguments by the learned Vakils appearing for both the parties.

An arrangement to share in the profits does not necessarily show that the person who shares such profits is a partner of the firm; but this fact will have to be considered along with the evidence relating to other characteristics of a partnership such as sharing of losses, etc., in arriving at a conclusion whether the parties intended to carry on business in partnership. Apart from the oral evidence which is not very conclusive, two sets of documents have been referred to in this case (1) income-tax papers, especially Exs. K and X (2), the accounts of the firm. As regards the income-tax papers, it may be said that they do not help the case of the plaintiff very much and are at best only inconclusive. Exhibit K, a copy of the income-tax appeal petition preferred by the defendant no doubt says that he alone carried on his trade individually but the K form notice was issued in the three joint names of the plaintiff, Appavoo Chetty, and the defendant. In Ex. X, which is a statement in writing given before the Tahsildar by the plaintiff he describes himself as a partner of Chocalingam Chettiar, the defendant says "We have been carrying on business in partnership for the last six or seven years." This document is dated the 26th of October 1918 and the plaintiff has clearly stated in it that he has been carrying on a joint trade. As already stated these income-tax papers and Ex. J relied on by the learned Vakil for the respondent do not enable us to express an opinion one way or the other definitely; but a perusal of the accounts filed in this case conclusively shows that the plaintiff was a partner with the defendant and not his agent. Three settlements of accounts in this case have been brought to our notice (1) at the end of the first year accounts were settled and the profits were divided between the plaintiff and the defendant, (2) in the second year there was no division of the profits (3). Exhibit II shows the settlements of accounts for three years excluding the first year. These settlements of accounts show that amounts are carried forward from one year to another year and that in doing so, interest charged as outstandings is taken into consideration as also the value of the stock on hand. What is most important is that the adjustment shows that in making a division of profits the profits allotted to each share are set off and adjusted towards the prior debit. It is not satisfactorily explained as to why the plaintiff has been debited with loss. His own case was that the loss of any year should not be taken into consideration against him; but we find that at least one debit for loss had been made to the plaintiff and this has not been satisfactorily explained. The plaintiff is nowhere described as 'karyain' in the accounts. It appears to us that the learned District Judge has not interpreted the accounts correctly. A perusal of these accounts shows that the plaintiff must have been a partner and not an agent of the defendant.

We, therefore, set aside the order of the District Judge directing the Commissioner to take an account on the basis that the appellant is an agent entitled to one-fourth share of the profits and remanding the suit to the lower Court for passing a final decree on that basis. We agree with the District

Munsif that the accounts should be examined on the basis that the plaintiff is a partner. We, therefore restore the preliminary decree passed by him. The appellant will get his costs here and in the Court below.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER No. 385 OF 1923.

The District Munsif after the passing of the preliminary decree heard objections and passed a final decree. As that preliminary decree was modified by the District Judge he set aside the final decree and remanded the suit for a fresh final decree. As we have now set aside his decree passed in appeal against the preliminary decree passed by the District Munsif, the District Judge will have to hear the appeal filed against the District Munsif's final decree and dispose of it according to law. We, therefore, set aside his order for passing a fresh final decree and direct him to hear the appeal against the final decree. We make no order as to costs in this civil miscellaneous appeal.

Decree-holder, one of several, purchasing property at auction-sale in lieu of decretal amount—Purchase, whether on behalf of all decree-holders—Presumption.

Ordinarily if one of several decree-holders purchases property belonging to the judgment-debtor at the auction-sale in lieu of the decretal amount, the purchase, in the absence of anything positive to the contrary, must be deemed to have been made on behalf of all the interested decree-holders. The conduct of some of the decree-holders may, however, preclude such a presumption in a particular case. [p. 666, cols. 1 & 2; p. 667, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Agra.

Mr. Gulzari Lal and Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal arising out of a suit for recovery of possession of one-third share in certain properties. The Courts below have differed. The Court of first instance decreed the claim but the lower Appellate Court has dismissed it so far as possession of the property is concerned but has awarded a decree for money in stead.

In 1887 a mortgage was made by one Chhatta in favour of Makhan Lal and the defendants jointly for a sum of Rs. 2,700 About the last day of limitation a suit was instituted by the mortgagees other than Makhan Lal for sale on the strength of a certified copy, the original document being in possession of Makhan Lal who had himself neither instituted a suit nor joined with the others. Makhan Lal also held certain subsequent mortgages and he was, therefore, impleaded in a dual capacity as a mortgagee and a subsequent mortgagee. It is true that Makhan Lal made some attempts after the institution of the suit to have his name transferred from the array of the defendants to that of the plaintiffs but that application was rejected presumably on the ground that he being also a subsequent mortgagee could not be impleaded as a plaintiff. The suit was decreed on the 13th of April 1911, and a final decree for a sum of Rs. 10,000 and odd was passed on the 21st of February 1913. In this decree Makhan Lal was shown among the defendants-judgment-debtors although no doubt he was also a co-mortgagee. The decree-holders namely the mortgagees other than Makhan Lal applied for permission to bid at auction-sale and permission was granted to them. On the 23rd of August 1916 the entire mortgaged property was put up at auction and purchased by the decree-holders (namely, the mortgagees other than Makhan Lal) for a sum of Rs. 5,800. As the personal remedy had become barred by time it was impossible to realize the balance of the decretal amount.

Had the property fetched more than the decretal amount, Makhan Lal would have also received some money on account of his subsequent mortgages. As the property was sold for less amount than was due on the prior mortgage his subsequent mortgages became useless to him. He applied to the Court of the Collector who had sold the property as an ancestral one for setting aside the sale. The first application was dated the 16th of September 1916 and in this he complained that Piare Lal one of the plaintiffs had purchased the property for the decree-holders at an inadequate price and that the sale should be set aside. Before the Collector Makhan Lal at one time expressed his readiness to pay up the purchase-money and have the sale set aside. The case was postponed but no arrangement could be made and, therefore, ultimately he asked the Collector to finally set aside the sale.

On the 15th of June, the Collector set aside the sale but on an appeal to the Commissioner preferred by the plaintiffs-decree-holders the order of the Collector was set aside and the sale confirmed, it being held that the property had been sold for an adequate price. After this the decree-holders apparently certified payment of part of the decretal amount and obtained a sale certificate in their own names. In that Makhan Lal's name is shown as one of the judgment-debtors. It is a fact that they did not pay any cash towards the purchase-money but the sale consideration was set off as part payment of the decretal amount.

Makhan Lal has since instituted the present suit claiming as a co-mortgagee that he is entitled to get one-third of the property purchased by his other co-mortgagees.

The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the conduct of Makhan Lal in the proceedings to set aside the sale did not preclude him from falling back on his rights as a co-mortgagee. He was of opinion that inasmuch as the property had been acquired out of the decretal amount which was due jointly to all the mortgagees, Makhan Lal was entitled to get a share in the property.

On appeal the learned District Judge has taken a contrary view. He came to the conclusion that the decree-holders did not use more than their share of the mortgage-money when they subsequently set off the purchase price of Rs. 5,800. He also thought that the property purchased must be deemed to have been purchased by the decree-holders themselves and that Makhan Lal has no interest in it. He, however, granted Makhan Lal a decree for the sum of money representing his share in the sale-proceeds.

The case came up before a Single Judge of this Court who has referred it to a Bench of two Judges.

It cannot be disputed that as a general proposition of law, if only one of several decree-holders purchases the property at auction in lieu of the decretal amount the purchase in the absence of anything positive to the contrary must be deemed to have been made on behalf of all the interested decree-holders. This was the view clearly expressed in the Full Bench case of Kesri v. Ganga Sahai (1). The decision in that case was affirmed on appeal by their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (2). The learned Subordinate Judge, however, relied on the case of Ramjas Das v. Mohan Lal (3) decided by a Single Judge of this Court reported as Ramjas Das v. Mohan Lal (3), where the opinion was expressed that even though a mortgagee is not actually a decree-holder but a pro forma defendant and even though the property is purchased ostensibly in the name of the decree-holders, the mortgagee-respondent may be entitled to a share in it if the purchase is made in lieu of the decretal amount. On the other hand, the learned Advocate for the respondents has invited our attention to another judgment of a Single Judge of this Court in Second Appeal No. 911 of 1921, decided on the 1st of December 1922 which was affirmed in an appeal under the Letters Patent No. 47 of 1923) on the 3rd of May 1923 which seems to uphold a contrary view. Even if it be conceded that ordinarily if the purchase is made by the decree-holders in lieu of the decretal amount and the payment is merely set off against the decree then it may be deemed that the purchase is made on behalf of all the persons interested in the decretal amount whether plaintiffs or defendants. We have to see whether that inference can be properly drawn in view of the conduct of both the parties throughout the proceedings in this case. We have noted that Makhan Lal, to start with, had refused to join in the suit and had not himself brought any suit within limitation on the basis of the original document which he retained in his possession. Then he occupied a double capacity namely of co-mortgagee as well as of subsequent mortgagee. When the decree was passed, permission was granted to the decree-holders to bid. Makhan Lal apparently made no attempt to bid himself. After the sale had taken place Makhan Lal applied to have the sale set aside. In his application he clearly stated that Piare Lal had purchased the property for the decree-holders. He never suggested that the purchase had also been made in his interest. Throughout those proceedings his attitude was that the sale should be set aside and the property re-sold so that he himself may bid and purchase it at a higher figure thereby either getting a larger share in the sale-proceeds or also getting something towards his subsequent mortgages. At one stage he was even prepared to pay down the money and have the sale set aside but that he ultimately did not do. When the sale was set aside by the Collector the other mortgagees appealed to the Commissioner and inspite of Makhan Lal's opposition, the appeal was decreed. Later on the other decree-holders applied for the sale certificate and the sale certificate was granted to them only. Having regard to the attitude of both the parties it is impossible to draw the inference that when the purchase was made it was made on behalf of Makhan Lal also. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Ganga Sahai v. Kesri (2), remarked that the Courts in India cannot but refuse to allow one decree-holder to perpetrate a fraud against his co-decree-holders under cover of any of the provisions of the C. P. C. In this particular case it cannot be suggested that any fraud was attempted to be perpetrated or was, in fact, perpetrated on Makhan Lal, who knew full well what was happening. It is true that the property was purchased in lieu of the decretal amount. It is also true that the decree-holders did not pay down the money in cash nor deposit the share of Makhan Lal in Court but, in our opinion, these circumstances by themselves would not justify us in presuming that the sale was made for Makhan Lal also when the conduct of both the parties was such as to preclude any such presumption.

In this view of the matter we are of opinion that it is no longer possible to hold that Makhan Lal has actually an interest in the property which was purchased.

We accordingly uphold the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

BACHU NARANAPPA AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFF AND DEFENDANT No. 2—RESPONDENTS.

Hindu Law—Widow—Compromise by widow, whether amounts to alienation—Reversioner, whether bound.

Whether a compromise entered into by a Hindu widow is bona fide and binding on the reversioners or amounts to an alienation depends upon the terms obtained by the widow in the compromise, i.e., whether she was surrendering any portion of her rights as ascertained with reference to the facts, and how much, whether she was reserving any benefit for herself personally as opposed to the estate, and whether the real facts were known to her. The fact that the widow obtains a benefit under the compromise which is peculiar to herself would be good proof of want of bona fides. [p 668, col. 1.]

Where a Hindu widow obtains under a compromise a portion of her husband's estate absolutely for herself, the enlargement of her personal estate does not bind the reversioners, and the antecedent title with reference to which she obtains the property being that of her husband the rights of the reversioners with regard to that property are not destroyed. [ibid.]

Where a compromise by which a Hindu widow surrenders property to which she is entitled on the true facts is held to be not bona fide, it amounts to an alienation and is not binding on the reversioners. [p. 668, col. 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Anantapur, in Appeal No. 80 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Anantapur, in O. S. No. 115 of 1920.

Messrs. A. Venkatrayaliah and L. Venkatanarasiah, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The 2nd defendant sued the 1st defendant for recovery of her husband's share of the family properties alleging that her husband and 1st defendant were divided. The Original Suit No. 708 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif of Penukonda was compromised by which she admitted there was no division, accepted three acres and odd absolutely for herself, and gave up the rest of the property moveable and immoveable. The Courts below found that the compromise was binding on the parties to it and no fraud on the 2nd defendant (the then plaintiff) has been proved but that the 2nd defendant and the 1st defendant colluded and entered into the compromise, by which she obtained a benefit personal for herself and it is not binding on the plaintiff who is the reversioner. In all such cases the questions (1) whether the compromise of the widow is bona fide and (2) whether the compromise amounts to an alienation depend on the true facts as found in the later suit, on the terms obtained by the widow in the compromise, i. e., whether she was surrendering any portion of her rights as now ascertained with reference to the facts and how much, whether she was reserving any benefit for herself personally as opposed to the estate, and lastly whether the real facts were known to her. That she obtained a benefit peculiar to herself should be a good proof of want of bona fides. [See Imrit Konwur v. Roop Narain Singh (1) distinguished Ramsumran Prasad v. Shyam Kumari, (2).]

In the first place as to the three acres obtained by the widow it is clear that the compromise in this case cannot be upheld on the footing of a family settlement for the widow did not act for herself and the enlargement of her personal estate cannot bind the reversioner. The antecedent title, with reference to which, she got the three and odd acres was that of her husband and plaintiff still remains a reversioner for that property [Khuuni Lal v. Gobind Krishna Narain (3).]

Coming to the rest, the Courts below have found that the facts are such that the compromise could not be bona fide. The 2nd defendant went to Court on the footing that there was a division but abandoned it for no apparent reason whereas the division is now completely established and must have been known to her. [see Sant Kumar v. Deo Savan (4).] The decision in Madan Lal v. Chuttan Singh (5), is a decision on the facts. In Behari Lal v. Daud Husain (6), the lower Appellate Court found there was a bona fide settlement and the finding was accepted by the High Court.

(6) 18 Ind. Cas. 721; 35 A. 240; 11 A. L. J. 352.

In Kadakkari. Nadan v. Nadakkannu Nadan (7), there was no finding when the case came up originally before the High Court. A finding on the question whether the compromise was bona fide was called for. The District Judge found it was bona fide and the finding was accepted by the High Court. As to Timmaji Amma Garu v. Subbaraju Nayanivaru (8), it is enough to observe that Imrit Konwur v. Roop Narain Singh (1) and Sant Kumar v. Deo Saran (4) were concurred and that I cannot agree with all other observations in it. It seems to me that, whenever a compromise by which the widow surrenders property to which she is entitled on the true facts, has been found to be not bona fide, it amounts to an alienation.

It may be that in Timmaji Amma Garu v. Subbaraju Nayanivaru (8), the compromise was bona fide.

The second appeal is dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Succession—Sons of pre-deceased son, whether entitled to succeed along with surviving sons—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 22.

On the death of a separated Hindu his property must be divided among his sons and his grandsons by a predeceased son, the latter being entitled to the share to which their father would have been entitled had he been alive. The same rule applies to the devolution of the tenancy rights possessed by the deceased by virtue of the rule laid down in s. 22 of the Agra Tenancy Act.

Second appeal against a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 1st of May 1923.

Mr. Shiva Prasad Sinha, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two Appeals Nos. 986 and 987 of 1923 arise from similar circumstances, the only difference being that in one case the property in dispute is zemindari property and in the other case it is a tenancy.

One Kanhaiya had six sons, one of these being Ramjas. The respondents in these appeals, who were the plaintiffs in the Court of first instance, are sons of Ramjas. They are suing to recover a sixth share in the property left by their grandfather Kanhaiya. It has been found, as a matter of fact, that Kanhaiya died separate from his sons and grandsons. The question raised is whether Kanhaiya's property would go only to his sons or also to his grandsons by a deceased son.

So far as zemindari property is concerned it is conceded that the defendants-appellants have no case. The property is bound to be divided into six shares and one share must go to the sons of Kanhaiya's deceased son Ramjas.

So far as the tenancy is concerned it is contended that the nearer male descendant must exclude the more remote ones. The law or the point is laid down in s. 22 of the Tenancy Act, 1901, and is as follows:—

"When.....a tenant dies, his interest in the holding shall devolve as follows:—

(a) on his male lineal descendants in the male line of descent."

According to the language of the law the tenancy is to go to the male lineal descendants in the male line of descent. The word "descendants" would imply that there may be more than one descendant and they also may be in different degrees. No particular principle is involved in the rule which may indicate that the remote descendants were to be excluded by the nearer ones. In the circumstances the letter of the law and the spirit of the law are one and the same and the nephews and the sons all must share.

The result is that the appeals fail and they are hereby dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

The terms of a mortgage in favour of the plaintiff were as follows:—"Having given to you the land for cultivation for an equal share for a period of three years, I have taken a loan of Rs. 750. This amount shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per year and the interest of each year shall be added on to the principal amount and the same accumulated. You shall obtain payment of the principal and interest by means of sale of the mortgaged property. As regards the rajabhagam paddy, etc., you shall be given the rajabhagam paddy at the rajabhagam rates." Eight years after the date of the mortgage the mortgagor gave a lease of the mortgaged property to the defendant who dispossessed the plaintiff. In a suit by the latter for possession:

Held, (1) that the document was in its terms neither a simple nor a usufructuary mortgage but was an anomalous mortgage and the rights of the parties must be determined according to its terms; [p. 670, cols. 1 & 2.]

(2) that the plaintiff had only a right to keep possession of the property for a period of three years fixed in the deed; [p. 670, col. 2.]

(3) that plaintiff's continuance in possession subsequently on payment of the rajabhagam to the mortgagor created an implied tenancy which in this case was a yearly one, the property leased being agricultural land; [ibid.]

(4) that till the plaintiff's tenancy was properly and legally put an end to, he was entitled to enforce it. [ibid.]

Appeal against an order of remand of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Berhampore, dated the 8th September 1922, and made in Appeal Suit No. 28 of 1922 (Appeal Suit No. 258 of 1920, on the file of the District Court of Ganjam), preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Aska, in Original Suit No. 335 of 1919.

This appeal came on for hearing on the 4th of December 1923.

Mr. C. Sambasiva Rao, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. Rama Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of remand by the Additional Subordinate Judge of Berhampore, in a suit brought by the respondent-plaintiff for the recovery of possession of the suit land from the 1st defendant who is now in possession. The land admittedly belongs to one Sadhuvani. The plaintiff claims from her under the deed, Ex. A of 1909, the construction of which is one of the questions argued before us. The 1st defendant claims by a lease, Ex. II, dated 1917, from the same lady, Sadhuvani. The District Munsif held that the plaintiff had no right to possession at all under Ex. A, and without further considering the case dismissed his suit. On appeal the Subordinate Judge has sent the case down for trial on the merits. He is apparently of opinion that the document is an anomalous mortgage, and that its terms are ambiguous and that further extraneous evidence should be adduced to explain its terms. The respondent before us has not attempted to support this view that there is anything ambiguous and that extraneous evidence should be allowed to explain its terms. We are of the same opinion. We think that the order of the Subordinate Judge that extraneous evidence should be allowed is not correct. Exhibit A says: "Having given to you the land described in para. 3 for cultivation for an equal share for a period of three years, I have taken a loan of Rs. 750." It then sets out the way in which Rs. 750 has been accounted for. It then sets out further: "This amount shall bear interest at the rate of Rs. 10 per cent. per year and the interest of each year shall be added on to the principal amount and the same accumulated. You shall obtain payment of the principal and interest by means of sale of the mortgaged property. As regards the rajabhagam paddy, etc., you shall be giving the rajabhagam paddy at the rajabhagam rates. If the rajabhagam paddy for any year is not delivered in that year, the above-mentioned amount, namely, the mortgage amount, shall not bear interest." And it contains a further covenant that "in that event the mortgagee shall realize the money due to him by sale of a portion or sufficient part of the mortgaged land and leave the remaining lands to the mortgagor." The document is certainly in its terms neither a simple mortgage nor a usufructuary mortgage. It is not a simple mortgage as possession of the property has been given to the mortgagee and it is not a usufructuary mortgage because there is no provision that any portion of the usufruct should be taken towards the principal or the interest on the mortgage. It is, we think, an anomalous mortgage and we should decide the rights of the parties under it according to its terms under s. 98 of the Transfer of Property Act. It is suggested that this is really a lease for a period of three years. We are unable to accede to that suggestion as it has got the necessary incidents of a mortgage. There is the mortgage-money with the provision for interest on it, there is a provision for the sale of the property for realizing the mortgage money and there is a provision made also for possession of the property being given to the mortgagee for a fixed period. Under the document we have come to the conclusion that the respondent-mortgagee has only a right to keep possession of the property for a period of three years fixed in the deed and after the completion of the period of three years the covenant says: "You shall obtain payment of the principal and interest by means of sale of the mortgaged property." That is, he can sell up the property and realize the money. There is the further covenant that if the rajabhagam paddy is not paid in any year, that is, even within three years, the mortgage-money shall become payable and shall be realized by sale of the property within that period itself though it will not carry interest for that year. In our view, under the document itself the plaintiff cannot be said to have any further right to possession of the property and his right to sell the property for realizing his money within three years has long ago expired as the mortgage is of 1909. But it has been alleged that though three years have expired the mortgagee has continued to be in possession of this property for several years after that paying rajabhagam to the owner of the land, the mortgagor, and that the same had been received by the owner, Sadhuvani That, we think, would have created a right in the plaintiff in the nature of an implied tenancy; as this is agricultural land, the tenancy will be a yearly one. Till that tenancy is properly and legally put an end to, the plaintiff would certainly have a right of tenancy which he could enforce in this suit. The question whether the mortgagee continued in possession after the expiry of the three years and did pay rajabhagam to the mortgagor and whether the mortgagor did receive that rajabhagam has not been dealt with by the Subordinate Judge. We must, therefore, call for a finding from him on this question. If the Subordinate Judge finds that a tenancy has been so created, he will also consider the question whether that tenancy has been properly determined before the date of the suit, as there is a plea on the defendants' side that by a notice to quit the tenancy has been so determined. The finding on these two points will be returned on the evidence on record. If the Subordinate Judge finds in favour of the plaintiff on the above questions he would also return a finding upon the third issue in the case and the parties will be allowed to adduce fresh evidence on that issue as it does not seem to have been tried by the District Munsif. The finding will be returned in two months from the date of the receipt of this order and ten days for objections.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Subordinate Judge of Berhampore submitted the following FINDINGS.—1. In obedience to the remand order issued by the High Court on 4th December 1923, the following finding is submitted.

2. The issues framed by the High Court and sent down to this Court for recording findings are:—

(1) Did the mortgagee continue in possession of the suit land after the expiry of the three years and pay rajabhagam to the mortgagor and did the mortgagor receive that rajabhagam?

(2) If it is found that an implied tenancy has been so created, was that tenancy properly determined before the date of suit?

(3) To what damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled?

3. 1st issue.—Sadhuvani who was the mortgagor under Ex. A swore as P. W. No. 3 that the plaintiff continued in possession of the suit land after the expiry of the lease on 3rd July 1912, and was in possession even when she gave a lease to the 1st defendant on 10th May 1917 (Ex. II). She further stated that the plaintiff was paying rajabhagam to her in respect of the suit land from 1912 until he was dispossessed of the land by the 1st defendant in December 1918. P. W. No. 1 also stated that the plaintiff was paying rajabhagam on the suit land to Sadhuvani until he was dispossessed from the land. This witness was a prior mortgagee of the suit land from Sadhuvani. The defendants did not adduce any rebutting evidence on this point. I believe the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 3 and find the 1st issue in the affirmative.

4. 2nd issue.—It is clear from the evidence above set forth that plaintiff was treated as a tenant by Sadhuvani and that she had no right to eject him from the suit land without proper notice to quit. The defendants say that Ex. C is a notice to quit sent to plaintiff by Sadhuvani and 1st defendant after the execution of Ex. II. Exhibit C is dated 12th May 1917. It recites that Sadhuvani gave a lease of the suit land to the 1st defendant on 10th May 1917 and that plaintiff should quit the suit lands within eight days after the receipt of the notice. This is the only paper relied on by the defendants in support of their plea that the plaintiff's tenancy was determined by a notice to quit. I am of opinion that this notice is improper inasmuch as the plaintiff was asked to vacate the suit land in eight days after the receipt of the notice. Even a tenancy from month to month cannot be determined by a notice to quit in eight days. The defendants' Vakil did not quote any authority in support of his contention. I accordingly find on the 2nd issue that the plaintiff's tenancy was not properly determined before the date of suit.

5. 3rd issue.—The parties were invited to adduce further evidence on this issue. The plaintiff did not examine any new witnesses The defendants, however, examined two new witnesses on the question of damages.

6. The suit land consists of 3 acres 96 cents of which 2 acres 84 cents are river fed, 73 cents rain fed and 39 cents dry. The other item comprised in the plaint schedule is a vacant dwelling site, and it does not fetch any income. P. W. No. 1 stated in his evidence that plaintiff raised crop on the suit land in 1918 and that the defendants had cut and carried it away. He stated that the suit land yielded 10 bharanams of paddy in 1918, and that the paddy was sold at Rs. 20 per bharanam. P. W. No. 2 stated that the suit land yielded 9 or 10 bharanams of paddy in 1918 and that its price was Rs. 30 per bharanam. D. W. No. 2 stated that 1918 was famine year and that the suit land yielded 1 or 2 nauties of paddy per bharanam. D. W. No. 3 stated that the Government gave remission in 1918, that the suit land yielded 1 to 3 nauties of paddy per bharanam, and that the suit land was partly watered by the river Bodonadi. The documentary evidence available to the defendants to show that 1918 was a famine year was not adduced. The karnam of the village should have been summoned to show the exact yield of the land in 1918. I disbelieve the oral evidence adduced by the defendants. The plaintiff has claimed Rs. 200 as damages. His witnesses have proved that the plaintiff had raised the crop in 1918 and that the defendants had carried it away. The plaintiff is, therefore, entitled to the entire yield of the suit land in 1918. I accept the estimate given by P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2 as correct, and find that the plaintiff is entitled to Rs. 200 as damages.

This appeal came on for final hearing after the return of the findings of the lower Appellate Court.

JUDGMENT.—We accept the findings and as the result we give a decree to plaintiff for possession of the suit lands and mesne profits Rs. 200. Plaintiff will have his costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata—Landlord and tenant—Suit for rent—Ex parte decree—Ejectment suit—Decree, whether operates as res judicata.

Where a plaintiff, alleging himself to be the landlord of the defendant sues the latter for rent and obtains an ex parte decree against him, which is subsequently satisfied by the defendant, the decree operates as res judicata on the question of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the parties in a subsequent suit for ejectment.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—This is an appeal by the principal defendant in a suit for ejectment. The plaintiffs' case was that they with the pro forma defendants owned 8-annas of the defendant's jama and the first defendant was an under-raiyat. The allegation of the first defendant was that he was an occupancy raiyat and that he had held the land for more than 20 years.

The two points urged before us were, firstly, that the ex parte decree referred to in the judgment which was obtained by the plaintiffs against the defendant for rent and which was subsequently satisfied did not operate as res judicata as the lower Appellate Court has found that it did. It is stated that as there was no judgment at all but merely a decree passed it is impossible to say whether the issue was actually decided. But it seems to us that this argument is untenable and that the lower Appellate Court was quite right in holding that the ex parte decree which was subsequently satisfied operated as res judicata on the question of landlord and tenant.

Secondly, it is urged that the lower Appellate Court was wrong in finding that the plaintiffs were the sole landlords. This matter, however, seems to us to have been decided by the ex parte decree as the lower Appellate Court has found. These are the only questions that were urged before us and for the reasons which I have stated they do not seem to be of any weight.

The appeal, accordingly, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Chakravarti, J.—I agree.

Burmese Buddhist Law—Adoption—Kittima adoption—Apatittha adoption—Surrounding circumstances —Relationship of parties—Amendment of plaint—Alternative claim.

Among the Burmese, the keittima and the apatittha forms of adoption are quite distinct. The former is an adoption with a view to inherit and the latter merely for bringing up the child out of pity. [p. 676, col. 2; p. 677, col. 1.]

The Burmese expression for the English word "adopted" does not clearly give the idea of adoption as one's own child. The expression is used in connection both with the kittima form of adoption and the apatittha form. Therefore, the use of the expression by an alleged adoptor without the necessary amplifying words is not a sufficient proof of a kittima adoption. [p. 676, col. 2.]

The treatment of a niece by his alleged adoptive father somewhat like a daughter does not raise any presumption of an adoption with a view to inherit, especially when she is an orphan child. If the parties were strangers the fact would be very important. [p. 677, col. 2.]

A plaint based on a kittima adoption cannot be amended in appeal by an alternative claim of an apatittha adoption, as the two forms of adoption are entirely different. [p. 679, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Maung Kin, Offg. C. J.—The point for consideration in this appeal is whether Maung Shwe Din and his wife, Ma Nan Ton, adopted Ma Kin as their daughter with a view to inherit from them.

The appellants, Maung San Thein, Ma Thein Tin and Ma Hla Kin are the children of Ma Kin and they claim to be interested as heirs in the estate of Maung Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton, not only because their mother was adopted by the old couple but also because they were themselves adopted by them after the death of their mother. Their claim to have been adopted after the death of their mother may be dismissed at once; as there is no evidence to establish it. The alleged adoption of Ma Kin is claimed to have been proved by the evidence of persons present at the actual adoption, by admissions made by Maung Shwe Din to various people, by conduct on the part of Shwe Din towards Ma Kin and her children, and by evidence claimed to amount to that of publicity and notoriety of the alleged relationship.

The facts, which are either admitted or satisfactorily proved, are the following:—Ma Kin was the daughter of Ma Nan On and Maung Tha Maung. Ma Nan On and Ma Nan Ton were sisters. After she was born Ma Kin's parents were separated. Subsequently, Ma Nan On married Maung Pha. Not long after her second marriage, Ma Nan On died. Ma Kin lived in the house of Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton, when she was quite small. She continued to live there and was married there to Maung Aung Kyu. After her marriage she continued to live in the house till her death. She left the three children abovenamed. After her death, Aung Kyu left the house but the children remained on and lived there till the death of Maung Shwe Din. Of Ma Kin's three children, the boy, Maung San Thein, was entered into the priesthood by Maung Shwe Din. After the death of Ma Nan Ton, which took place some years ago, Maung Shwe Din married Ma Nge and after her death he married Ma Ma who predeceased him. At the time Ma Kin lived in the house of Maung Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton, they had no children and it does not appear that they ever had any children of their own.

The evidence as to the actual adoption is that of three witnesses, viz., Maung Pha, Ma Kin Gyi and Maung Tha Ku. The lugyis who are said to have been present are all dead. Maung Pha is Ma Nan On's second husband. He says he gave Ma Kin in adoption to Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton when she was three years old, because they said they wanted to make her their heir and asked for her for that purpose and that after the adoption Ma Kin went over to the house of her adoptive parents and lived there. Later in his evidence he said that he and Ma Nan On gave the child away and that Ma Nan On was very anxious to do so. After the adoption, the witness ceased to have any further relationship with Ma Kin. He is now a hired labourer and is obviously unreliable unless he is corroborated by independent evidence. He says that, besides the lugyis who are dead, Saya Pe Gyi and Ma Kin Gyi were present, but Saya Pe Gyi does not in his evidence claim to have been present at the adoption. Ma Kin Gyi speaks to being present at the adoption when Maung Pha gave the child away and says that Ma Nan On had died when the child was given in adoption; thus contradicting Maung Pha who says that his wife was anxious that the child should be given away. Ma Kin Gyi further says that when she saw Ma Kin in Maung Shwe Din's house the child was eight or nine years old. The witness is a resident of Tadaywa where the parties lived during the time material to this case and is now 72 years old, and one would expect her to be in a position to speak to the publicity of the alleged relationship between Ma Kin and Maung Shwe Din, but there is not a word about it in her evidence. In my opinion, such a witness as Ma Kin Gyi is not entitled to any weight in regard to such an important transaction. There is no reason shown why she should have been present. She does not claim to have been a particular friend of any of the parties to the transaction. Her evidence lacks details such as would be expected and, in my opinion, it is unconvincing. Maung Tha Ku is a man of 65. He has no occupation. He was born in Tadaywa and has always lived there. He says he was present at the adoption and that Ma Kin was two or three years old at the time. He himself was about 20 years old. He just happened to be present when the important transaction occurred. He appears to be certain that both Ma Nan On and Maung Pha were present. He was not mentioned by Maung Pha as one of those present. On his own showing, he would then be too young to have been called in to witness the transaction. He is a man of no standing at all. He, too, does not speak about the publicity of the alleged relationship. He has always lived in the village and has been a ten-house gaung and, if the general repute in the village was that Ma Kin was the adopted daughter of Maung Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton, he should have been in a position to speak about it. In my opinion, it is easy to obtain such evidence as his and it is not safe to rely on it. It seems to me to be extremely doubtful that a formal adoption, such as these witnesses have spoken to, ever took place, because there is an entire absence of evidence of repute at or about the time of the alleged adoption. Maung Pe Gyi, a man of 80 and a resident of Tada, says that Maung Shwe Din told him some forty years ago that he had adopted Ma Kin as his daughter and that Shwe Din treated her as his own child. He came to know of the adoption, because Shwe Din told him about it. He does not appear to have had any knowledge of it before then. According to him, Ma Kin would be about ten years old at the time Shwe Din told him. As regards the notoriety of the relationship he says that, after he had been told in this way, he also heard of it in the village. He admits that Shwe Din was not in the habit of telling him about his business or family affairs and he does not tell us what led to the conversation about Ma Kin. His evidence appears to show that he knew practically nothing about Ma Nan On and Maung Tha Maung. He has no personal knowledge of Ma Kin's marriage and does not appear to have been a particular friend of Maung Shwe Din. He is, by occupation, a physician and is apparently of not very good standing. He states definitely that Ma Kin was treated by Shwe Din as his own child but has to admit that he cannot say how Shwe Din would have treated Ma Kin merely as a niece. Maung Pu Ke is also a witness who was told by Shwe Din that he had adopted Ma Kin. He says this was before Ma Kin's marriage, but he was not present at her marriage nor was he invited to it. He does not appear to know much about Ma Kin till after she was thirteen or fourteen years old, because only then did he come to know that Ma Nan On was Ma Kin's mother and sister of Ma Nan Ton. He does not know where Tha Maung and Ma Nan On lived and where the latter died. He first saw Ma Kin when she was twelve or fourteen years old, and did not know before that she had been adopted by Shwe Din. Apparently, the witness did not know anything about the adoption until Ma Kin was about to marry. He also says that, after he came to know of Ma Kin's relationship with Shwe Din, he came to know that all the village also knew of it. He is a man of 74 and a resident of Tada and should, I think, have known much more about the alleged relationship than he professes to do in his evidence, and, in my opinion, if the adoption had taken place as alleged and all the village knew of it, it is rather strange that this witness should have come to know of it only when he was told of it by Shwe Din before Ma Kin's marriage and the conversation he reports between him and Shwe Din about Ma Kin lacks details, inasmuch as he merely says: "Shwe Din told me before Ma Kin got married that he had adopted her." He says nothing about what led to this conversation, so that, if Shwe Din did tell him about the position of the child in his house, the Court would be in a position to say what would have been the position assigned to her by Shwe Din. If the case was that Pu Ke and Shwe Din were great friends and were on a particular occasion talking about their domestic affairs and in particular as to what would happen if Shwe Din died and this led to the conversation about Ma Kin, there would be some reason for attaching some weight to the witness's report, but that does not appear to be the case at all. Maung Shwe Din might have told Pu Ke that he was bringing up his wife's niece or that he was giving her shelter and protection and the witness might have magnified Shwe Din's statement into something more than he meant to say. We now come to the evidence of U Wuria. The witness is 66 years old and is a pongyi. He has been at Tada for twenty-eight years. He counted Shwe Din and Ma Kin among his supporters. He says, about twenty years ago he met Ma Nan Ton and Ma Kin at the Shwedagon Pagoda and that Ma Nan Ton informed him that she had come with her daughter, Ma Kin, to Rangoon to buy bazaar. He also says that it is said in the village that Ma Kin had been adopted by the old couple. He makes out that he at first, thought that Ma Kin was Shwe Din's daughter but he had not enquired about her as Shwe Din was not at first one of his supporters and when he did enquire about her Shwe Din told him that she was a daughter of Ma Nan Ton's sister and that he and his wife had adopted her. He does not tell us when this was but he says that when he first saw her in Shwe Din's house Ma Kin was seventeen or eighteen years old and that this was about twenty years ago and before she was married. He spoke to Shwe Din about her four or five years later. So that Ma Kin must have been well over twenty years age when the pongyi asked Shwe Din about her. Thus, it is clear that he knew nothing about her, who she was and what she was to Shwe Din, before his enquiry. He produces Exs. 4 and 5 which are tapes used for binding palm leaf manuscripts. It appears that in 1275 B. E. Shwe Din began to think about making a big ahlu. Amongst the things he wanted to give away were scriptures, an image and a brass bell. The pongyi says he went up to Mandalay to buy scriptures. He appears to have bought altogether eight sets of scriptures. Of these, only two sets were bound by the tapes, that is, one tape for each of these two sets. One of the tapes has an inscription woven in it giving the names of the people who were the donors. The donors were Shwe Din, Shwe Kin, the first appellant, the eldest grandson Maung San Thein and Ma Thein Tin and Ma Hla Kin. The other tape gives no names, but it is stated on it in a general way that Shwe Din and his sons and daughters were the donors. U Wuria says that he was instructed by Maung Shwe Din to insert the names of the donors in the tapes and that he did so in one of them. It is, rather strange that similar tapes cannot be produced for the remaining six sets of scriptures. The bell has an inscription on it, but only the name of Maung Shwe Din is mentioned as the donor. (See Ex. 6, which is a true copy of the inscription). The pongyi composed it, but he says it was not under instructions from Shwe Din and he did this on his own responsibility. One would have thought that if he had been given instructions to have the names of the children of Ma Kin woven in the tapes he would naturally have put their names in the inscription which he composed, but he gave his reasons for not doing so in the following sentence in his evidence: "As all the names had been entered on the tape, Ex. 4, I did not think it necessary to repeat them in the inscription on the bell." I am unable to accept this statement at all. An inscription on the bell containing all the names of the donors would have been a more permanent memorial of their joint charitable act than an inscription on a tape. Much reliance has been placed upon Ex. 4. Taking it by itself it does not mean very much in the case. It only means that there were five persons giving an ahlu and the word " " placed before Maung San Thein's name does not really indicate much in favour of the adoption, because the three young people were Shwe Din's grandnephews and there is no other word but " " to apply to them ("" means ordinarily grandchild"). The pongyi himself admits, and it is perfectly correct, that there is no word for grandnephew in the Burmese language and that the son of a niece would be called grandson by his grand-uncle. The witness also says that nephews and nieces are sometimes, but seldom, called sons and daughters respectively, especially if they had lost their own parents. I think the pongyi would have been nearer the mark had he not put in the words "but seldom." The witness states in one part of his evidence:—"The rumours I heard in the village were to the effect that Ma Kin was a keittima adopted daughter. It means the same thing as ' ကျွန်းစားတယ်။ ' That is, why I did not use the word ' keittima ' before." I think it very doubtful that villagers would use the word "keittima" and I think the pongyi is at least exaggerating when he put "keittima" into the mouths of the villagers. So far as I know good pongyis do not care to give evidence and generally avoid being placed in a position such as would afterwards render them liable to appear as witnesses in a Court of Justice. U Wuria has given evidence in another adoption case when he produced a tape similar to Ex. 4 in support of the adoption. I do not say that there was anything wrong in that, nor is there anything wrong in giving evidence in this case. Pongyis, like others, must obey the orders of the Court, and when they are summoned to attend Courts they are bound to do so. But he has allowed a divorce-deed to be drawn up in his kyaung, although he says he had nothing to do with it. He has given evidence with regard to another document which was executed in his kyaung at the same time as the divorce-deed. I do not consider that Ex. 4 helps the case of the claimants, because there was nothing unusual in Maung Shwe Din's including the names of his grandnephews and grandnieces as co-donors with him. He was losing nothing by doing so and, according to the religious belief, the others may gain much thereby. The ahlu was not brought to a completion till 1277 B. E. and Shwe Din died in the following year. It is not far-fetched to suggest that the tape might have been made for the purpose of this case, and Mr. Dantra for the claimants argues that that suggestion is tantamount to saying that the pongyi was a party to the conspiracy, but I do not think it necessary to allege any conspiracy against the pongyi. There are indications in his evidence that he has a leaning in favour of the claimants and, if the suggestion is well-founded, he may have been induced to believe Ex. 4 to be the one he ordered and that, when he gave the order, he mentioned these names. The next witness is Maung Po. He is only forty years of age. He says he was present at Shwe Din's marriage with Ma Nge. There were lugyis present on the side of the bride and they asked Shwe Din who his heirs were and that Shwe Din said that he had a keittima daugther, Ma Kin. This marriage, according to the witness, was eight or nine years ago. He does not say what had become of the lugyis who asked the question and he is the only witness on this point on the side of the claimants. He tells a cock-and bull story of how he came to be present at the marriage. I think he is obviously a false witness. Maung Wa is another witness for the claimants. He is 56 years old and has been 30 years at Tada. About 5 years before Shwe Din's death, he was asked by Shwe Din to witness a document by which he was giving 22 acres of land to his grand-children. He also says that Shwe Din told him that Ma Kin was his adopted daughter and that this was at the time of the execution of Ex. 1. He further says that this was 4 to 8 years after he had first seen Ma Kin, but he cannot say what her age was then and can only say that she was grown up, and that, before Shwe Din told him of the adoption, he thought she was his own daughter. Taking his evidence to be wholly true, it appears that, for many years after Ma Kin was left in the house of Shwe Din, the witness did not know of the adoption. He merely says that Shwe Din told him that he had adopted Ma Kin but he does not tell us for what purpose and probably he did not question Shwe Din on the point. Where such a witness fails in doing this it is doubtful whether his evidence is of any value because the Burmese equivalent of "adopted" " ကျွန်းစားသည် " does not clearly give the idea of adoption as one's own child as the English word may. Even in the Dhammathats there is a distinction between " ကောင်းကျိုးဆိုး ကျွန် ကျွန်းစားသောသား " and ကောက်ယူကျွန်းစားသောသား ". The former expression means an adoption with a view to inherit and the latter merely brought up out of pity, the former being known as the keittima form and the latter as the apatittha form. So that the conversation, such as is reported by Maung Wa on one occasion, without any details as to what led to it is not good enough to support a claim for keittima adoption. The next witnesses are Aung Dun and Ma Tin Hlaing who are 44 and 52 years of age, respectively. Aung Dun professes to have been Ma Kin's playmate. He says, once he had a dispute with another boy as to whether Ma Kin was Shwe Din's own daughter; so he went and asked Shwe Din about it and he was told that she was his adopted daughter. His evidence is obviously useless. Ma Tin Hlaing says she first saw Ma Kin when she was about seventeen years old and that in 1257 B. E., that is, about 25 years ago, Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton told her that they had adopted Ma Kin. Ma Kin was at the time living with the old couple and treated as their daughter. She is a bazaar seller and of no standing. My remarks as to the necessity of having details of the conversation apply to this witness also. Maung Gyi, who describes himself as a playmate of Ma Kin, speaks about people saying that Ma Kin was Shwe Din's adopted daughter. He is a man of no standing. He follows a Doctor to learn eye-doctoring, but has not so far treated any patient for any eye-disease. The father of the claimants is Aung Kyu. He says he believed that the old couple were Ma Kin's natural parents when he married her, but he learnt later on that they were not her natural parents but that they had adopted her with rights of inheritance. Maung Kya Zan is a man of no occupation and is alleged to be an inveterate gambler. He also speaks to Shwe Din telling him about the adoption when he went to Shwe Din's house on a casual visit. He admits that there was no particular occasion for Shwe Din to tell him about it. His evidence is obviously useless. The result of the above review of the evidence for the claimants is, that the evidence relating to the alleged adoption is unsatisfactory and unconvincing and that the alleged admissions made by Shwe Din are not particularly useful to the claimants because some of the witnesses who speak to them are not worthy of credit and also because, even if the admissions were made, they are not so clear and unequivocal as to amount to admissions of a keittima adoption. The use of the words " ငဖ:ဝ:ဝ:ဝ:ဝ်ဒ် " by witnesses without the necessary amplifying words is not a sufficient proof of a keittima adoption because, as I had said before, the expression can be used in connection with both the keittima form of adoption and the apatittha form. Further there is no evidence of publicity of the relationship at or about the time of the alleged adoption and the evidence adduced to show the existence of subsequent publicity of the relationship is meagre and insufficient inasmuch as most of the witnesses did not know of the relationship by repute until they were actually told about it by Shwe Din. The fact that Ma Kin was treated by Shwe Din somewhat like a daughter might be useful to the claimants if Ma Kin was not his wife's niece. If Ma Kin was a stranger to Shwe Din, that fact would be very important. The fact that Ma Nan Ton called Ma Kin her daughter is not an unusual factor in a case like this. She would naturally, as is the custom amongst the Burmese, call her niece her daughter, especially when she was an orphan child. Similarly the fact that Shwe Din called the claimants his grandnephews and nieces is also of not much use. There is an entire absence of evidence to show how Ma Kin addressed Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton. As in almost every adoption case the way the alleged adopted child addresses the adoptive parents is considered to be important one way or the other and much is generally made of the fact that the claimant called the alleged adoptive parents father and mother. The absence of evidence on this point leads one to assume that Ma Kin never called Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton father and mother. The claimants rely on certain promissory-notes and foils of promissory-notes in a promissory-note book because their names and their mother's name are joined with Shwe Din's as lenders of the moneys lent on the documents, but these documents have not been proved at all. Moreover, the book bears some traces of having been restitched, so that the promissory-note book must be discarded as proving nothing in favour of the claimants. Certain promissory-notes have been produced on which Shwe Din and the claimants have borrowed money from certain Chetties. The fact affords no proof in favour of the claimants, because it is a well known thing that Chetties get the signature of every body who might be in a position to create trouble after the death of the person who really borrowed the money.

We now turn to the case for the defence. Shwe Din was the plaintiff's brother. The plaintiff gives an account of how Ma Kin came to be an inmate of Shwe Din's house. Maung Tha Maung divorced Ma Nan On as he suspected her of infidelity. She then went to live in Ma Nan Ton's house. Shortly afterwards she eloped with Maung Pha and went and lived at Shwepaukpin. A few years afterwards Ma Nan On returned to Ma Nan Ton's house. At the time she had a little child by Maung Pha. Soon after both Ma Nan On and the baby died in Ma Nan Ton's house. After this Maung Pha has no further interest in the relatives of his deceased wife and went away from the village leaving Ma Kin behind with Ma Nan Ton. Ma Kin was then eight years old. The girl's position was this: her mother was dead; her step-father had deserted her and her father, Tha Maung, had disappeared. So that it was quite natural that Maung Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton should give the child shelter and protection. That was how she came to grow up in Shwe Din's house and remained there till she died. Her children would naturally continue to live in that house. Po Mya, Ko Pein and Ma Yeik are witnesses who support the plaintiff's story. They are all respectable people. The learned District Judge saw no reason to disbelieve them and accepted their story as being substantially correct. Po Mya is a respectable person, so is Ko Pein and their evidence shows that they knew the people concerned and their affairs well. I am unable to see what reason can be assigned for saying that they are not disinterested. Ma Yeik was the wife of Ma Kin's paternal uncle. She would be a person to know of the adoption of Ma Kin if it ever took place and aslo to know of Ma Kin's exact position in the family of Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton. As regards her, it has been urged that she might have taken the child under her protection, but she did not and that she was, therefore, apparently not well disposed towards Ma Kin. I am unable to follow this argument, because Ma Yiek was not a near relation of Ma Kin's and there was her well-to-do aunt in whose house the child was left unprotected. There was ready at hand some one to look after the child and there was no necessity for Ma Yeik to take any trouble over it. Po Mya says that at the marriage of Shwe Din with Ma Nge he was one of the lugyis and that Shwe Din declared that he had no children. Maung Po Thaung gives evidence that he was related to Ma Ma and that at her marriage with Shwe Din the latter declared that the children living with him were not his heirs. On the side of the claimants we have the evidence of Maung Po who said he was present at Ma Nge's marriage. I have already shown reasons for not attaching any weight to his evidence. If the evidence on the side of the plaintiff as to what Shwe Din said at his subsequent marriages is trustworthy, the question remains what is the value of it. The learned District Judge has attached much value to it, but I do not think it is really very important, because it is just as likely as not that Shwe Din might be telling a lie. But, if we can find that Shwe Din positively asserted that the children living with him were his heirs, the evidence would be of great importance.

I forgot to deal with the evidence relating to the transfer of 33 acres of paddy land to the claimants and the 1st appellant Maung Shwe Kin. There is no doubt that Shwe Din did make a gift of this land to these four persons, of which half was to go to Shwe Kin and the other half to the others. But the evidence clearly shows that his intention was that they should take their respective shares only on his death, because after the transfer he continued to deal with the property as he had hitherto done. This gift does not appear to me to indicate any truth in the claim of the claimants, namely, that their mother was the keittima adopted daughter of Maung Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton. It appears that Shwe Kin had been working for Shwe Din for some time. Ma Kin had lived in Shwe Din's house for some considerable time before she died and must have helped Shwe Din in his household affairs. The children of Ma Kin also continued to live in the house and they must also have been a source of comfort to him and he might very probably out of gratitude for the assistance they had rendered have thought of giving them some share in his property after his death. If they were his adopted children, there is no necessity for his arranging to give them this piece of land intending that the gift should take effect only after his death, because in that case they would inherit all his property and a gift of this sort would have been unnecessary. There was a scramble for the property on the part of Shwe Kin and the claimants before Shwe Din died. Shwe Din is alleged to have executed Ex. 16 whereby he gave Shwe Kin and the claimants some of his property in equal shares by way of inheritance. The learned District Judge says that in his opinion, the transaction only shows that the claimants knew that their position was unsafe. I agree with him. There is one other point which appears to be much against the claimants. It appears that Shwe Kin and they had got some of the lands belonging to Shwe Din transferred into their names. Shwe Din came to hear of this and at once got the land re-transferred to his name. In Ex. C., which is a register of holdings, it is stated that the re-mutation was made because Shwe Kin and the others were not Shwe Din's children. In Exs. 11 and 15 it is stated that the four, not wishing to say anything in U Shwe Din's life time had allowed the lands to appear only in the name of U Shwe Din. There are discrepancies in the entries in Register No. IX and the register of holdings, but I do not think they count for much as the fact remains that U Shwe Din objected. In my opinion the claimants have failed to prove that their mother, Ma Kin, was the keittima daughter of Shwe Din and Ma Nan Ton. Their Counsel at the hearing of the appeal asked us to allow them to make a claim as the children of an apatittha daughter of the old couple. In Maung Tha So v. Maung Lu Pe (1). I held that the two forms of adoption are entirely different; that a plaint based upon a keittima adoption cannot be amended in appeal by an alternative claim of an apatittha adoption. I have no reason to change my views on this point.

Shwe Kin, the 1st appellant, is represented by Mr. Maung Gyi and at the hearing Counsel said that his name was inserted as an appellant by mistake and that Shwe Kin was quite satisfied with the decree of the lower Court. His appeal must, therefore, be dismissed, but the question remains as to whether he should be ordered to pay the costs of the other side. It is obvious that his name was entered as appellant by mistake and he has not pressed this appeal. I am, therefore, of opinion that he should not be made to bear the costs of the respondent.

The appeal of the other 3 appellants is dismissed with costs.

Rigg, J.—I concur in thinking the adoption has not been proved.

Co-sharer—Khudkasht plots, dispossession from—Possession, decree for, whether can be obtained.

When a co-sharer in a village has rightfully acquired land as his khudkasht and is in separate physical possession of it, and another co-sharer forcibly dispossesses him, the former is entitled to a decree for physical possession of the land from which he has been dispossessed and not merely to a decree for joint possession. [p. 680, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the second Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 26th April 1923.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Shambhu Nath Chaube, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs to this suit were purchasers of certain plots in a village in the Gorakhpur District. At the time of purchase they obtained the equity of redemption only over the plots now in dispute. The plot had been mortgaged with possession to two persons called Probhakar, defendant-appellant No. 2 and Rajbali deceased the father of Ram Niwas Misir, defendant appellant No. 4. In 1912 the plaintiffs sued to redeem the plots over which they had purchased the equity of redemption. Rajbali having died and being represented only by Ram Niwas the mortgagees sued were Probhakar and Ram Niwas. The matter was decided amicably under a compromise and a decree was drawn up on the 11th March 1913 declaring the mortgage redeemed and assigning the plots in question to the plaintiffs. This decree was against Probhakar and Ram Niwas. The plaintiffs obtained physical possession over these plots and cultivated them.

Subsequently Probhakar and Ram Niwas with Bhagwati Prasad and Radhakhant interfered with their possession by action taken over the standing crops. They undoubtedly based this interference upon an entry in the village papers which seemed to show that they had some title to the plots in question.

The preceding facts have been found by the lower Appellate Court. The following findings must be emphasised. After the decree of 1913 the plaintiffs were in possession of these plots. The plaintiffs were in separate and exclusive possession of these plots by cultivating them. The defendants dispossessed them. The possession subsequently passed under an order of the Criminal Court to the Police as a breach of peace was apprehended. The lower Appellate Court has given the plaintiffs-respondents a decree for physical possession over these plots. This decree is attacked in appeal on two grounds. It is attacked on the ground that the decree of the 11th March 1913 is not good as giving title to the plaintiffs.

The argument here is that the predecessors-in-interest of all the present defendants-appellants were interested in the matter and that the defendants-appellants Nos. 1 and 3 were no parties to the decree. There is no force in this plea. The mortgagees were Probhakar defendant-appellant No. 2 and the father of Ram Niwas. The mortgagors were the plaintiffs' vendors. The decree had only to be redeemed as against the mortgagees.

The next point taken was that the compromise was signed only by Probhakar and not by Ram Niwas. I have searched the record and do not find that the compromise is on it or that the compromise was ever proved. The suggestion is apparently that if Ram Niwas did not sign the compromise it was signed by Probhakar on his behalf. There cannot be the slightest doubt as to the fact that the decree was binding against both of them.

Another point argued here was to the effect that Ram Niwas was a minor. He clearly was not a minor at the time the decree was passed though he apparently was described as a minor in the plaint. But he is described as a major in the decree. Apart from that, from the present pleadings it appears that Ram Niwas was 30 years old in 1921 which would make him a major in 1912. The redempion was a good redemption and the plaintiffs had title to the plots.

The next point taken is that they should not have been granted a decree for physical possession because they and the defendants are zemindars in the propeity. The learned Counsel has quoted in support of his argument the decision in Bisheshar Singh v. Hanuman Singh (1) and Sarbjit Singh v. Rajkumar Rai (2). The headnote in the first decision might be a little clearer. All that these decisions lay down is that when co-sharers or tenants-in-common are jointly in cultivation of a particular area the ouster of one by the other entitles the party ousted to a decree for joint possession. The decisions further lay down that when such a co-tenant intrudes upon joint land the remedy of the persons intruded against is to obtain a decree for joint possession, but nowhere do these decisions or any other lay down that when a co-sharer in a village has rightfully acquired land as his khudkasht and another co-sharer forcibly dispossesses him the Courts should do otherwise than restore the man forcibly dispossessed to physical possession.

Here the plaintiffs were in separate physical possession of the plots in question and were dispossessed illegally by the defendants. The lower Appellate Court was obviously right in giving the plaintiffs a decree for physical possession.

This decision disposes of all the points argued before me. There were other grounds of appeal but they were abandoned. I dismiss this appeal with costs on the higher scale.

EDMUND BENDIT AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

EDGAR RAPHAD PRUDHOMME—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Contract—Sale of goods—"Force majeure", meaning of—War conditions—Vessel commandeered by Government—Performance of contract, whether excused—Impossibility of performance—Vendor, liabitity of.

It is not reasonable to ask a person who has entered into a particular contract to supply goods, to break his other contracts or to make others to break their contracts in order to perform that particular contract. If a party to a contract cannot perform his part without breaking other contracts, then the existence of those other contracts might be deemed to hinder or prevent him from performing the contract in question. [p. 685, cols. 1 & 2]

It is not sufficient for a party to a contract to point to something in the nature of a force majeure and seek to escape liability in respect of the contract. It is necessary to go further and establish by satisfactory evidence that the circumstance or occurrence which is called force majeure was the real cause which prevented the performance of the contract. [p. 684, col. 1.]

Where a contract to supply goods is entered into during a period when there is to the knowledge of the parties difficulty in securing tonnage for the cargo, such difficulty or even the impossibility of procuring tonnage cannot be aptly described by the expression force majeure. [p. 684, col. 2.]

Where a commercial man finds himself face to face with an upsetting of his plans and calculations brought about by force majeure, he is not bound to prove more than that he made his best endeavours as a man of ordinary prudence would and should, who was anxious to procure some tonnage for himself under the prevailing conditions. [p. 685, col. 1.]

Where in a contract for sale and delivery of goods the manner of the performance of the contract is not indicated or included as necessarily being in the contemplation of the parties, the difficulty or even impossibility of performing the contract in the manner contemplated by one of the contracting parties would be no excuse for non-performance. But if the manner of performance is indicated in the contract or otherwise comes to be included as a term in the contract then the force majeure clause would apply to any case of force majeure preventing the performance of the contract in that manner. [p. 685, col. 2.]

Whenever the possibility of performance is referred to in commercial contracts, what must be considered and contemplated is the possibility in a commercially reasonable sense and not a suppositious possibility. [p. 686, col. 1.]

Defendant, a merchant in Madras, contracted in November 1916 with the plaintiffs, a firm in Marseilles, to ship 400 tons of groundnut kernels to Marseilles in December-January 1916-1917 on C. I. F., terms, the goods to be of a particular brand. The defendant booked the necessary tonnage on S. S. Seapool but the vessel was commandeered by the Government on 14th November for purposes connected with the War. In spite of his best endeavours the defendant was unable to obtain accommodation for this cargo on any other steamer. The contract contained force majeure clauses discharging the parties from performance of the contract in cases of war, revolution, etc. In a suit by the plaintiffs for damages:

Held, (1) that the defendant was not liable for non-performance of the contract; [p. 683, col. 2.]

(2) that the contract being a C. I. F. contract, under which the defendant had to tender Bills of Lading for goods of a particular brand, a tender of goods of some other brand would not have been a strict compliance with the terms of the contract, such as the plaintiffs were bound to accept and that, therefore, the defendant could not have bought groundnuts at Marseilles or London and supplied them to the plaintiffs. Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Coutts-Trotter, dated the 28th of August 1922, and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court, in C. S. No. 280 of 1921.

Mr. Vere Mockett, for the Appellants.

The Advocate-General, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The respondent, a merchant of Madras, contracted on November 10th, 1916 with the appellants, who are a firm in Marseilles, to ship 400 tons of groundnut kernels to Marseilles in the December-January 1916-1917 season on a C. I. F. contract, the goods to be of H. P. brand. He booked the necessary tonnage on the S. S. Seapool, a vessel chartered by Messrs. Cordon Woodroffe & Co., but it was commandeered by the Government on November 14th for purposes connected with the War. In spite of his best endeavours the respondent was unable to obtain accommodation for this cargo on any other steamer leaving the "kernels" ports, that is ports on the Coromandel coast from which kernels are usually shipped, viz., Madras, Pondicherry, Cuddalore, Negapatam and Porto Novo. He, therefore, wrote on December 22nd, 1916 and January 11th 1917 to the appellants pleading force majeure and asking them to consider the contracts as cancelled. The appellants refused to do so, rejecting the plea that this was a case of force majeure and suggested trying other lines and other ports. The respondent tried all the shipping agents in vain. He then made a proposal that he should endeaour to work off old contracts by shipping a portion of the goods contracted for under old contracts along with the portions of the goods to be supplied under new contracts, but the appellants only treated this as a virtual admission of his liability and an attempt to diminish his debt. They were unwilling to accept the proposal exactly as it was offered and, it fell through. There was no extention of the time for performance for an indefinite period by mutual agreement. In the end they put the respondent into Court in March 1921 and lost their case in the Trial Court, on the findings of the Judge (1) that force majeure would discharge the defendant from the performance of his original contract (2) that inability to obtain tonnage is force majeure within the meaning of that expression as construed in English Courts.

It may be noted in this connection that both the standard contract forms in use by the parties (Ex. A and Ex. 1) contain force majeure clauses. Exhibit 1 which is respondent's version is the less definite of the two. It mentions two kinds of force majeure which would render the contract null and void except so far as it had already been partly performed. One is prohibition of export of the article from the country, a second is blockade, and there are others not mentioned. Such are cases of force majeure preventing the execution of the contract. Exhibit A is a more explicit, as it enumerates war, revolution, strikes, epidemics as well as other unforeseen circumstances which might prevent the goods from reaching the port of embarkation or from being shipped or despatched and so would render the contract void. Section 56 of the Indian Contract Act simply says that a contract to do an act which after the contract is made, becomes impossible or, by reason of some event which the promisor could not prevent, unlawful, becomes void when the act becomes impossible or unlawful; and s. 65 provides that in such event any person who has received any advantage under the contract is bound to compensate the person from whom he received it.

The term "force majeure" which is borrowed from the Code Napoleon has received interpretation in several decisions of the English Courts in recent years. In Matsoukis v. Preistman & Co. (1). Mr. Justice Bailhache after considering the definition given by an eminent Belgian lawyer of force majeure as meaning "causes you cannot prevent and for which you are not responsible"—a definition which would certainly include inability to obtain tonnage owing to war conditions prevailing in the port or ports from which the goods were to be despatched—himself gave it a more restricted meaning. In his opinion force majeure would include strikes and break down of machinery but not bad weather, or football matches, or a funeral. In Lebeaunpin v. Crispin & Co. (2) Mr. Justice Mc.Cardie observed: a force majeure clause should be construed in each case with a close attention to the words which precede or follow it and with due regard to the nature and general terms of the contract. The effect of the clause may vary with each instrument."

In Dixon & Sons Ltd. v. Henderson, Craig & Co. Ltd. (3) the fact that British ships were no longer available by reason of the war for carriage of woodpulp from Canada to Grimsby in England was held to be a hindrance to the performance of a contract for delivery of pulp and came within the meaning of the force majeure clause in the contract under consideration in that case. If the hindrance was insurmountable, it would amount to prevention, which was another term used in the contract which would relieve the sellers from liability, and the Court of Appeal held that the arbitrators were accordingly justified in finding the sellers not liable.

In the present case, the matter is simplified by the fact that the expression "force majeure" does not stand alone, but the clause in which it occurs in Exs. A and I contains examples of what was intended to be conveyed by the term. War is one of the examples and the words et cetera at the end of the enumeration denote that there are others.

In their letter (Ex. K) of January 10th 1917 the appellants admitted that, if shipment by the Seapool had been one of the declared terms of the contract between them and the respondent, the latter would be exonerated by the fact of that steamer being subsequenlly requisitioned by the Government. What, however, they failed to appreciate was that the respondent was not asking to have the contract considered as cancelled merely on account of the Seapool being requisitioned but that the combination of two circumstances (1) the commandeering of the Seapool on which he had already booked accommodation for the consignment of groundnuts, (2) the total lack of any other ships with available accommodation not already booked up by earlier applicants made it impossible for the respondent to fulfil his engagement under Exs. VII and VII (a) in the seasons December-January, 1916-1917.

(1) (1915) 1 K. B. 681; 84 L. J. K. B. 937; 113 L. T. 48; 20 Com. Cas. 252.

It has been contended both in the Trial Court and here that the respondent might have shipped this consignment of groundnuts on the Jossipheglu, or the Khiva, or the Grigua or the Voyazides or the Locksley Hall or the City of Florence; but the evidence on the point to which we have referred makes it clear that all the space on the steamers calling at Marsellies in December or January was already booked before the commandeering of the Seapool became known on November 14th, and that the respondent could not have foreseen the fact that he would be prevented from sending the consignment by the ship in which he had booked space, and could not have made other arrangements; also that if he could have booked space in a steamer leaving Madras after January 1917, the consignment would not have reached the consignees within the contract time. On the facts I agree with the conclusion of the learned Judge who heard the evidence "that it was a physical impossibility for Mr. Prudomme to get tonnage to take this cargo at any rate of freight, however, high during the contract period."

But on the Voyazides and "Jossiphoglu" the respondent sent consignments of groundnuts to Chabrire Morel and Compoi of Marseilles on earlier contracts with those consignees. It is suggested by appellants' Counsel that the respondent might have kept his contract with the appellants by buying in these consignments or other consignments made by other merchants trading in groundnut and diverting them to his consignees.

But it is not stated that any such consignments of groundnuts were sent except under previous contracts and in Tennants Ltd. v. Wilson & Co. (4) it was observed by Lord Loreburn that it would not be reasonable to ask a person, who had entered into a particular contract to supply goods, to break his other contracts or to make others break their contracts in order to perform this contract. If a party to a contract could not perform his part without breaking other contracts then the existence of those other contracts in the opinion of their Lordships might be deemed to hinder or prevent him from performing the contract in question. At considerable expense and loss the respondent might, it is suggested, have bought groundnuts in Marsellies itself and tendered them to appellants in performance of his contract, or he might have sent this consignment to some port from which it might have been transhipped to Marsellies. But if he had adopted either of these courses he would still have been unable to make a good tender which the appellants would have been bound to accept, for the contract between the parties was a C. I. F. contract under which he had to tender Bills of Lading for 400 tons of groundnut kernels of H. P. brand shipped by steamer from a kernel port to Marsellies. A tender of groundnuts of some other brand or of Bills of Lading from some other port such as Bombay or London would not have been a strict compliance with the terms of the contract such as appellants would have been bound to take up [vide Hansson v. Hamel and Horley Ltd. 5)].

The fact which appears from the judgment in O. S. A. No. 73 of 1921, that in respect of the commandeering of this very steamer Seapool a French Court of Arbitration in regard to another contract held that the sellers could not successfully plead force majeure as a defence on the ground that goods of the proper month's shipment might have been bought up either on the high seas or locally in Marseilles, no doubt at a great advance in price, is immaterial for the decision of this appeal, because the details of that contract are not before us so as to enable us to judge of the correctness of the view taken by those arbitrators; and their decision is by no means binding upon us.

For these reasons I can come to no other conclusion than that the judgment appealed against is right, and the appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs. I wish only to add a few sentences with regard to the main contentions raised in the argument on behalf of the appellants. It seems to me really unnecessary to canvass for the purpose of this case the meaning or definition of force majeure. The only thing that was contended to amount to force majeure was the commandeering of the Seapool by the Government. I did not understand Mr. Mockett, the learned Counsel for the appellants, in his argument, to contend that such commandeering would not amount to force majeure. But in all such cases, it is not sufficient for the contracting party to point to something in the nature of a force majeure and seek to escape liability. It is absolutely necessary to go further and establish by satisfactory evidence that the circumstance or occurrence which is called force majeure was the real cause, which, to use the language of the contract in question, prevented the performance of the contract. Now, if the commandeering of the Seapool had taken place, say on the 30th or 31st of January, almost at the last moment, so as to upset all the calculations and arrangements of the defendant, there could possibly be no doubt that the force majeure would have been the immediate cause of the failure of the defendant to ship the goods and perform the contract. But the real difficulty in this case arose by reason of the Seapool having been commandeered as early as the 14th of November whereas the shipments had to be in December-January. The defendant's plea which was found by the learned Judge in the Court below to have been made good, was, that till the end of January the defendant made every effort to book the cargo and failed not because the high rate of freight obtaining made his contract commercially impracticable but because he could not get tonnage for the cargo at any price whatever. It may almost seem from this finding that the real or immediate cause for Mr. Brudhomme not performing the contract was not the commandeering of the Seapool but his inability to procure tonnage in any vessel. No doubt this inability has been found as a fact by the learned Judge and has not been seriously assailed before us. But the inability to procure the necessary tonnage could not possibly be force majeure because the contract itself was during the war and the difficulty of securing space for cargo to be exported must have been in the contemplation of the contracting parties, and the difficulty or even the impossibility as it may be, of procuring tonnage was the result of the extraordinary competition prevailing at the time and could not aptly be described by the expression force majeure, however, elastic and varying its connotation may be accepted to be. In these circumstances, unless the commandeering of the Seapool could be found to be the real or immediate cause of Mr. Prudhomme not performing the contract, the force majeure clause in the contract will not help him. After giving the matter my very careful consideration, I have come to the conclusion that in this case in spite of the interval of time between the 14th of November and the close of the period fixed for the performance of the contract, the commandeering of the Seapool was the real or immediate cause, cause not in any scientific sense nor even in the language of ordinary perlance, but in a commercial sense. The fact was that Mr. Prudhomme as a commercial man made certain arrangements for shipping, entered into engagements for the purpose of procuring necessary tonnage and then entered into the suit contracts. Then suddenly on the 14th of November he finds his plans are upset by the vessel being commandeered by which he had arranged to ship the goods. If, thereafter, he was able to obtain tonnage in any of the ships in such a manner as to enable him to fulfil the contract or indeed if he made no efforts at all to procure any such tonnage, the cause of his nonperformance of the contract would not have been the commandeering of the Seapool. But it is a matter of common experience that what in ordinary circumstances would not have been the cause of any particular effect might become such cause when conjoined with certain other circumstances and then it is nonetheless the cause or effective cause, though not the sole cause. This was really what the learned Judge found. In this view any examination of the various cases with regard to the meaning of force majeure becomes unnecessary.

Two other arguments were addressed to us by Mr. Mockett, the learned Counsel for the appellants. It was said that if Mr. Prudhomme was not able to obtain any tonnage in Madras or Pondicherri, there was no evidence that he could not have obtained such tonnage from any of the 'kernal' ports on the Coromandel coast. This aspect of the contention would require him to establish conclusively a negative. It is significant that no evidence whatever has been adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs regarding the possibility of obtaining any such tonnage at any such port. The kind and quantity of evidence that would be required to establish a negative of that nature would obviously vary according to circumstances. I have no doubt whatever that the learned Judge who arrived at the finding did so after a consideration of all those circumstances, and the argument before us has failed to satisfy us that that finding of fact has not been arrived at on proper or sufficient material. Further, having regard to the fact that the inability to procure tonnage after the commandeering of the Seapool must be held to have been relied upon not as in itself constituting force majeure but merely as a contributing cause to make the force majeure of the commandeering the effective cause of non-performance. I cannot help considering that the nature and quantity of evidence required to establish the negative need not be so exhaustive or conclusive as may be required if what was relied upon was solely the impossibility of obtaining tonnage. In such circumstances I am prepared to hold that when a commercial man finds himself face to face with an upsetting of his plans and calculations brought about by force majeure he is not bound to prove more than that he made his best endeavours as a man of ordinary prudence would and should, who was anxious to procure some tonnage for himself in such circumstances.

This test at any rate on the evidence on the record on behalf of the defendant as accepted by the learned Judge, is amply satisfied in the present case.

The third and last contention on behalf of the appellants was that the defendant finding that the Seapool was commandeered and finding himself unable to procure any other tonnage, should still have performed the contract by purchasing at Marseilles goods of the description contracted for and supplying to the plaintiffs such goods on the documents relating to shipments thereof so as to carry out the contracts.

To begin with, I must observe that this contention does not appear to have been submitted to the learned Judge in the Court below. In the second place, it is perfectly clear that any purchase of similar goods in the market locally at Marseilles and tendering them in performance of the contract would not have been performance according to the terms and the tenor of the contract and the buyers would have been entitled to refuse to accept the same. I am not also sure whether even the purchase of documents relating to December-January shipments of goods from the ports referred to, would have been proper performance; because there is a stipulation in the contract as regard the brand "H.P." (Hope Prudhomme) and there is no evidence and no facts which would justify me in holding that this stipulation with regard to the brand did not include besides the mark "H. P." (Hope Prudhomme) an implied condition regarding selection of goods by Mr. Hope Prudhomme. There is no evidence whatever that such documents were available in Marseilles which even, if the defendant could have procured them at any price, were such as the plaintiffs would be bound to accept as in performance of the contract.

Mr. Mockett relied upon the case of Greenway v. Jones & Co. (6). But that was a case of an ordinary contract for sale and delivery of goods and what was held was that the omission to deliver was not due to war or any other cause referred to in the contract. If in a contract for sale and delivery of goods, the manner of the performance of the contrect is not indicated or included as necessarily being in the contemplation of parties, then it necessarily follows that difficulties or even impossibility in the performance of the contract in the manner contemplated by one of the contracting parties would be no excuse for non-performance. But if the manner of performance is really indicated in the contract, or otherwise comes to be included as a term in the contract, then the force majeure clause would apply to any case of force majeure preventing the performance of the contract in that manner.

On a consideration of the whole contract in this case I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that the manner of performance of the contract included a shipment of goods to be selected by the defendant.

I am further of the opinion that whenever the possibility of performance is referred to in commercial contracts, what must be considered and contemplated is the possibility in a commercially reasonable sense and not merely a suppositious possibility.

It follows from these considerations that the contract between the parties was that the defendant should purchase and ship goods of the descriptions contracted for and that if the plaintiffs were minded to do so, they would have been entitled to refuse any goods or documents not so proceeding; and it also follows that having regard to the manner in which commercially speaking, the defendant was expected and required to perform the contract there was no obligation on his part to proceed to Marseilles and look out for goods or documents of the description which might possibly have satisfied the requirements of the contract.

The decision of the learned Judge, therefore, to the effect that the defendant had made good his defence is right and the plaintiff's action was rightly dismissed.

RANGOON HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 9 OF 1922.

March 7, 1923.

Present:—Sir Sydney Robinson, KT., Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice May Oung.

MAUNG PO KAN—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

DAW AT AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Buddhisl Law, Burmese—Adoption—Kittima form, essentials of—Wife, whether can adopt without knowledge or consent of husband—Public declaration—"Shinbyu", effect of—"Mwe-za-de", significance of.

A kittima son or daughter should be adopted with the intention, publicly signified, of taking the adoptee as a son or daughter who will inherit. The intention may be expressed at the time of the taking or later; or may be inferred from a long course of conduct making such intention public. It may happen that a child is at first taken casually and without any intention that it should ultimately occupy the same legal position as that of a natural-born child, but later on, for a variety of reasons, the adoptive parents may come to look upon the son or daughter as their own and invest the child with privileges and duties which clearly show the subsequent formation of the required intention. [p. 693, col. 2.]

The use of the word "mwe-za-de" by the witnesses in describing an adoption is not sufficient to establish a kittima adoption. [p. 691, col. 1.]

Shwe Kin v. Maung Sin, 87 Ind. Cas. 673; 10 L. B. R. 376 at pp. 384,385, followed.

When the donor of an image, or a religious or other charitable building, sets up a public record of a gift and in it mentions the names of his or her relatives, both dead and living, it can safely be assumed that the relationship between the donor and those whose names are thus included is definitely admitted and proclaimed, and where one of them is an adopted son, but is referred to simply as a son, it must be taken that a kittima adoption was intended. [p. 691, col. 2.]

Among Burman Buddhists, when a person undertakes to be the sponsor of a boy, who is going to enter the monkhood as a novice, he generally acts in loco parentis to that boy; but the fundamental idea in his doing so is that he is himself acquiring merit therefrom, and hence it is a universal custom for well-to-do persons to shinbyu not only their own sons, but also the sons of others whenever opportunity offers. Thus, though the act of performing the ceremony is, in some cases, prima facie evidence that the donor of the feast regarded the novice as his son, it is by no means a clear indication in every instance that anything more than a charitable intent, sometimes coupled with a love of display, was in the donor's mind. Where several boys are shinbyued at the same time, and none of them is a natural-born son, no presumption in favour of adoption can properly arise in the absence of a direct and public declaration of relationship at or about the time of the ceremony. [p. 689, col. 1.]

One of a Burman Buddhist couple cannot legally adopt an heir without the knowledge or consent of the other. The plaintiff lost his mother while still an infant and his father was unable to rear him. M. N. with her husband's subsequent approval, gave the child a home, fed and clothed him, and took some interest in his education. While he was still a little boy, she made statements and allowed it to be known that she had adopted a son, and many people in the village looked upon the plaintiff as the adopted son of M. N. When he grew to adolescence, she took part in his shinbyu along with six other boys, and, later, finding that he was not inclined to study, utilized his services in field work. She took no interest in his marriage, or in his wife and children, and, beyond permitting his wife to use a vacant house belonging to her as a maternity shelter, did not provide any place of residence for them. In return for his labour during many years, the plaintiff was allowed to work a small area of paddy land on payment of rent, and his name was included as joint owner of a piece of land bought by her and two others:

Held, that on the state of facts proved it could not be held that there had been a kittima adoption of the plaintiff by M. N. and her husband. [p. 693, col. 1.]

Appeal from a judgment and decree of the District Court, Hanthawaddy.

Mr. Ba Tin, for the Appellant.

Mr. Mya Bu, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff (now appellant) claimed that he had been adopted as a kittima son by a Burman Buddhist couple, Ma Ngwe and Maung Wet Gyi. Later the couple were divorced, and the plaintiff continued to live and work with Ma Ngwe as her son. Ma Ngwe having then died, he sued the defendants for her property left in their hands. The first defendant, Daw At, was Ma Ngwe's mother, the second defendant, Maung Ba, her brother, and the third defendant, Ma Lay (since deceased), her sister. The plaintiff averred that, as the kittima son of Ma Ngwe, he was her solé heir and, therefore, entitled to the whole of her property.

The defendants denied the alleged adoption but admitted "that the plaintiff lived with Ma Ngwe for some years and rendered his services to her prior to the month of Waso 1277 B.E." They pleaded further that, since the month of Waso 1277 B.E., the plaintiff lived apart from Ma Ngwe; that there was an entire discontinuance of filial and family relations between them; and that, therefore, even if the Court should find that the plaintiff was a kittima adopted son of Ma Ngwe, he had lost his right and status. They also stated that in the month of Tabodwe 1279 B.E., the plaintiff attempted to kill or injure Ma Ngwe with an axe, and urged that, even if the plaintiff previously had any right of inheritance, he lost it on account of such attempts. At the hearing the defendants set up a further case, viz., that the plaintiff had really been adopted by one Po Shwe Daung, an employee of Ma Ngwe or Daw At, or both.

The primary question at issue is whether the plaintiff was adopted by Ma Ngwe and her husband, Maung Wet Gyi, with the status of a kittima son. Maung Wet Gyi, the husband, was alive when the suit was instituted, and had been assisting the plaintiff to establish his claim; but he unfortunately died before the hearing, and the Court was left without his testimony. The learned District Judge found on the evidence against the plaintiff and dismissed his suit with costs.

A large mass of evidence, both direct and circumstantial, oral and documentary, was produced on both sides. The case has been argued before us in great detail, and we desire to express our appreciation of the assistance which both the learned Counsel have rendered to us in sifting the evidence.

The first point requiring consideration is the evidence as to the actual taking over of the plaintiff. This is said to have taken place when the plaintiff was about a year old; he is now about thirty. At that time Maung Wet Gyi and Ma Ngwe were living together in a house apart from Daw At's and had lost their only natural-born son. It is not suggested and it cannot be the fact, that Ma Ngwe was past child-bearing age, and there is nothing to show that either she or her husband had previously evinced any desire to take a child in adoption. The plaintiff is the son of one Maung Shwe Baw and, while still an infant, had lost his mother. Maung Shwe Baw brought the child to the house of his sister—wife of Maung Kya Zwe—and asked her to suckle it; she could not do so, as she had a child of her own, and the plaintiff had to be brought up on condensed milk. This went on for about a year, at the end of which, according to Maung Kya Zwe (third P. W.), Daw At and Ma Ngwe accompanied by a man whose name he is unable to give, came to his house and "asked for the child in adoption with a view to inherit." He says: "Both Ma Ngwe and Daw At asked me for the child. Daw At's request was made to get the child for Ma Ngwe. I advised Maung Shwe Baw to give the child to them saying that Daw At and Ma Ngwe were well off. Daw At told me: 'When I was on my way here I met a fortune-teller and that fortune-teller has predicted that I shall get a Wednesday-borne boy and by getting him I shall become more prosperous than before.' I gave the child to Daw At. She then said, 'This child is taken in adoption with a view to inherit. I name it Maung Kan.' They then left my house." In cross-examination he stated that there was no conversation between Maung Shwe Baw and Ma Ngwe or Daw At, and that Maung Shwe Baw was upstairs and left the matter to him. He is supported by his daughter, Ma The Hnya (fourth P. W.), who must have been about sixteen years old at the time of the alleged adoption. She stated that she remembered Daw At and Ma Ngwe asking for the child and that her father gave it away, the plaintiff's father being then in the house. In cross-examination she repeated that Maung Kya Zwe gave the child "to Daw At and Ma Ngwe," and stated that both ladies asked for it "as an heir."

There are three points about this story which stand out prominently:—

(i) Maung Wet Gyi was not present, and there is no evidence that he knew of, or agreed to, the adoption. We know of no authority, either in the Dhammathats or in the decided cases, under which one of a Burman Buddhist couple can legally adopt an heir without the knowledge or consent of the other.

(ii) The taking of the child was not public. Its people were apparently anxious to hand it over to anyone who could give it a good home, and welcomed the chance of doing so to well-to-do persons.

(iii) The child was apparently given to Daw At, or just as much to Daw At as to Ma Ngwe. It is impossible to hold on the evidence that it was given to Ma Ngwe alone.

There were two persons alive who might have borne further testimony to the circumstances attending the actual giving and taking of the child; but they either could not be called, or else, the parties deliberately took the risk of proceedings without them. Maung Shwe Baw had visited Maung Kya Zwe's house while the suit was pending in the Court below; but it is said that he could not be found when the case was ripe for hearing; no subpoena was taken out in his name. Daw At was too old to come to Rangoon, but she was admittedly in good health, and a commission to examine her at her village might have been applied for. Be the cause what it may, we are left with the facts that the plaintiff was a motherless infant whom its own people were unable to rear, and that he was taken over by two rich and charitable ladies. The statements of Maung Kya Zwe and his daughter that the child was definitely adopted with the intention and on the basis that it should ultimately inherit some one's property may assume importance in conjunction with the other and subsequent circumstances. But, so far we must hold that the essential ingredients of a kittima adoption by Maung Wet Gyi and Ma Ngwe are almost wholly wanting.

We shall now follow the plaintiff's movements after his departure from Maung Kya Zwe's house. From the evidence of Maung Saw Maung (seventeenth P. W.), formerly a son-in-law of Daw At, and a person who is still on good terms with the defendants, it is clear that the plaintiff was first taken to the house by Maung Wet Gyi and Ma Ngwe, where the latter, with the help of an employe, Po Shwe Daung, looked after the child's needs and brought him up by hand; and that the plaintiff used to sleep with Po Shwe Daung. At this time Ma Ngwe told the witness that the plaintiff was her adopted son, using the expression mwe-za-de-tha; witness admits that she never said amwe-za, amwe-gan, mwe de or "adopted with a view to inherit." About the same time Maung Wet Gyi told his father in the presence of Maung Saw Hlaing (tenth P. W.) that he had adopted a child, using the same expression as his wife had used. During this period of his life that is, between his second and ninth or tenth years, the plaintiff was placed in a village school managed by Maung San Hpu (first P. W.) who later became a Pleader. According to him the boy was known as the son of Ko Wet Gyi and Ma Ngwe; Ma Ngwe herself told him so, and asked him to teach her only son well; he saw him living at Ma Ngwe's house and going about together with her. This witness apparently did not know or hear of the adoption, and hence cannot (though as a Pleader he might) speak to the kind of adoption effected in this case. According to Maung Saw Maung, it was Ma Ngwe who placed the boy in Maung San Hpu's school.

Next comes the divorce between Maung Wet Gyi and Ma Ngwe. When this event took place Ma Ngwe left her house and went to live with her mother, Daw At, taking with her the boy (plaintiff), then about eight or nine years old, and Po Shwe Daung. In this connection Maung Saw Maung says: "Po Shwe Daung lived at the granary of Daw At when Ma Ngwe went and lived at Daw At's house. Then the plaintiff lived with Po Shwe Daung at the granary." This is a damaging admission by one of the best witnesses on the plaintiff's side, and it is not explained why if the plaintiff was a kittima son, he was not, at that tender age, allowed to live with his alleged adoptive mother and grandmother. Counsel for the defence urges with considerable force that it was because the plaintiff had been taken merely with a view to making use of his services when he grew up or partly with that view, and partly as an act of charity. Maung Saw Maung in re-examination stated that he was not certain that the plaintiff slept, or lived, with Po Shwe Daung, but we have no reason to suppose that he was not speaking the truth to the best of his knowledge and re-collection when he made the positive statements referred to above in cross-examination. The fact remains, therefore, that the plaintiff was not, in this instance at least, treated as if he had been on an equal footing with a natural-born son.

To make this absence of proper treatment more pronounced, we have it that, when Ma Ngwe married a second time and went to live in her husband's house she did not take the plaintiff with her; he continued to live with Po Shwe Daung. It is also in evidence for the defence that at the wedding, when enquiries were made coram populo as to whether either party had any issue of his or her previous marriage, "both being Eindaung-gyis," the bridegroom replied that he had two sons and Ma Ngwe said that she had none.

The next point relied on is that the plaintiff was made a koyin at Ma Ngwe's expense. Among Burman Buddhists, when a person undertakes to be the sponsor of a boy, who is going to enter the monkhood as a novice, he generally acts in loco parentis to that boy; but the fundamental idea in his doing so is that he is himself acquiring merit therefrom, and hence it is a universal custom for well-to-do persons to shinbyu not only their own sons, but also the sons of others whenever opportunity offers. Thus, though the act of performing the ceremony is, in some cases, prima facie evidence that the donor of the feast regarded the novice as his son, it is by no means a clear indication in every instance that anything more than a charitable intent, sometimes coupled with a love of display, was in the donor's mind. Where several boys are shinbyued at the same time, and none of them is a natural-born son, no presumption in favour of adoption can properly arise in the absence of a direct and public declaration of relationship at or about the time of the ceremony.

In the present case the plaintiff states that he was made a koyin no less than three times; first by Daw At; later on by Ma Ngwe along with six other boys, all strangers; and lastly by Maung Wet Gyi. Several witnesses speak to the second of these functions, but it is not at all clearly established that Ma Ngwe was the sole, or even the principal, donor, or that she gave the plaintiff any prominence on the occasion as distinct from the other boys. We are unable, therefore, to draw any presumption from the fact that Ma Ngwe participated in the plaintiff's shinbyu ceremony.

When the plaintiff left the monastery he was about fourteen years of age, and he then went to an English school in Rangoon; he was there for some years' and was then withdrawn, because, as he says, he used to run away from school. His case is that it was Ma Ngwe who placed him in this school, but he admits that the fees were paid sometimes by Maung Wet Gyi, sometimes by Daw At, sometimes by Ma Nyein Me, and also that Maung Ba, second defendant, Maung Po Shan, third defendant's husband, Daw At and Ma Nyein Me and Ma Dwe, sisters of Ma Ngwe, gave him pocket money. He has no school certificates; the school register has not been called for, and there is no evidence to show that he was placed in school as the son of Ma Ngwe. The evidence on this point is not inconsistent with the supposition that the plaintiff was merely a protege of the family and, as such, was given an opportunity to acquire a good education, an opportunity which he admits throwing away.

It is not clear where the plaintiff went to live after he left the Rangoon school. He himself says that he slept sometimes at the field hut, but mostly at Daw At's house; and that he had his meals mostly at her house. By that time Ma Ngwe had again been divorced and had returned once more to live with Daw At. Maung Saw Maung does not remember where the plaintiff lived permanently after leaving school. The other witnesses for the plaintiff, with one exception, were not apparently questioned on this point. Maung Po Mya (fifth P. W.), a village headman, says: "I used to see the plaintiff living at the field hut of Ma Ngwe. He was living and eating together with the labourers. I used to see him tending cattle and working in the same way as the labourers." This fits in with the evidence for the defence. The second defendant says: "After leaving school, he lived mostly in the paddy-fields. He did so to look after cattle along with other employes. Sometimes he came back to Daw At's house where Ma Ngwe was. Other employes also used to come to Daw At's house in a similar manner." Maung Po Shan, husband of the third defendant, says: "After leaving it (the school) he tended cattle, worked as a cart driver, and loafed about the village. Ko Tun Zan, the head labourer, fed him because he was useful." Maung Tun Zan (twelfth D. W.), Ma Ngwe's head labourer, says: "After his shinbyu I did not see him for three or four years. After that he came back to the field hut. He was working together with the employes of Ma Ngwe He tended cattle and threshed paddy. I told him 'You work well. I will get for you good remuneration.' I did not settle any definite wages for him. He worked like that for four to seven years."

It is difficult to ignore all this testimony in the absence of any definite statement by the plaintiff himself, and, in any case, we find that there is no proof that the plaintiff was treated and looked after by Ma Ngwe as her son between the time of his leaving school and the date of his marriage.

This marriage took place in July 1910, when the plaintiff was about eighteen years old. He eloped with the daughter of one of Ma Ngwe's labourers and went to live with her at Ma Ngwe's field hut. His father-in-law is Maung Po Myit (ninth P. W.), and he describes what followed the elopement. He states that Ma Nyein Me and Ma Lay, two of Daw At's daughters, came to him and apologized for the plaintiff's conduct, and that he told them to take charge of the couple; Ma Ngwe apparently took no interest in the affair. The witness proceeds: "After elopement the plaintiff and my daughter stayed at the field hut. When my daughter was formally returned to me, she was in the field hut. They continued to stay there after the formal return to me. Only when my daughter was about to be confined she and plaintiff went and lived at the plaintiff's house in Ma-U quarter. That was the house built by Ma Ngwe. After giving birth to the first child the couple went out to the field hut. After that they built a hut of their own in Thayettaw quarter and went and lived there. They lived at that hut except when they went out to the field hut, until the death of Ma Ngwe." Hence, according to this witness, neither the plaintiff nor his wife ever went to live with Ma Ngwe from July 1910, till Ma Ngwe's death in October 1918. There is other evidence, however, that the plaintiff's wife was confined two or three times at a vacant house belonging to Ma Ngwe and situated diagonally opposite Daw At's house; but the plaintiff's permanent abode was elsewhere. According to the headman, Maung Po Mya, the plaintiff lived in his hut in Thayettaw quarter. He says: "This was after his marriage. He had had no child at all then. He continued to live in that hut up till about six months ago. I collected capitation-tax from him in that hut." The significance of this cannot be overrated. It is extremely unlikely that Ma Ngwe would have suffered her son to undergo so much trouble in the matter of a place of residence and, when it is further found that she never on any occasion visited her alleged daughter-in-law, nor even enquired after the latter's health at her successive child-births, we are led to the conclusion that here also the treatment of the plaintiff by Ma Ngwe was not such as would be expected if she had really adopted him as her son and heir.

The plaintiff does not state how he supported himself and his family between 1272 B. E. (the year of his marriage) and 1279. In the latter year, he says, he began to cultivate a portion of the land leased to Ma Ngwe by Daw At. He first stated that Ma Ngwe allowed him to work this portion without rent, but later admitted that he had to pay one hundred baskets of paddy as rent for 1279, and a similar quantity for 1280 (the year in which Ma Ngwe died). He admitted also that he had to take an advance of Rs. 12 from Daw At, paying therefor twenty-five baskets of paddy at the harvest. The fact that the plaintiff had to pay rent for the land worked by him does not militate against his case, because it is admitted that Daw At's own children had to do likewise. On the other hand, it does not help the plaintiff to any appreciable extent. Had he been the kittima son of Ma Ngwe, we should have expected that, at this period of his life, he would have taken a prominent position in the conduct of Ma Ngwe's affairs, assisting her in her work, directing her labourers and, generally, doing all that a natural-born son would do, all the while living in befitting style and comfort. The evidence, in our opinion, falls far short of establishing such a state of affairs.

We next have evidence of declarations made by Ma Ngwe, or Maung Wet Gyi, or both, to various persons. Her statements to her brother-in-law, Maung Saw Maung, and to the school manager, Maung San Hpu, have already been referred to. There are also Maung Po Mya, the headman, Ma The Ngwe (seventh P. W.), sister of Maung Wet Gyi, and Saya Pe (fifteenth P. W.). All these persons speak to having been told that the plaintiff was an adopted son, mwe-za-de-tha. The same or a similar expression is used by a number of other witnesses, who testify to the general repute in the village concerning the relationship between the plaintiff and Ma Ngwe. But, as pointed out in Shwe Kin v. Maung Sin (1), the use of the word "mwe-za-de" by witnesses is not sufficient to establish a kittima adoption.

Great reliance is, however, placed on what might, in some circumstances, amount to a public declaration as to the high status enjoyed by an adopted son, namely, the inclusion of the plaintiff's name as the son of Ma Ngwe in lithic inscriptions recording the public acts of charity performed by her and her relatives. One of these is alleged to have been carved on the base of a marble image, dedicated by Ma Ngwe and installed in a tazaung erected at her expense for public adoration. The defence is that there never was any such inscription, and that the evidence concerning it is a pure fabrication. Maung Sein (fourteenth P. W.), a Revenue Surveyor, deposes that some time in November or December 1920 (while the suit was pending) he, accompanied by Maung Po Mya, visited the tazaung, saw the inscription, and wrote out a copy of it, filed as Ex. "C." This reads as follows:—"1274 B. E. Deed of merit of ( ), dayaka, and Ma Ngwe, dayakama, donors of the Sataungpyi image, daughter of U Shwe Min and Daw At, donors of the Lwan Zedi Pagoda and granddaughter of U Waing, Daw Khwe, U Hmon and Daw Pye of Dabein and her (Ma Ngwe's) sons, Maung Khwe and Maung Po Kan, for the attainment of Nirvana. May nats and men call 'Thadu' (very well)."

Maung Khwe was the natural-born son of Ma Ngwe and Maung Po Kan is the plaintiff.

If it be proved that this legend was inscribed under instructions from Ma Ngwe, and that she authorized the inclusion of the plaintiff's name as one of her sons, we should have no hesitation in accepting this as cogent evidence of Ma Ngwe's intention as regards the plaintiff's status. When the donor of an image, or a religious or other charitable building, sets up a public record of a gift and in it mentions the names of his or her relatives, both dead and living, it can safely be assumed that the relationship between the donor and those whose names are thus included is definitely admitted and proclaimed. And where, as in this case, one of them is an adopted son, but is referred to simply as a son, it must be taken that a kittima adoption was intended.

That there was such an inscription we have no doubt. Maung Sein is supported by Maung Po Mya, the village headman. There are, it is true, discrepancies between his evidence and that of Maung Sein as to exactly how they happened to go together to the tazaung on the occasion when the copy was made, but we accept their testimony as to the facts that they saw the inscription and that one of them made a copy of it. It is extremely improbable that public servants of their position would have deliberately fabricated this story of a non-existent inscription in a place to which access is available and easy. Moreover, Saya Pe (fifteenth P. W.), a physician, fifty-five years old, and a disinterested witness, said that he had seen an inscription on the base of the marble image a little more than a year before he gave evidence; that would be about January or February 1920; and Maung Saw Maung, who bought the image for Ma Ngwe, saw an inscription after its installation. The second defendant denies that he ever saw any inscription on the base of the image; he admits that the tazaung used to be kept open, but states that since December 1920 (it is noteworthy that this is in all probability later than the date on which Surveyor Maung Sein made his copy), when lacquer gum was painted on the base and on the pedestal with a view to gilding them with gold-leaf, the tazaung has been kept closed When photographer Maung Sein (eleventh P. W.) went on the 20th December 1920 to take a photograph of the image, he found the base of the image and the pedestal besmeared with lacquer gum and hence the print (Ex. "E") shows no traces of any inscription. Accepting, as we do, the evidence that an inscription like Ex. "C" did exist till about the month of November 1920 we are led to the conclusion that someone, having learnt of the copy taken by Maung Sein and Maung Po Mya, and with a view to defeating the plaintiff's case on this point, intentionally covered up the writing carved on the base of the image. For this reprehensible conduct the defendants must be held responsible, though it is impossible to determine who it was that actually instigated, or carried out, the idea.

However, it happens that this inscription does not materially assist the plaintiff's case, for there is an utter lack of testimony as to its origin. No one can say who ordered or authorized it, who executed the carving, or when it was carved. Thus, for want of this important and essential evidence, we are unable to hold that Ma Ngwe gave instructions for the inclusion of the plaintiff's name as her son, or even that Ma Ngwe was aware of the fact.

The other inscription is on four marble slabs which were intended to be the record of the building of the Lwan Zedi Pagoda by Daw At and her relatives. Exhibits "D-1" and "D-2" are photographs of two of these. They contain the words "Ma Ngwe and her son, Maung Po Kan." Apparently these slabs were never placed in the position intended for them, and the defendants' case is that the plaintiff's name had been inserted without proper authority and that they would not set up the stones until the error was rectified. Maung Ba says that he gave the sculptor, Saya Naung (thirteenth D. W.), at Mandalay a list of the names to be carved on five slabs; four for the Pagoda at Dabein, and one for a shrine at Kyaikto. Saya Naung says that he finished the Kyaikto stone at Mandalay and sent it away from there to Kyaikto, and that he then came to Dabein and started to work on the four stones at that place.

Now the photographs of the Kyaikto inscription (Exs. "2-A" and "2-B") show the words "Ma Ngwe and her son, Maung Po Kwe," that is the infant son who died. Saya Naung says that, after he had begun his work at Dabein, Maung Wet Gyi asked him to alter one name; that he did so; that he does not remember that name and cannot give particulars to identify it; that, after he had finished his work, he received payment from Daw At and returned to Mandalay; that no one came to look at the completed inscriptions; that about a year afterwards Maung Ba came to him at Mandalay and asked him to rectify a mistake in one name in the inscription; and that he promised to proceed to Dabein for the purpose but has not done so yet. All this took place in 1273 or 1274 B.E. We have no reason to disbelieve Saya Naung, who is not shown to be interested in any way, and we must hold that his evidence points to an interference on the part of Maung Wet Gyi who, no doubt, was anxious to have the plaintiff's status made definite and unmistakeable. At the very least, there is no evidence that Ma Ngwe herself allowed the plaintiff's name to be entered instead of that of her natural-born son.

Two other items remain. One relates to the admitted fact that a piece of land measuring about forty-seven acres was purchased jointly, and still stands in the joint names of Ma Ngwe, the plaintiff, Maung Po Shan, and Ma Lay. This, undoubtedly, lends support to the plaintiff's claim, and it is urged on his behalf that Ma Ngwe would not have permitted it if she had not regarded the plaintiff as her son. The plaintiff himself says nothing about this land, and none of his witnesses depose to the purchase, or to the reason for the inclusion of the plaintiff's name. Maung Po Shan, one of the joint owners, says that the name "was put in to give him a share in it, in lieu of the value of the work done by him." And "It was bought before the plaintiff got married in 1272. Ma Ngwe died in 1280. During that period no profit was enjoyed by the plaintiff. Ma Ngwe enjoyed half share of the profits. The land was bought with borrowed money, which was re-paid out of the profits. The borrowed money has not yet been re-paid in full."

In the absence of evidence for the plaintiff, it is not, we think, improbable that Ma Ngwe, in allowing the plaintiff's name to be inserted in this way, merely intended to promote the plaintiff's welfare in return for his services, though, had the other evidence on the record clearly indicated a higher intention, we might have accepted this as an additional reason for coming to a decision in the plaintiff's favour.

Finally, the plaintiff points to the fact that, on the death of Maung Wet Gyi, the latter's widow unquestioningly allowed him to share in the property left by him. Thus, having been acknowledged as the son and heir of Maung Wet Gyi, he wishes the Court to conclude that he was equally the son and heir of Ma Ngwe, since he had been adopted during the coverture of those two. But Maung Wet Gyi did not take his second wife until after the present suit was filed; and neither his statement at his marriage that Maung Po Kan was his son, nor the fact that his widow admitted that that was so by giving the plaintiff a portion of his estate, can help the plaintiff's case, inasmuch as all these things happened after Ma Ngwe's death and after the question of the plaintiff's status had arisen.

This is practically all the evidence in support of the plaintiff's claim. The defence story that the plaintiff was really adopted by Po Shwe Daung may be entirely disregarded. It was not put forward in the defendants' written statement and appears to be the outcome of an after-thought arising from the fact that some of the plaintiff's witnesses admitted that Po Shwe Daung used to look after the child. When the plaintiff came on the scene Po Shwe Daung was about fifty years old, divorced from his wife earning Rs. 12 or Rs. 13 a month, add living alone in a granary. It is incredible that a middle-aged man, situated as he was, would take an infant in arms in adoption and, in spite of the evidence in support of the story, we must hold that it is not founded on fact.

We have then the following points established :—The plaintiff lost his mother while still an infant and his father was unable to rear him. Ma Ngwe with her husband's subsequent approval, gave the child a home, fed and clothed him, and took some interest in his education. While he was still a little boy, she made statements and allowed it to be known that she had adopted a son, and many people in the village looked upon the plaintiff as the adopted son of Ma Ngwe. When he grew to adolescence, she took part in his shinbyu along with six other boys, and, later, finding that he was not inclined to study, utilized his services in field work. She took no interest in his marriage, or in his wife and children, and, beyond permitting his wife to use a vacant house belonging to her as a maternity shelter, did not provide any place of residence for them. In return for his labour during many years, the plaintiff was allowed to work a small area of paddy land on payment of rent, and his name was included as joint owner of a piece of land bought by her and two others.

On the state of facts, we are unable to hold that a kittima adoption has been made out. There is sufficient material for holding that Maung Wet Gyi and Ma Ngwe, with charitable intent, did take the child in adoption ; Maung Wet Gyi's efforts on the plaintiff's behalf show that there was some foundation for the claim; but, in order to establish an adoption on the basis of one who will inherit to the entire exclusion of relatives by blood, much more is needed. The Manukye Dhammathat requires that a kittima son or daughter should have been adopted with the intention, publicly signified, of taking the adoptee as a son or daughter who will inherit. This intention may have been expressed at the time of the taking or later or may be inferred from a long course of conduct making such intention public. It may, and probably sometimes does, happen that a child is at first taken casually and without any intention that it should ultimately occupy the same legal position as that of a natural-born child, but later on, for a variety of reasons, the adoptive parents may come to look upon the son or daughter as their own and invest the child with privileges and duties which clearly show the subsequent formation of the required intention. But we are unable to hold that this has heen the case in the matter before us. Neither from the conduct of Ma Ngwe, nor from that of her mother, brother, and sisters, can we gather the fact that the plaintiff came to be regarded as a member of the family endowed with the rights and responsibilities of one who was born in it.

The conclusion arrived at by the Court below was, therefore, correct; its finding must be confirmed and this appeal dismissed. We cannot refrain, however, from marking our disapproval of the way in which the defendants have contested the case; in particular, the belated setting up of an alleged adoption by Po Shwe Daung, and the tampering with the inscription on the base of the image, are matters which cannot be passed over without comment. We, therefore, think that the defendants should not be allowed their costs, either in this or in the District Court. The decree appealed from is otherwise confirmed.

Babu Radhika Ranjan Guha, for the Appellants.

Babus Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta and Profulla Chandra Nag, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the defendants and arises out of a suit for possession brought by the plaintiff under the following circumstances. The plaintiff's case was that the lands in dispute belonged to his zemindari, which after partition amongst his co-sharers fell to his exclusive share in the year 1325. The lands according to the plaintiff belonged to Mouza Lakshmipur and were held by a Kotwal as chakran lands and no rent was paid by him as he held them as service tenure. But the plaintiff further alleged that the chakran lands were resumed by an arrangement with the Kotwal who was to be paid his wages in cash and not by the profits of the lands as had been the arrangement before the lands were resumed. The defendants were according to the plaintiff trespassers on the land although the plaintiff added that the defendants were in possession under some Settlement from the kotwal. The defence of the defendants was that the lands were never held by the kotwal in lieu of services but that the defendants held the lands directly under the zemindar although the profits of the lands were ear-marked for the wages of the kotwal. The defendants also alleged that the rent payable by them for the lands was Rs. 1-4 a year. The learned Munsif held that the plaintiff failed to prove that the lands were chowkidari chakran lands and that the plaintiff's story of resumption of any such chakran lands was not true. The learned Munsif further found that the defendants who were proved to have been in long possession of the lands even upon the evidence adduced by the plaintiff were tenants holding directly under the landlord and not under the kotwal. In that view he dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff the learned Subordinate Judge has reversed the decree of the Munsif and has given the plaintiff a decree for khas possession. The learned Subordinate Judge in considering the question whether the lands were chowkidari chakran lands or not relied upon certain entries in the batwara papers showing that the lands were recorded there as chowkidari chakran lands and there was no mention of the defendants as tenants of these lands. It appears that the defendants objected to the admissibility of these papers as evidence against them. The learned Subordinate Judge held that those papers were admissible in evidence on the authority of the case of Janki Dobey v. Kirtarath Roy (1). These batwara papers were prepared by the Collector under Act V of 1897. In the case relied upon the question was as to the amount of rent payable by a tenant whose name appeared in the baiwara papers as a tenant and this Court held that as a partition under Act V of 1897 was made after a proceeding by the Revenue Officers in the way of Record of Rights after notice upon all concerned the partition papers and the entries therein would be some evidence against the parties concerned. The judgment of this Court is as follows:—"We have, therefore, no doubt that entries in partition papers as to the amount of rents payable by tenants are evidence in the same way as entries in the Record of Rights prepared under Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act are admissible as evidence under s. 103B. Prima facie they are evidence against the tenants, though that evidence may not be very valuable." It was not laid down and it could not be that the presumption which arises as to the correctness of an entry in the Record of Rights under s. 103B of the Bengal Tenancy Act would also attach to an entry in the batwara papers. Now, in the present case the defendants were not recorded as tenants. They were strangers to the proceedings. I do not think, therefore, the reasons upon which the batware papers were treated as admissible in evidence against a tenant in the case cited above apply to the case of a stranger to those proceedings. It appears to me that the finding that the lands were chowkidari chakran lands is based wholly upon the record in those proceedings. So far as a stranger is concerned the only way in which those papers can be treated as evidence would be under s. 11 of the Evidence Act on the ground that in the partition proceedings the lands were claimed as chowkidari chakran lands. The entries in those papers could not be in any way binding upon a stranger to those proceedings. The evidentiary value of those papers it appears to me has been considered from a wrong point of view altogether. I think, therefore, the lower Appellate Court ought to before setting aside the positive finding of the Munsif, find whether the evidence in proof of the plaintiff's claim as to the lands in suit being chowkidari chakran lands is sufficient when re-considered in view of the observations made above.

Then it appears that the lower Appellate Court finds that the defendants have not made out that they are tenants holding directly under the zemindar. It appears to me that so long as the finding of the First Court stands—the finding that the plaintiff's story of resumption is a false one the plaintiff cannot eject the defendants who according to him were holding the land under the kotwal. Until the alleged resumption is established the right of the kotwal according to the allegation in the plaint would be subsisting.

A plea of limitation was also raised in the Courts below. The Court of first instance held that in the view that he took of the case the question of limitation did not arise. But the moment it is held that the defendants are trespassers, the plaintiff will have to prove his possession of the land within 12 years of the suit. He may succeed in doing so by showing that the defendants held under the kotwal and that the kotwal's right to hold the lands as service tenure has come to an end. In that case the possession of the defendants would be adverse from the time when the chakran right ceases on account of the resumption of the howkidari lands by the plaintiff. But as have pointed out above the lower Appellate Court has come to no finding upon the question as to whether or not the lands were chowkidari chakran lands and such were resumed by the plaintiff.

In this view of the case the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are set aside. The appeal should be re-heard by that Court in the light of the observations which I have made in this judgment.

Costs of this appeal and of the lower Courts will abide the result.

Savarimuthu v. Aitharusu Rowthar, 25 M. 103; 11 M. L. J. 428, relied on.

Petition, under s 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Repalli at Tenali, dated the 21st August 1922, in S. C. S. No. 175 of 1922.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Kameswara Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The chief point in this Civil Revision Petition is whether the lower Court had jurisdiction to try the suit as a Small Cause Suit. The suit was by the plaintiff to recover damages for use and occupation of his land from the defendant, Defendant's son was let into occupation of the land as plaintiff's tenant for 5 years under Ex. A. After expiry of Ex. A, he continued a tenant holding over. He died and his mother the defendant continued to cultivate without any notice to quit or protest from the plaintiff for six faslies. Plaintiff sues for damages for such use and occupation for three faslies, the rest of the claim being time-barred.

The plaint is clearly on the footing that the claim is for such damages and not for rent on the footing of the kabuliyat Ex. A. Defendant argues that this is a suit which is prohibited by Art. 31 of the Second Schedule of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act from being tried by a Small Cause Court. Plaintiff urges that this objection was not taken before the District Munsif. It is certainly taken in the defendant's written statement, and as the District Munsif has not put down in his judgment the points for determination, we are unable to conclude that the point was abandoned by the defendant.

This is not a suit in which the defendant came into possession by permission of the plaintiff or admits the plaintiff's title or is estopped from denying the plaintiff's title. The legal representative of a tenant holding over is a mere trespasser: see Vadapalli Narasimham v. Dronamraju Seetharamamurthy (1) and in her written statement the defendant definitely challenges the plaintiff's title and sets up title in herself. There is, therefore, no contractual relationship between the plaintiff and the defendant on the footing of which, the suit is based, and the question of title cannot be avoided. Plaintiff has first of all to establish that he is the lawful owner of the land before he can sue for damages for use and occupation. It is true that the defendant pleades in the alternative payment of maktha cist to the plaintiff yearly but it is not the plaintiff's case that there was any kabuliyat between himself and defendant on which such maktha became payable. Hence this is not a case similar to those in Vira Pillai v. Rangasami Pillai (2) and Subba Rao v. Sitharamayya (3) in which the defendant had in the first instance entered on the land with the permission of the plaintiff or the plaintiff's predecessors-in-title and, therefore, the question of title was not in issue.

(1) 31 M. 163; 18 M. L. J. 26; 3 M. L. T. 256.
(2) 22 M. 149; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 106.
(3) 24 M. 118; 11 M. L. J. 26.

The present case, therefore, is one in which the defendant has received mesne profits under a claim of title and one who claims to be the rightful owner in seeking to recover the same after having an account taken of the mesne profits. This appears to us to be a case covered by the Full Bench decision in Savarimuthu v. Aitharusu Rowthar (4) and not cognizable by the Court of Small Causes. The lower Court, therefore, had no jurisdiction to try the case.

It is argued by the plaintiff that this is not a case in which we should interfere in revision because the defendant has not been prejudiced. To this we cannot agree. The lower Court has ignored the issue of title and we cannot find that it was abandoned by the defendant. Plaintiff is not absolved from the duty of proving his title and defendant is prejudiced by the Court having so absolved him. We must, therefore, interfere and set aside the lower Court's decree and remand the case for disposal on the Original Side of the Court. Costs up-to-date will abide the result.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Balgaum, in Appeal No. 180 of 1922, confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge at Chikodi, in Civil Suit No. 471 of 1920.

Mr. Nilkanth Atmaram, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sued for an injunction against defendants restraining them from obstructing the plaintiffs or their men in the enjoyment of the plaint land. It was alleged that the plaint land belonged to plaintiff No. 1, and was in her vahivat, that her husband held and enjoyed the land as remuneration for his services as sanadi; that defendant No. 1 had no right to it; that the services were recently stopped and the land shown in attached sanadi land; that the khata was changed to the name of plaintiff No. 1; and that full assessment was collected from her.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 by their written statement contended that the plaint land was assigned for sanadi services and was in the possession of defendant No. 1; that defendant No. 1 had worked therein that the plaintiffs were not in possession of it; that the land was the ancestral land of the family; that Lingoo and his brothers, Sakharam and defendant No. 1 divided the land; that Lingoo was being paid Rs. 20 for his services as Sanadi by his brothers; that on his death in 1906 defendant No. 1's son Kallappa was appointed a sanadi by Government and was given the whole land for his remuneration by Government; that Kallappa got no money for his remuneration; that the services were stopped in 1911; that full assessment was being collected from Kallappa after the land was attached; that Kallappa performed the services whenever necessary till his death in 1914; that since then defendant No. 1 performed the services whenever necessary; that as the land was sanadi whoever performed the services was the owner of the land; that the land became Kallappa's as the services were stopped when he was performing them; that thereafter defendant No. 1 was the owner as he performed the services that after Sakharam and Lingoo died in 1907, Sakharam's son, Rama, and Lingoo's widow Balabai (plaintiff) began to reside in defendant No. 1's house; that plaintiff began to manage the affairs of the family and took care of Rama; and that as she was the elderly person in the family and was managing the affairs defendant No. 1 consented to the change of khata to her name.

The first issue was: "Does plaintiff prove that she has possession of the suit land?" That was found in the affirmative. It is unfortunate that a further issue was not raised, whether defendants proved that they had title to the land, because it would be open to the defendants in a suit of this character to resist an injunction being passed against them if they could show that the plaintiff in possession asking for an injunction had no title.

In Hanmantrav v. Secretary of State for India (1), it was held that the plaintiff being in possession (not shown to have wrongfully originated), such possession was good against the whole world except the person who could show better title, and that the burden of proving such title lay on the defendant. Mr. Justice Ranade said:—

"When a person in possession of land has been dispossessed and sues to recover it, the fact of his previous possession will not entitle him to a decree unless he sues under s. 9 of the Specific Relief Act... within six months of the date of dispossession: If he sues after the six months have expired, he must prove prima facie title. In such a case he is entitled to a decree unless a superior title is proved on the other side."

In this case the plaintiff is not suing for possession after dispossession, but she has proved a prima facie title coupled with possession. Therefore, she is entitled to be protected against disturbance by an outsider unless such outsider proves that he has a better title than the plaintiff. If this decree were to stand the defendants would be debarred from proving that they had a good title against the plaintiff to the land in dispute. We do not think that is consonant with justice. Consequently we must set aside the decree and remand the case to the lower Court so that the defendants may have an opportunity of proving that they have a superior title to the land in suit. As, however, they are responsible for this issue not having been raised in the Trial Court, the appellants must pay the costs of the suit in this Court and in the Court below. Costs in the Trial Court will be costs in the cause. Liberty to both parties to adduce additional evidence on that issue.

Under s. 10 (1) of the Agra Tenancy Act no ex-proprietary rights are created where there is an alienation by gift and it is immaterial whether the gift is between co-sharers or in favour of a stranger. In the case of a gift the sir must retain its character in the hands of the donee [p. 698, col. 2.]

Elahi Bux v. Nand Kishore, 31 Ind. Cas. 906, followed.

Where certain plots of land have been the exclusive sir and khud kasht of a co-sharer from more than twelve years and are let out to a sub-tenant who is the exclusive tenant of such co-sharer, the latter is by himself entitled to eject the sub-tenant and it is not necessary for him in a suit for ejectment to implead persons who though co-sharers in the khewat or the mahal have no interest in the particular plots of land to which the suit relates. There is no rule of Hindu Law under which a daughter's son and his maternal grandfather can be deemed members of a joint Hindu family. [p. 699, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Meerut, dated the 17th February 1923.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for ejectment. The Courts below have decreed the claim.

The lower Appellate Court has found that the plots in suit were sir and khudkasht of more than 12 years standing belonging to Man Singh exclusively, and that the defendant who is a daughter's son of Man Singh was recorded in the papers as a sub-tenant and has actually been paying rent as such to Man Singh. Man Singh gifted these plots to the plaintiffs-respondents who according to the Judge obtained mutation of names in their favour on the 3rd of August 1921.

The first point raised is that after the transfer in 1921 Man Singh became ex-proprietary tenant and that, therefore, the plaintiffs have no right to eject the defendant, a sub-tenant, but that the only person who can eject would be the ex-proprietary tenant. This point was never raised in either of the Courts below at all. The reason obviously is that the point is altogether futile. The transfer in question was by way of a gift to the plaintiffs. Under s. 10, sub-cl. (1) no ex-proprietary rights are created when there is an alienation by gift. It has been contended before me that that exemption is confined to cases where the gift is between co-sharers in the mahal. I am unable to accept this contention. Gift is not confined to that between co-sharers, but it is only exchange which is so confined. This was the view expressed by the Board of Revenue in the case of Elahi Bux v. Nand Kishore (1). I fully agree with the view expressed in that case. If the transfer is by gift the sir must retain its character in the hands of the donee.

The next point taken is that the plaintiffs have no locus standi to sue alone. It is urged that under s. 194 of the Tenancy Act the other co-sharers in the village ought to have been impleaded. There is absolutely no force in this contention. The learned Judge has pointed out that these specific plots belonged to Man Singh and that the plaintiffs-respondents have acquired these specific plots from the person who had exclusive possession of them as his sir and khudkasht for more than 12 years, and that the plaintiffs-respondents are the owners of these plots. The mere fact that there are other co-sharers in the same mahal does not give them any right or interest in these specific plots. The defendant is the exclusive tenant of the persons to whom these specific plots belong and these latter persons by themselves are entitled to eject him. It is wholly unnecessary to implead persons who though co-sharers in khewat or the mahal, have no interest in these specific plots. There was, therefore, no defect of non-joinder in the suit.

The third point raised is that the learned Judge was wrong in finding that the defendant and Man Singh were not members of a joint Hindu family. I am unable to appreciate the significance of this plea. Dungar is the son of a daughter of Man Singh. The daughter of Man Singh cannot in law be deemed to belong to Man Singh's joint family after she has been married away to another family. Her son does not belong to Man Singh's joint family. There is no rule of Hindu Law under which a daughter's son and his maternal grandfather are deemed to be members of a joint Hindu family.

Lastly it is urged that there is no evidence to support the finding of the learned Judge that these specific plots were transferred by Man Singh to the plaintiffs. There was no plea taken in the grounds of appeal that there is no such evidence on the record Had such a plea been taken it would have been the duty of the Counsel for the appellant to examine the record before hand and certify that such a plea was well-founded. The respondents' Counsel cannot be taken by surprise at a late stage when the appeal is called on for hearing. I cannot allow this plea to be taken. I may also mention that Mr. Sanyal is not even at this moment prepared to certify that such a ground is well-founded. What he really asks is that he may be given half an hour's time to inspect the record to enable him to certify the plea. I cannot allow this.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs.

SHIVLAL NABHUBHAI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1871), ss. 1, 29, Sch. II, Art. 148—Mortgage—Redemption—Acknowledgment made after expiry of period of limitation, whether extends limitation.

Plaintiff instituted a suit to redeem certain property situated in the Panch Mahals District said to have been mortgaged on 8th June 1761. The plaintiff relied upon an acknowledgment said to have been made by the descendants of the mortgagee in 1858. The Panch Mahals District became a part of British India in 1861 and the first Act of Limitation which applied to that District was Act IX of 1871:

Held, (1) that the suit not having been brought within two years of the coming into force of Act IX of 1871, the period of limitation applicable to it was that provided by Art. 148 of Sch. II to that Act; [p. 699, col. 2.]

(2) that limitation under Art. 148 of Sch. II to the Limitation Act of 1871 began to run from the date of the mortgage and that the suit was, therefore, barred by time; [p. 700, col. 1.]

(3) that the alleged acknowledgment made in 1858 having been made more than sixty years after the date of the mortgage did not operate to extend limitation. [p. 699, col. 2.]

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Ahmedabad, in Appeal No. 217 of 1919, confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge at Godhra, in Civil Suit No. 249 of 1916.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. M. H. Mehta), for the Appellant.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Mr. H. V. Divatia), for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This action was instituted by the plaintiff to redeem and recover possession of property said to have been mortgaged by a mortgage-deed of June 8, 1761. The lower Courts have held the mortgage proved, though there may be considerable doubts whether the original document, of which Ex. 84 purported to be a copy, was really a mortgage within the terms of s. 58 of the Transfer of Property Act. However, we may assume, for the purposes of this appeal, that the property was mortgaged in 1761.

The next question is whether the suit is within time. The plaintiff relied upon an acknowledgment said to have been made by the descendants of the mortgagee in 1858. Assuming again that there was such an acknowledgment, which I am not prepared to accept without doubts, would that be an acknowledgment sufficient to save the time bar? It is conceded that the Indian Limitation Act IX of 1871 applied to this mortgage, and consequently a suit to redeem would have to be brought within two years of the Indian Limitation Act coming into force, as the mortgage had been executed more than sixty years before that date, and if a suit was brought thereafter the plaintiff would have to rely on an acknowledgment of his title to redeem, given in writing and signed by the mortgagee or some one claiming under him within sixty years of suit. But the acknowledgment, assuming there was one in 1858, having been given more than sixty years after the date of the mortgage, will not avail the plaintiff, as it seems, in spite of the ingenious argument of the appellant's Counsel, that it comes within the decision of the Privy Council in Fatimatulnissa Begum v. Sunder Das (1). In that case the mortgage was dated October 17, 1788. The suit would have been barred in the absence of any acknowledgment made within sixty years from the date of the mortgage on October 17, 1848, by the effect of Act XIV of 1859, s. 1, cl. (15) which barred the suit after January 1, 1862. Act IX of 1871, by s. 29, provided that at the expiration of the period granted to any person for instituting a suit for the possession of land his right to such land should be extinguished. Their Lordships dealing with the contention that there had been a written acknowledgment prior to October 17, 1848, held that it had not been proved, with the result, that as from October 17, 1848, the right of the mortgagors to sue was barred by force of the Act of 1859 and their right to the land was extinguished by force of the Act of 1871.

In this case, therefore, not only was the right to sue barred by the force of the Act of 1871, the first Act of Limitation applicable to the case, but the mortgagor's right to the land was also extinguished, for it is impossible to distinguish the case I have cited on the question of principle from the case before us. There are many other grounds on which the plaintiff's suit could be dismissed, but it is sufficient for our purpose to hold that the suit for redemption is barred.

I should like before concluding this judgment to make special reference to the really admirable judgment of the Subordinate Judge in the Trial Court. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

Crump, J.—I agree that this suit is barred by limitation. The land is situated in the Panch Mahals District, which up to 1861 was not part of British India. At the time of the cession of that District to the British Government, the Act governing limitation was Act XIV of 1859, but that Act had no application to non-regulation or scheduled districts unless specially extended, and it is not disputed that before the enactment of Act IX of 1871 there was no Statute providing a period of limitations or suits in the Panch Mahals District. The position, therefore, was that prior to the enactment of 1871 there was no limitation to a suit of this nature. But assuming that before the Act of 1871 came into force any person was subject to the provisions of that Act, such a person had the option of filing the suit before April 1, 1873. But if he did not do so, then the period of limitation will be that provided in the Schedule to the Act of 1871.

The question which we have to determine is whether any such suit, as I have indicated, not having been filed, a suit of the nature now before us would be barred under the Act of 1871. For that purpose reference must be made to Art. 148 of the Second Schedule. The period allowed by Art. 148 is sixty years, and in the third column it is said that the time will be extended where an acknowledgment of the title of the mortgagor or of his right of redemption has been made within the prescribed period. Now assuming that we have here such an acknowledgment, then the question is whether that acknowledgment is within the prescribed period. For the purpose of Art. 148 I take it that the Indian Limitation Act of 1871 should be construed as having a retrospective operation. "Prescribed period" really means a period of sixty years from the date of the mortgage, and it is conceded that if the document, on which reliance is placed, can be read as disclosing an acknowledgment, that acknowledgment was made more than sixty years from the date of the mortgage. It seems to me, therefore, clear that had the Act of 1871 been applicable to a suit filed for redemption that suit would have been barred, and it is also perfectly clear that the right to sue cannot have been revived by any subsequent enactment.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 1—Mortgage by adult members of joint Hindu family, suit on—Minor member of family, not made party, effect of—Suit, whether maintainable.

In the case of a mortgage executed by the adult members of a joint Hindu family it is open to the mortgagee, in a suit for sale on foot of the mortgage, to ask the Court to grant him a decree against the persons who borrowed the money from him and who had executed the mortgage, for they cannot be allowed to plead want of authority to make the mortgage. Such a suit is not liable to dismissal merely on the ground that a minor member of the joint family of the mortgagors has not been impleaded as a party to the suit. The decree, however, passed in such a suit would not affect the interests of the minor who has not been made a party to the suit.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 26th October 1922.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Appellants.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for the sale on the basis of a mortgage-deed executed on the 4th of July 1911 by two brothers, Nathu and Faqira, the defendants.

The defendants, inter alia pleaded that Nathu's son Chhajju who is a minor and a member of a joint Hindu family had not been impleaded. The plaintiffs did not choose to implead him in this case and it is unfortunate that the Court of first instance also perhaps to avoid complications did not think it worthwhile to bring him on the record and thus dispose of all possible disputes.

The Court of first instance, however, dismissed the claim on the ground that Chhajju, the minor member of the family had not been impleaded and the suit, therefore, was defective on the ground of non-joinder. In this, reliance was placed on the case of Shiam Sunder Lal v. Budhu Lal (1).

The lower Appellate Court has allowed the appeal and held that the suit could not fail on the ground of non-joinder but that the major members of the family actually represented the minor member also and that thus the suit was not defective It has relied on the case of Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (2).

We are of opinion that the decree of the lower Appellate Court must be upheld but we intentionally refrain from upholding it on the ground that the minor member is represented by the major members.

Our attention has been invited on behalf of the respondents to the case of Chetan Singh v. Sartaj Singh (3) and it is urged that it supports the view of the lower Appellate Court.

We would like to point out one circumstance which has sometimes been overlooked and which clearly explains the rule of law laid down in the Full Bench case of Hori Lal v. Nimman Kunwar (2). In that case the mortgagees were not suing the mortgagor, namely, the executant himself, but were trying to follow mortgaged property in the hands of the heirs of the transferee from the mortgagor. Some minor members of the family of the transferee from the mortgagor had not been impleaded. In that case it was obvious that no question of the right of a Hindu minor son to challenge an alienation by the major members for want of legal necessity at all arose. The only question was whether the suit as against the then defendant was maintainable. The Full Bench held that, although the property had been acquired from the mortgagor by the defendant's father it had been acquired by the entire joint family but nevertheless as the major members were impleaded they had represented all the other members. In the same way it may perhaps be pointed out that in the case of Chetan Singh v. Sartaj Singh (3), the suit was against the heirs of the original mortgagor and not the mortgagor himself.

In the present case we have already noted that the plaintiffs are suing the actual parties to the mortgage-deed, namely, Nathu and Faqira. It is open to the plaintiffs to ask the Court to grant them a decree against the persons who borrowed the money from them and who had made the mortgage as executants, for they cannot be allowed to plead want of authority to make the mortgage. It is difficult to see how in these circumstances the defendants can be said to represent the minor son in the true sense of the word. It is on that ground that we refrain from saying that the suit is a good one because the major members represented the minor. We would like to make it clear that even after this decree it would remain open to Chhajju Singh to sue in a Civil Court to avoid the alienation on grounds which are ordinarily open to Hindu minor members. With this remark we dis-

Under O. XVI, r. 1 of the C. P. C., a party to a suit is entitled as of right to obtain summonses at any time before the date fixed for the disposal of the suit, and on an application being made for the issue of summonses the Court is bound to issue the summonses and cannot refuse to do so on the ground that the application is made at too late a stage in the suit and that it would not be possible to get the summonses served upon the witnesses in time. Second appeal from the decision of the Joint Judge, Poona, in Appeal No. 195 of 1921, confirming the decree of the Subordinate Judge at Vadgaon, in Civil Suit No. 125 of 1917.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. G. Sathaye, for Respondent No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was filed so far back as April 2, 1917. For one reason or another the hearing of the suit was not fixed until April 13, 1921. On April 2, 1921, the plaintiff applied that summonses should be issued to the persons mentioned in the list of witnesses filed in the Court. The learned Judge said :—

"The application is made at too late a stage in this suit. It is not possible to get the summonses served in time as the date fixed is only April 13, 1921. No satisfactory reason is given for calling for the original record of Government. The application is rejected with costs on the plaintiff."

Thereafter the suit was heard and dismissed with costs. The appeal met the same fate.

Unfortunately the attention of neither of the learned Judges was called to the decision of this Court in Baikali v. Alarakh Pirbhai (1), where it was held that "under s. 159 of the C. P. C., (XIV of 1882) a party to a suit was entitled, as of right, to obtain summonses any time before the date fixed for the disposal of the suit." Section 159 of the old Code is now O. XVI, r. 1, of the Code of 1908, and consequently the Judge was bound to issue summonses to the witnesses according to the application of the plaintiff. If then an adjournment had been asked for at the hearing because the witnesses mentioned in the list, filed on April 2, 1921, did not attend, the Court would have considered whether it should be granted. We must, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the suit to the Trial Court for a re-trial.

All costs to be costs in the cause.

Muhammadan Law—Wakf—Coercion—Undue influence.

A childless Muhammadan of about 67 years of age executed a deed of wakf, comprising the greater portion of his property, by which he appointed himself the mutwalli of the wakf during his lifetime and appointed one of his nephews as mutwalli after his death. Another nephew was appointed supervisor and provision was made for the emolument and expenses of both of them. It was found that the settlor was of sound disposing mind at the time of the execution of the deed. He reserved a substantial portion of the property for the maintenance of himself and his wife. He continued to live for seven years after the execution of the deed and gave effect to it in the character of mutwalli:

Held, that it could not be said that the provision in favour of the nephews was at all unreasonable or that the settlor had been dominated or coerced by his nephews into executing the deed.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Oudh (Mr. Daniels, A. J. C. and Mr. Dalal, A. J. C.), dated the 10th November 1922, in First Civil Appeal No. 55 of 1920, reported as 74 Ind. Cas. 517.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne and B. Dube, for the Appellants.

Messrs. DeGruyther and S. Hyam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Sumner.—In July of 1911 Mirza Habibullah Beg executed a deed of wakf. He was at that time a man of about 67 years age. He lived for some seven years afterwards. In substance this appeal raises, and raises only, the question whether that deed of wakf ought to be set aside upon the ground that Mirza Habibullah Beg's mind was so dominated by two nephews, who managed his business, that the transaction ought not to stand. The Trial Judge misled, as their Lordships think, by some misappprehension as to the onus of proof and also by some confusion between setting aside the whole deed and merely avoiding a particular provision in a deed which benefits a person under a fiduciary relation to the maker of it, came to the conclusion that he should set aside the entire deed of wakf. This judgment was reversed on appeal. There are concurrent findings of fact that Mirza Habibullah Beg when he executed this deed was compos mentis, was of a sound disposing mind, and, as far as is known, was in no way disqualified by his infirmities from understanding what he was doing. During the rest of his life he not only never challenged this deed of wakf, but there is evidence that he recognised it, spoke of it as being in existence, and gave effect to it, he himself having been named in it as the mutwalli during his lifetime. He did not denude himself of the whole of his property, for he reserved a substantial portion for the maintenance of himself and his wife. He was himself childless and when the deed comes to be examined it is in no respect unconscionable. Though not very skilfully prepared, it is quite clear and is entirely such as a reasonable and piously disposed Muhammadan might have chosen to enter into. The only thing that can be said against it, or that has been said against it, in substance is that it conferred certain benefits upon these two nephews because one was appointed mutwalli after Mirza Habibullah Beg himself, and the other was appointed supervisor, and provision was made for their emoluments and expenses. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner formed the opinion, with which their Lordships entirely agree, that such provision was not at all unreasonable in amount or in character, and under these circumstances they came to the conclusion, which their Lordships think is the right conclusion, that, as a matter of fact, the deed was the disposition of Mirza Habibullah Beg himself, made with an understanding mind, free from domination or coercion or undue influence by others. They also found, and their Lordships agree in the finding, that he was not coerced or dominated in any way from that time to the day of his death, a finding which in itself would dispose of the matter, because unless the contrary can be made out, the suit is barred by limitation. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner went elaborately into the authorities, and their Lordships think it unnecessary to discuss them now. They show that there is no question here which is not disposed of by the findings of fact. The Court of the Judicial Commissioner further expressed an opinion upon the question whether, according to the Mussulman Law, a wakf of cash is valid. This has not been discussed before their Lordships, and without indicating any dissent from the opinion of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, their Lordships think it unnecessary to express any opinion upon this point of their own. In the result the appeal fails and should be dismissed with costs and their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to that effect.

Hindu Law—Joint family—Sale by co-parcener—

Possession obtained by purchaser, whether wrongful—Mesne profits, liability for.

Although the purchaser of a particular portion of joint family property or of the interest of one of the members of the family in any particular item of joint property may not be entitled to possession, yet if he gets possession his possession cannot be considered as wrongful against the other members of the family and he is not liable to account for the mesne profits. All that the law allows is that a co-parcener is entitled to recover possession from an outsider of the joint family property or any portion of it. But if he stands by and allows an outsider to remain in possession, then although his share in that property or interest in that property is not thereby affected, he is not entitled to demand an account for the past profits.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Dhulia, in Suit No. 188 of 1918.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad (with him Mr. R. W. Desai), for the Appellants.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Mr. M. V. Bhat), for Respondent No.1.

JUDGMENT.—[His Lordship, after stating the facts proceeded:—] With regard to the mesne profits, we do not think that the auction-purchasers were bound to account to Vallabh for mesne profits before proceedings were taken for partition of the properties. The learned Judge has allowed mesne profits on the ground that the auction-purchasers were in possession wrongfully. But although the purchaser of a particular portion of joint family property, or the purchaser of the interest of one of the members of the family in any particular item of joint property may not be entitled to possession, it follows, if he gets possession, that his possession cannot be considered as wrongful possession against the other members and he cannot be liable to account for the mesne profits. All that the law allows, as we understand it, is that a co-parcener is entitled to recover possession from an outsider of the joint family property or any portion of it. But if he stands by and allows an outsider to remain in possession, then although his share in that property or interest in that property is not thereby affected, he is not entitled to demand an account for the past profits. We think that although the decree in Suit No. 212 of 1915 was confirmed by the High Court, it was intended that if the plaintiff filed his suit for partition, the question with regard to mesne profits would remain open. That is the only possible interpretation that can be put on that order, because we do not think that it was intended that the question of mesne profits should be excluded from the purview of any suit that the plaintiff might file under the direction of the High Court order dated March 1, 1918. We think, therefore, that in this case defendant Vallabh is only entitled to mesne profits from the date of suit at the rate at which they have been calculated, namely, Rs. 300 a year, in the previous suit. That will be the amount which the plaintiffs will be responsible for, and they must be given credit for the amount which was already paid by them in execution proceeding in Suit No. 212 of 1915. The order of the lower Court will, therefore, stand with this addition that the defendant No. 2 shall be held to be entitled to the mesne profits from the date of suit at Rs. 300 a year with interest until he gets possession of his father's share, or until partition, and that credit must be given for the amount of Rs. 1,735 paid in execution of the decree in Suit No. 212 of 1915.

Out of the other twelve suits in which decrees were passed for partition and payment of mesne profits to Vallabh, only two of the defendants auction-purchasers have filed appeals. These are Appeals Nos. 262 and 263 of 1921. The order in each suit awarding past mesne profits to the plaintiff Vallabh must be deleted so that only the inquiry as to future profits from the date of suit till recovery of possession of partition will stand.

In all the other suits in which orders have been passed for mesne profits, the question of mesne profits should be restricted to mesne profits from the date of suit. Credit must be given with regard to any past mesne profits which have been paid. All the parties are before us in the partition suit either as appellants or as respondents so that if any appeals have been filed in the lower Court they can be transferred pro forma to this Court.

KALLAPA MALLAPPA HOSMANI—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT

KALAPPA NINGAPPA—PLAINTIFF—RESPONDENT.

Adverse possession—Death of owner—Brother of deceased managing property—Adoption by widow of deceased—Appeal, second—New point of law.

The High Court will, in second appeal, allow a point of law, which arises on the issues as framed and on the evidence led in the Trial Court, to be taken for the first time. But if the point sought to be taken is such that it cannot be decided without remanding the case for further evidence the High Court will not allow it to be raised.

On the death of a Hindu his widow continued to live with his brother, who also obtained possession of the property of the deceased. The widow subsequently made an adoption, and the adopted son sued to recover the property from the brother of the deceased:

Held, that under the circumstances it must be presumed that the defendant managed the property on behalf of his brother's widow intending merely to help her and that his possession was not adverse either to the widow or to the plaintiff.

Letters Patent Appeal against the decision of Mr. Kincaid, J., in Appeal No. 246 of 1922, summarily dismissing an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 277 of 1920, reversing a decree passed by the Subordinate Judge, Bail-Hongal, in Civil Suit No. 351 of 1919.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. H. B. Gumaste), for the Appellant.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee, (with him Mr. A. G. Desai), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—[His Lordship after setting out facts said:—] It is now argued that even assuming that certain property was assigned by Mallappa to Nigappa and Basvantappa, they would not hold it as joint tenants but as tenants-in-common, so that when Basvantappa died and his widow re-married his share of the property would go to his heirs. Now it is quite clear that no attempt was made to raise this question in either of the lower Courts. If it was a point of law arising on the issues as framed and on the evidence as led in the Trial Court, there is no doubt that in second appeal we could have entertained that point. But it is quite clear that we could not decide this point of law without remanding the case for further evidence, and that being so the point of law is no longer competent. Moreover, it may safely be assumed that under the arrangement by which Mallappa divided his property between his children by his two wives it was intended that Nigappa and Basvantappa should take the property assigned to them together with their mother, and that when Basvantappa died Ningappa should remain in possession as survivor. However that may be, the point was never taken in the lower Courts and cannot be taken now.

Then the only question remaining is whether defendant, Kalappa, can be said to have acquired a title by adverse possession to the suit property. No doubt, as found by the Trial Court, there are certain facts proved to show the manner in which Kallappa dealt with the property after Ningappa died when Ningappa's widow Irava was living with him. It is a question whether on these facts the proper inference is that Kallappa was holding adversely to the reversioners who would succeed to the property on the death of Irava. If Kallappa had been an outsider the inference to be drawn from his conduct would have been entirely different. Taking into consideration the relationship of the parties, and the fact that Irava had no other male member in the family to manage her property, it was not an impossible inference to draw that Kallappa, so far from asserting a right to hold the property against the reversioners, was intending only to help his brother's widow. That being the case when Irava adopted the plaintiff he would be entitled to recover the property which had belonged to the adoptive father. Therefore, the judgment of the Court below was right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Shah, J.—I agree.

Competency in s. 11, C. P. C., has reference to the value of the suit and not to territorial jurisdiction.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Coimbatore, in A. S. No. 206 of 1923, preferred against that of the Court of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, in O. S. No. 27 of 1922 (O. S. No. 101 of 1919, Principal Sub-Court, Coimbatore).

Mr. W. Subrahmanya Iyer, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—We think the judgment of Innes, J., in O. S. No. 5 of 1877 makes the present suit res judicata. The Original Side of the High Court was certainly competent to take cognizance of the present suit with reference to the value of the suit. We are of opinion that competency in s. 11, C. P. C., has reference to the value of suit and not to the territorial jurisdiction. No authority has been cited against this view by the learned Vakil for the appellant. The property which is now the subject of this suit was also the subject of the former suit. The plaintiff has not pleaded that, in spite of the Settlement of 1876 and the decree in O. S. No. 5 of 1877, she was in possession of the suit properties adversely to those who are entitled to them under the settlement and decree and acquired a title by adverse possession. Even if the allegation of possession in the plaint put was meant to raise this no issue was taken.

The second appeal is dismissed.

COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX—APPELLANT

versus

SIR PURSHOTTAMDAS THAKURDAS—RESPONDENT.

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), s. 4 (3) (vii)—Income arising from business—Extraordinary transaction—Exemption from assessment.

In order to take a case out of the exemption provided for by s. 4 (3) (vii) of the Income Tax Act it is not necessary that the receipts should arise from a business continuously carried on during the year. Even if they arose from a single adventure in business they would be liable to be taxed. The mere fact that the receipts arise from an extraordinary transaction although connected with the business of the assessee, which has only occurred owing to exceptional circumstances, and which would not be likely to occur again for many years, would not place the receipts in the same category as receipts entirely disconnected with the business or the profession or vocation or occupation of the assessee which might be considered of a casual and a non-recurring nature and, therefore, exempt from assessment under s. 4 (3) (vii). [p. 707, col. 2.]

The assessee, a cotton merchant was appointed under a power-of-attorney to dispose of a certain quantity of cotton for and on behalf of a firm after deducting his remuneration and to distribute the sale-proceeds in a certain manner. The transaction was of an extraordinary nature and was brought about by a crisis in the cotton market:

Held, that the remuneration earned by the assessee from the transaction was income arising from "business" within the meaning of s. 4 (3) (vii) of the Income Tax Act and was consequently not exempt from assessment. [ibid.]

Civil reference made by the Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay Presidency, under s. 66 (2) of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1922.

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General, (with him Sir John Bowen, Government Solicitor), for the Referor.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad for Messrs. Captain and Vaidya, for the Assessee.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference under s. 66 (2) of the Indian Income Tax Act XI of 1922 by the Commissioner of Income Tax, Bombay Presidency, in the matter of the assessment of the income of Sir Purshottamdas Thakordas, hereafter called the assessee. In his return of income for the purposes of assessment for the year 1923-24, the assessee, while declaring his income from all sources, had made a note as under:—

"Besides this, I received during Sumvat year 1978 Rs. 1,88,750 as remuneration for winding up the estate of Umar Sobani which being an extraordinary source of income is not liable to taxation."

The Income Tax Officer, however, did not exempt this item from assessment. Thereupon an appeal was lodged before the Assistant Commissioner of Income Tax who held that this item was rightly taxed. Thereupon the assessee applied for a reference, and the Commissioner of Income Tax has made this reference on the question raised with his opinion thereon.

It seems strange that in a reference of this kind, the Commissioner has not stated what was the professisn, vocation or occupation of the assessee. But it has been admitted during the course of the argument that the assessee is a cotton merchant.

In 1922 there was a crisis in the cotton market owing to endeavours made by the firm of Umar Sobani to corner the market. He had been compelled to keep on making very extensive purchases of cotton in order to maintain prices, but his resources failing it became known to the creditors of the firm, and the market in general, that the firm was not in a position to finance further the huge purchases which had been made so that its failure had become imminent. As a crisis would necessarily result if all its purchases were thrown upon the market, the firm and its creditors looked out for some one who would command the confidence of themselves and of all concerned to hold the cotton already purchased and sell it to the best advantage. The assessee consented to be appointed under a power-of-attorney to dispose of all the cotton bales for and on behalf of the firm, to pay what was due to the several Muccadams and Banks, and after deducting out of the net sale-proceeds of the cotton bales all his costs, charges and expenses in respect thereof and his remuneration to distribute the balance amongst the several persons and firms whose names had already been submitted by the firm of Umar Sobani to the assessee. Under that power-of-attorney the assessee sold over 1,00,000 bales which realized about Rs. 1,63,00,000, and received as his remuneration Rs. 1,88,750. It will be noted that in his return of income when claiming exemption for this sum, the assessee refers to it as an extraordinary source of income. He does not refer to it as being income not arising from business or the exercise of his profession, vocation or occupation, which was of a casual and non-recurring nature. However we may take it that the question now before us is whether the receipts in question can be exempted under s. 4 (3) (vii) of the Act, which says: "Any receipts not being receipts arising from business or the exercise of a profession, vocation or occupation, which are of a casual and non-recurring nature, or are not by way of addition to the remuneration of an employee."

It has been argued for the assessee that these receipts did not arise from business; that "business" connotes continuity; and that only the receipts arising from a business which is carried on continuously can be assessed But the section refers to receipts arising from "business" and not to receipts arising from "a business." The definition of "business" in s. 2 (4) is as follows:—"Business" includes any trade, commerce or manufacture or any adventure or concern in the nature of trade, commerce or manufacture, and consequently it is not necessary that the receipts should arise from a business continuously carried on during the year to make them liable to assessment. Even if they arose from a single adventure in business they would be liable to be taxed.

Now it seems clear that the profession or occupation of the assessee being that of a cotton merchant, any receipts arising from the buying and selling of cotton would be considered as arising from trade or commerce, and the argument that receipts from an extraordinary transaction connected with business, such as the one in this case, which has only occurred owing to exceptional circumstances, and which would not be likely to occur again for many years, can be placed in the same category as receipts entirely disconnected with business or the profession or vocation or occupation of the assessee which might be considered of a casual and non-recurring nature, cannot be accepted.

We are clearly of opinion, therefore, that the remuneration earned by the assessee owing to his having been appointed under a power-of-attorney by Umar Sobani to realise the cotton which he had purchased, must be considered as receipts arising from business, and, therefore, liable to taxation.

There is no need consequently to consider the argument of the Commissioner with regard to the meaning of the word "business" or the word "casual," or the English Authorities which have been cited before us.

The answer to the reference will be that, in our opinion, the receipts in question are not entitled to be exempted from taxation.

The assessee to pay the costs on the Original Side scale.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 106—Notice to quit, service of—Joint tenants—Notice to each tenant, whether necessary.

A notice to quit under s. 106 of the Transfer of Property Act must be addressed to and served on the persons intended to be bound by it in any one of the modes suggested in the section. The section does not make any exception or lay down any special or peculiar procedure in the case of joint tenants. [p. 709, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is necessary, in order to bind even a joint tenant, that the notice must be addressed to and served on him in one of the ways mentioned in the second clause of the section. JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was one for ejectment after service of notice to quit on the defendants. The Court of first instance found that the defendants were permanent tenure-holders and in that view dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The plaintiff appealed and the lower Appellate Court was invited by both the parties to try the propriety and legality of the service of notice before going into the question of the status of the defendants. The learned Subordinate Judge found that the notices were not duly served and dismissed the suit on that ground.

The plaintiff has appealed to this Court and the only ground taken before us is that in the circumstances of this case it should have been held that the notices were legally served. On this point three grounds were taken before the lower Appellate Court. The first is that defendant No. 1 was the karta of the joint family and the service of notice on him was sufficient in respect of all the members of the family including the defendant No. 9 on whom notice was not proved to have been served. The second ground is that defendant No. 1 being the registered tenant service on him alone was sufficient; and the third is that the defendants being all tenants-in-common service of notice on one of them should be taken as service on all. The first two grounds have been finally disposed of by the learned Subordinate Judge by coming to certain findings of fact which cannot be challenged in second appeal. The learned Judge has found that defendant No. 1 was not the karta of the family and that he was not the sole registered tenant in the plaintiff's sherista. The ground which is pressed before us is the third ground, namely, that all the defendants being tenants-in-common or more properly, joint tenants, service of notice on any one of them is good in law. The learned Subordinate Judge observes that it was virtually admitted and was proved, that no notice to quit was ever served on defendant No. 9 who was all along ignored though his brothers were treated as tenants and that he was subsequently added as a defendant in the suit. In support of the view urged by the appellant reliance has been placed on the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Harihar Banerjee v. Ramshashi Roy (1). The facts of that case are that the plaintiff's gomastha had sent to each of the defendants by registered letters addressed to them at their addresses duplicates of the notices signed by all the plaintiffs. For this he received receipts of registration. The peon of the Post Office knew all their houses and got from all of them receipts for the letters delivered. The Munsif, however, held upon the evidence that there was no proof of service of notice to quit on any of the defendants other than defendants Nos. 1, 4 and 5. Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee examined the evidence on the point on the record and in their Lordships' view the evidence of delivery of notice to quit on all the principal defendants was adequately proved and constituted good service on them within the meaning of s. 106, Transfer of Property Act. In the course of their judgment their Lordships observe that "a notice under s. 106, Transfer of Property Act, may be served either personally or to one of the family or servants of the person intended to be bound by it at his residence, or if such tender or delivery be not practicable affixed to a conspicuous part of the property. The personal tender or delivery may take place anywhere; the vicarious tender or delivery must take place at the residence of the person intended to be bound by the notice. The procedure in the case of joint tenants is that each is intended to be bound, and it has long ago been decided that service of a notice to quit upon one joint tenant is prima facie evidence that it has reached the other joint tenant". Their Lordships relied upon some of the English cases which will be considered later on. In this case it has been found by the learned Subordinate Judge that the place of residence of defendant No. 9 was in Calcutta and not at the place where the notice was served. The only question, therefore, for consideration is whether service of notice upon defendant No. 1 or any other defendant can be taken in law as good service on defendant No. 9. Section 106, Transfer of Property Act, requires that every notice under that section must be in writing and tendered or delivered over personally to the party who is intended to be bound by it, or to one of the family or servants at the residence or if such tender or delivery is not practicable it can be affixed to a conspicuous part of the property. Reading the section as it stands without any help of the comments upon it by decided cases, it is manifest that it was the intention of the Legislature that the notice must be served on the person who is intended to be bound by it. The notice must be addressed to and served on the person intended to be bound by it in any one of the modes suggested by the section. The section does not make any exception or lay down any special or peculiar procedure in the case of joint tenants. The law as to notice to quit is contained in s. 106, Transfer of Property Act, and it is not necessary to travel beyond it. Great stress has been laid upon the observation of the Judicial Committee in Harihar's case (1) and on the cases referred to therein for the view that in the case of joint tenants it is sufficient to serve the notice to quit on one of them alone and the service of notice on one of them is binding on the other tenants. We do not think that this contention can be sustained in view of the law laid down in those cases. In the Privy Council case, as we have observed, the notices were addressed to all the defendants and their Lordships found that it was served on all of them. In the case of Doe d. Macartney v. Crick (2), one of the cases referred to by the Judicial Committee, an oral notice to quit was given by the landlord to one of the two brothers who were joint tenants. This was followed by a written notice dated the 8th April served on both the tenants. The suit in ejectment was resisted by the defendants on the ground that the time allowed by law was not observed and that parol notice was not binding on the other. Lord Ellenborough held that the written notice was not necessary; and, with regard to the oral notice, as the two defendants appeared to hold the lands jointly, service of notice to quit on one was sufficient and that the notice given on the 8th April was within the statutory period. This case proceeds upon the English Law then in force according to which oral notice was sufficient, but the law under the Transfer of Property Act is different. That case is, therefore, no authority for the view that if no notice is addressed to one of the joint tenants, the mere service of notice upon the other joint tenant is a sufficient notice according to law. The next case to which reference is made in the judgment of the Judicial Committee in the case of Harihar Banerjee v. Ramshashee Roy (1) is the case of Doe d. Bedford v. Watkins (3). In that case also it appears that the notices to quit were addressed to both the defendants who were joint tenants and partners of the business. The notices, however, were served through one of the tenants living on the premises. On these facts it was held that the notice to quit served on one of the two joint tenants on the premises, who held under a joint demise, is evidence that the notice reached the other who lived elsewhere. That case also is no authority for the view that it is not necessary to address a notice to a joint tenant and that service on any one of them is sufficient in law. The case of Doe d. Bedford v. Watkins (3), is interesting in that it has been held that the question whether service of notice on one of the joint tenants was sufficient notice on the other tenant who was not served is a question of fact and must be left to the Jury. In the present case the learned Subordinate Judge has come to a finding of fact on evidence that there was no service or tender of notice to defendant No. 9, nor was any notice addressed to him. The view we take is not supported by any reported authority in a direct form; but it is indirectly supported by the decision in the case of Rajoni Bibi v. Hafisonnissa Bibi (4). In that case a notice containing the names of all the joint tenants was delivered to one of the defendants and the objection taken was that there ought to have been as many copies of the notice as there were tenants. This objection was overruled in the view that the notice was addressed to and contained the names of all the tenants though it was served on one of them. On a plain reading of s. 106, Transfer of Property Act, and on the consideration of the authorities on this point, we are of opinion that it is necessary in order to bind even a joint tenant that the notice must be addressed to and served on him in one of the ways mentioned in the second clause of that section. It should be addresssd to him and may be served either on him personally or on one of the family or servants or affixed to a conspicuous part of the property. It is difficult to hold that a person whose tenancy or existence is ignored and not recognised, as was defendant No. 9 in the present case, is a "party to be intended to be bound" by the notice under s 106, Transfer of Property Act. The notice in this case on defendant No. 9 not having been thus served, the lower Appellate Court was justified in holding that the service of the notice was not good and sufficient in law to determine the tenancy.

On the date fixed for the hearing of a suit the plaintiff's Pleader asked for an adjournment undertaking to produce his witnesses without summonses. The adjournment was granted but on the adjourned date of hearing the plaintiff was absent. The Court proceeded under O. XVII, r. 3 of the C. P. C., to decide the suit and rejected the plaintiff's claim:

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was originally fixed before the Trial Court for hearing on November 2, 1922. On that date the plaintiff's Pleader asked for an adjournment undertaking to produce his witnesses without summonses. The Court granted an adjournment till November 30, 1922. On November 30, the case was called on but the plaintiff was absent. The Court instead of making an order under O. XVII, r. 2, proceeded under r. 3 to decide the suit and rejected the plaintiff's claim with costs.

On appeal the District Judge was of opinion that that order was wrong, but he considered the appeal before him on its merits holding that the plaintiff had not shown sufficient cause for his non-attendance on November 30. But if the proper order had been made by the Trial Judge under O. XVII, r. 2, it would be the Trial Judge who would have to decide on the application to restore the suit to the Board, whether the plaintiff had sufficient cause for his non-attendance; so we do not think that the decision of the District Jndge on that question is one which was competent. As the initial order was wrong, the appellant was entitled to be heard on the question of his non-appearance by the Trial Court. We think, therefore, that the suit should be restored to the Board on the appellant's first paying all costs which have been incurred by the 1st defendant up-to-date.

These costs should be paid within one month after the proceedings have been returned to the Trial Court.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in A. S. No. 206 of 1920, (A. S. No. 90 of 1919, on the file of the District Court, Vizagapatam), preferred against that of the District Munsif, Razam, in O. S. No. 673 of 1917.

Mr. Y. Suryanarayana, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The only point argued in this second appeal is that the plaint property was not included in the mortgage-deed executed by the 7th defendant in favour of the father of the plaintiffs. The plaint property, according to the evidence of the 2nd plaintiff, was taken delivery of by the 7th defendant. Evidently, the plaint property was included in the schedule attached to the plaint filed by the 7th defendant for redemption, i. e., O. S. No. 296 of 1913. The plaintiffs did not raise any objection as to the items not included in the mortgage. They should have objected to the correctness of the plaint schedule and should have contended that some of the items included in the schedule were not mortgaged to the 7th defendant. The plaintiffs owing to some reason or other did not do so, and the plaint property was treated as one of the properties covered by the mortgage and 7th defendant got possession of it under the redemption decree. The plaintiff now sues for the recovery of the plaint property which according to him was not included in the mortgage-deed. The Subordinate Judge has dismissed the plaintiff's appeal on the ground that it is barred by res judicata and if the plaint property was not included in the suit property in O. S. No. 296 of 1913, it is barred by reason of s. 47, C. P. C. Mr. Suryanarayana relies upon the decision in Ram Chander v. Kondo (1) in which the learned Judges held that if property was wrongly included in the mortgage suit and brought to sale, a separate suit will lie for a declaration that such property was not sold in execution of the mortgage-decree. With all respect to the learned Judges, I am unable to agree with the reasoning in that case. The question ought to have been raised by the plaintiffs whether the plaint properties were or were not being included in the mortgage in favour of the 7th defendant. They failed to do so, and the redemption decree was passed in respect of these very items which are now claimed by the plaintiffs as not having been included in the mortgage. The point ought to have been raised in the other case and not having been raised it cannot be raised now. I think s. 11, cl. 4 is certainly a bar to the plaintiffs suit. The second appeal fails and is dismissed without costs as the respondent does not appear.

NARSINGACHARYA GOPALACHARYA SHURPALI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

TULSABAI RAMBHAT DANDAVATI—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 30—Sale of minor's property by guardian—Sanction of Court, absence of, effect of—Subsequent sale in execution of decree—Priority.

The certificated guardian of a minor sold certain property which the minor had inherited from her father without obtaining the permission of the Court for the sale. Subsequently a person who held a decree against the father of the minor attached and sold the property in execution of his decree and the auction-purchaser obtained possession of the property. The successor-in-interest of the purchaser from the guardian thereupon brought a suit to recover possession of the property from the auction-purchaser:

Held, (1) that the sale by the guardian without the permission of the Court was voidable at the instance of the minor who would be entitled on coming of age to file a suit to get the unauthorised sale set aside, but that as long as such a suit was not brought and as long as no one obtained a better title to the property, the sale by the guardian in favour of the plaintiff would continue to be a valid sale;

(2) that at the time of the auction sale the property could not be treated as the property of the minor which she had inherited from her father as it had already been sold and that, therefore, the auction-purchaser obtained no title under his sale;

(3) that the right of the minor to sue to get the unauthorized sale set aside could neither be attached nor sold and that consequently the purchaser at the auction-sale could not resist the suit of the purchaser from the guardian or of his successor-in-interest, although the sale by the guardian was not sanctioned by the Court.

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge at Dharwar, in Appeal No. 108 of 1921, reversing a decree of the Subordinate Judge at Dharwar, in Suit No. 97 of 1920.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for Respondents Nos. 3 to 6.

JUDGMENT.—The property in dispute in this suit was a shop at Dharwar belonging to one Narsappa, who died leaving a daughter, the present defendant No. 1, then a minor. A guardian was appointed of her person and property by the District Court in 1904. On April 9, 1913, the guardian sold the shop in suit to the second defendant for Rs. 200, without obtaining permission from the District Court for the sale. In 1915 one Sharadabai, who had obtained a decree for maintenance against Narsappa, got the shop attached and sold in execution, and one Dyavappa purchased it at the auction sale. Defendant No. 3 later purchased it from Dyavappa. Plaintiff purchased the property from the second defendant in 1919 and brought the suit to recover possession. The Trial Court decreed the claim.

The lower Appellate Court has dismissed the plaintiff's suit. The learned Judge has misconstrued s. 30 of the Guardians and Wards Act VIII of 1890. The sale by Raghunath in 1913 to the second defendant without the permission of the District Court was voidable at the instance of any other person effected thereby. The only person effected at the time of the unauthorised sale was the minor, and when she came of age, she would be entitled to file a suit to get the unauthorised sale set aside, and as long as she did not do that, and as long as no one obtained a better title to the property, then the sale by the guardian continued to be a valid sale. There was nothing left, therefore, at the time of the execution sale of the property which the minor had inherited from her father, which could be conveyed to the auction-purchaser. The right of the minor to sue to get the unauthorised sale set aside could neither be attached nor sold, and consequently the purchaser at the auction-sale could not oust the purchaser from Raghunath, even although the sale was not sanctioned by the District Court. That was really the only issue in the case, and the issue whether the sale was made for any legal necessity or for the benefit of defendant No. 1's estate was irrelevant. It would only be relevant in a suit by the minor herself.

The appeal will be allowed and the decree of the Trial Court restored with costs throughout.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 193 (g)—Rent, suit for—Decree against landlord paid off by tenant, whether can be pleaded as set-off.

Under cl. (g) of s. 193 of the Agra Tenancy Act it is only a decree held by the defendant himself that can be pleaded as a set-off.

Where a sub-tenant under an ex-proprietary tenant pays off a decree for rent obtained by the zemindar against the ex-proprietary tenant, he is not entitled to plead the payment as a set-off in answer to a suit for rent brought against him by the ex-proprietary tenant.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Budaun, dated the 30th May 1924.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case has my full sympathy, but I am unable to help him.

It appears that the respondent's father who was an ex-proprietary tenant, sub-let the holding to the appellant. The respondent brought the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen, for recovery of arrears of rent for three years. The defendant pleaded payment of five items and his plea of payment succeeded in the Court of first instance. On appeal the learned District Judge has allowed only one item and has disallowed the remaining four. So far as the question of fact is involved, viz., whether the appellant has succeeded in proving payment, this Court cannot entertain it. The only question before this Court is whether the two sums of Rs. 75 and Rs. 144-5 which were admittedly expended by the appellant should have been given credit for.

The above mentioned two items were paid in this way. The zemindar held decrees for rent against the ex-proprietary tenant. The non-payment of the decrees would have involved the ejectment not only of the ex-proprietary tenant, but also of the appellant. The appellant says that he, having paid these two items in order to satisfy the decree held by the zemindar, was entitled to claim a set-off against the rent payable by himself. This would be so but for the provision of s. 193, cl. (g) of the Tenancy Act. Under that provision of law only an unsatisfied decree held by a defendant can be pleaded by way of a set-off. It has been urged that having satisfied the decree held by the zemindar the defendant was placed in the same position as the zemindar himself and was thereby entitled to claim a set-off. In my opinion it was with the idea of simplifying procedure in rent cases that the enactment viz., cl. (g), s. 193 of the Tenancy Act was drafted. Whatever be the reason for the rule, the rule itself is clear and it is only a decree held by the defendant himself that can be pleaded and not a payment made under the circumstances of this case.

The appeal fails and it is hereby dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11, C. P. C.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 144—Payment into Court—Decree set aside—Restitution—Interest, whether can be claimed.

In a suit for specific performance of a contract of sale plaintiff having got a decree for the return of the earnest-money and damages for breach of contract proceeded to appeal on the ground that he was entitled to specific performance of the contract. Pending the appeal the defendant paid into Court the amount which had been awarded to the plaintiff. The plaintiff was successful in appeal and defendant applied for return of the money paid by him into Court and also claimed interest on it:

Held, that the plaintiff having retained the benefit of the payment into Court made by the defendant during the whole time when his appeal was pending and having failed to give notice to the defendant to take his money out, could not be allowed to say that he had derived no benefit from the payment and that consequently he was liable to pay interest on the deposit. [p. 714, col. 2.]

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Ahmedabad, in Darkhast No. 283 of 1923.

Messrs. Ratanlal Ranchhoddas and H. V. Divatia, for the Appellant.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. R. J. Thakor), for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are correctly stated in the judgment of the lower Court. The plaintiff having got a decree against the 1st and the 2nd defendants in the suit for the return of the earnest-money and damages for breach of contract proceeded to appeal on the ground that he was entitled to specific performance of the contract against the defendant No. 3. Pending the appeal the 1st defendant paid into Court, as he was entitled to do, the amount which had been awarded against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. The plaintiff continued the appeal and was successful. Consequently these defendants were entitled to get their money back.

So defendants Nos. 1 and 2 filed Darkhast No. 283 of 1922 for restitution, claiming interest on the money which remained in Court until the plaintiff's Darkhast No. 172 of 1923. The plaintiff says that he acquired no benefit from the money which had been paid into Court, and, therefore, he was not liable to pay interest demanded by the defendant No. 1. The learned Trial Judge said:—

"Then, it is said that no benefit was derived by the plaintiff by the deposit of the decretal money in Court. The answer to this lies on its very surface. For the principle of the doctrine of restitution is that on the reversal of the judgment, the law raises an obligation on the party to the record who received the benefit of the erroneous judgment to make restitution to the other party for what he had lost. Dorasami Ayyar v. Annasami Ayyar (1).

"It was the pleasure of the plaintiff not to take the available money in pursuance of the decree of the Trial Court, but this act has caused loss to defendant, and when the Hon'ble High Court set aside the claim for damages, the parties need to be relegated to their original positions.

"Under the circumstances, I think that it was incumbent on the plaintiff, when informed, to take the money, otherwise the amount was laying in Court at his risk, entailing all the natural consequences in the event of a refund or restitution, as provided for under s. 141, for the wrongful loss thus caused by him to the defendant. In any case by filing Darkhast No. 172 of 1923 on 10th March 1923, which is dismissed this day, he caused the detention of Rs. 3,831-4-0 in order to secure satisfaction of his Darkhast claim."

(1) 23 M. 306; 10 M. L. J. 307; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 616.

We think the case for the defendants might have been put rather stronger, because the plaintiff retained the benefit of the payment into Court made by the defendants during the whole time when the appeal was pending, and even when the appeal had been heard he sought to take advantage in the Darkhast referred to of the payment into Court. He cannot, therefore, now be allowed to say that he derived no benefit from that payment. But if even he derived no benefit, still, the onus lay upon him, if he wanted to be relieved of the risk of any such application as has now been made, to give notice to the defendant to take his money out. He has had the advantage of the money lying in Court until the appeal was heard, and that would be a sufficient advantage to enable defendant No. 1 to succeed. The appeal, therefore, is dismissed with costs.

In a mortgage suit the applicability of the doctrine of lis pendens continues upto the date when either foreclosure takes place or the property is sold and the mortgage-decree is satisfied. [p. 715, col. 2.]

Madheshwar Singh v. Mohamaya Prasad Singh, 9 Ind. Cas. 1027; 15 C. W. N. 672; 13 C. L. J. 487 and Kunhi Umah v. Amed, 14 M. 491; 1 M. L. J. 476; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 343, relied on.

Where a person purchases in execution of a simple money-decree property in respect of which a mortgage-decree has already been passed, the purchase is affected by the doctrine of lis pendens and must be regarded as subject to the rights of the auction-purchaser in execution of the mortgage-decree. The purchaser in execution of the simple money-decree in such a case is the representative of the mortgagor judgment-debtor and is bound by the execution proceedings against the mortgaged property. Appeal against an order of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, dated the 24th September 1923, in Appeal No. 99 of 1922, preferred against the order dated the 28th Sepember 1922, in E. A. No. 1449 of 1922 in Original Suit No. 801 of 1919, on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Ramachandrapur.

Mr. G. Lakshmana, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Subramanyam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an appellate order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Cocanada. The appellant before me is a person who purchased in execution of a mortgage-decree the property which is the subject-matter of this application. Her purchase was subsequent to the purchase by the respondent who purchased in execution of a money-decree. The mortgage suit had been brought previously and a final decree had been obtained by the mortgagee for sale of the property. It was in that state of circumstances that the property was subsequently attached by the money-decree-holder and brought to sale, and it was in that execution proceeding that the respondent purchased the property. The respondent seems to have obtained possession of the property in execution. Subsequently the mortgage-decree was executed and the property was brought to sale and purchased by the appellant before me. She applied for possession and was put in possession of the property. Application was then made under r. 100 of O. XXI, C. P. C., by the respondent before me to the District Munsif praying that he may be put back into possession of the property and contending that he was not bound by the proceedings in execution of the mortgage-decree or by the sale. The District Munsif rightly held that the respondent was bound by the proceedings in the mortgage-decree, and that the purchase by the appellant prevailed against him and, therefore, dismissed his petition. On appeal, however, the Subordinate Judge has come to the conclusion on the view that lis pendens does not continue after the final decree is passed that, as there was no execution proceeding actually going on under the mortgage-decree at the time when the sale in execution of the money-decree took place and as the final decree had already been passed, the later purchase by the purchaser in the mortgage suit did not prevail against the purchaser under the money-decree and he, therefore, reversed the order of the District Munsif and directed the respondent to be put back into possession.

It seems to me that the order of the Subordinate Judge cannot be supported. There can be no doubt that in a mortgage suit lis pendens continues up to the date when either foreclosure takes place or the property is sold and the mortgage-decree is satisfied. A clear authority was cited before the Subordinate Judge in support of this, namely, the ruling in Madheshwar Singh v. Mohamaya Prasad Singh (1), where the learned Judges Mookerjee and Teunon, JJ., say at page 674*: "In fact it is well-settled that for the purposes of the application of the dectrine of lis pendens, a mortgage suit continues after the decree till the sale has become final," and for this position the learned Judges cite several authorities. But the Subordinate Judge by a curious process of reasoning came to the conclusion that the word 'sale' in the above observation was a mistake for the word 'same'. It does not seem to be anything of the sort. The word 'sale' is the correct word as is quite apparent from the observations of the learned Judges following the one above referred to. The Calcutta view is in accordance with the view of our own High Court. Kunhi Umah v. Amed (2), and the cases cited there. The Subordinate Judge has referred to Bhoje Mahadev Parab v. Gangabai Vithal Naik (3), as justifying his view that the lis pendens comes to an end in a mortgage suit when the final decree is passed. No doubt the Bombay High Court seems to have held that view in that case. That, however, was a case in which a charge for maintenance on certain properties was declared; and Batchelor, J., one of the Judges who decided the case seems to indicate that in his opinion there is a difference between a decree like the one before him declaring a charge for maintenance and a decree for sale of the property mortgaged. However this may be, the view taken by the Bombay High Court seems to be that in mortgage suits lis pendens will come to an end on the passing of the final decree. There are, no doubt, observations to that effect in the judgment. That case, however, has not been accepted as good law in this High Court. The question was discussed at some length by Seshagiri Iyer, J., in the case reported as Ramasami Aiyangar v. Govinda Iyer (4). See the observations at page 514*. The learned Judge has collected the authorities on the question and has shown that the correct view is that the lis continues up to the end of the sale. This view is in accordance with the view of the Calcutta High Court and also of the Allahabad High Court. The view taken by the Bombay High Court was not followed in that case and, as the reasons are fully stated there for the dissent, it is not necessary for me to go into the reasons once again. Although the case in Ramasami Aiyangar v. Govinda Iyer (4) was a case of lease granted after the mortgage-decree had been passed, the principles stated therein will apply equally well to a case where there is a subsequent sale in auction by a Court of the mortgagor's interest under the mortgage-decree. If we do not hold that the lis continues till the decree is executed it would lead to the extraordinary result that, after decree the mortgagor would be able to alienate the property mortgaged and prevent the effective execution of the mortgage-decree by sale of the property. The authority relied on by the Subordinate Judge not having been followed in this Court cannot be taken as a proper authority to support his view.

The case may be put on another footing as well and perhaps more accurately. The mortgage-decree having been passed in this case, perhaps it is unnecessary to rely upon the doctrine of lis pendens to make the proceedings in execution of the decree binding upon the respondent who subsequently purchased the judgment-debtor's rights. There can hardly be any doubt, as the Subordinate Judge has held, that the respondent as the purchaser of the judgment-debtor's right in execution of the money-decree is the representative-in-interest of the judgment-debtor. As his purchase was subsequent to the mortgage-decree he must be held to be bound by that decree. The execution proceedings carried on against the mortgaged property, therefore, will be binding upon him; and any rights that he may have acquired by his purchase will be affected by the subsequent sale in execution of the mortgage-decree. In fact, as the learned Vakil who appeared for the respondent argued, it would have been open to his client to have exercised all the rights of the mortgagor-judgment-debtor; that is, if he was so minded, he could have paid the amount to save the property from being sold, or after the sale of the property itself if he found the money necessary to set aside the sale, he might have got the sale set aside. Unfortunately he did not take any of the these steps and the sale was confirmed and sale certificate was issued to the appellant. In these circumstances, it is quite clear whether we apply the doctrine of lis pendens or whether we hold that he was bound by the proceedings taken in execution of the mortgage-decree, the right which the respondent has obtained by his purchase is now gone. He cannot now be allowed, as the Subordinate Judge has allowed him to pay off the mortgage-decree, or to recover possession.

In the view I take, the appeal must be allowed, the order of the Subordinate Judge set aside and that of the District Munsif restored with costs in this and the lower Appellate Court.

Where a mortgagor executes several mortgages on the same property and asks for an account on one of those mortgages under s. 15D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, although the mortgagee can ask that an account should be taken of all the mortgages existing on the property, so that the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem except on paying what is due on all the mortgages, yet, if the Court takes an account of the one mortgage in which it decides nothing with regard to the validity or the existence of other mortgages at the time when the account is taken, the mortgagee would be entitled

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued to recover on a mortgage bond for Rs. 200, dated August 28, 1912, passed by the defendant to one Krishnaji Govind Joshi, the grandfather of the plaintiffs. The defendant contended that the plaintiffs had no right to file the suit; that the debt had not come to plaintiffs' share; that the land in suit had been mortgaged with possession in 1882 to the great-grandfather of the plaintiffs; that it had been decided in Suit No. 325 of 1917, that this mortgage had been paid off; that the suit debt having not been claimed in that suit the present suit was barred by res judicata; and that the suit debt had been paid off by the income of the land from the date of the suit mortgage.

The Trial Judge held that the claim was barred as res judicata on account of the decree in Suit No. 325 of 1917.

The facts are that the land in suit, Survey No. 44, and another Survey number were mortgaged by the defendant's father to the plaintiffs' grandfather in 1882. The defendant filed Suit No. 325 of 1917, under s. 15D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act for accounts to be taken of what was due under that mortgage. The present plaintiffs, who were defendants in that suit pleaded that there was a simple mortgage for Rs. 200 passed in 1912 still outstanding, and that the then plaintiff would have to redeem that mortgage also in the suit. No issue was raised on the question. The Court took an account of the mortgage of 1882 and decided that nothing was due on the mortgage-deed in the suit. Section 15D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act provides that at any time before the decree in the suit is signed the plaintiff may apply to the Court to pass a decree for the redemption of the mortgage. Accordingly, as the plaintiff prayed for redemption and possession, and as the suit could be so converted at any time before the decree in the suit was signed, the Court made the following order:—"It is declared that the mortgage charge on the plaint properties held under the mortgage-deed dated September 20, 1882, is fully satisfied, and that nothing remains due to defendants on that account. The plaintiff to recover immediate possession of plaint lands from defendants free of the above said mortgage charge."

On these facts the learned Subordinate Judge said:—

"Explanation V of s. 11 of the C. P. C. does not also apply as it refers only to the relief claimed in the plaint. But the provisions of s. 11 are not exhaustive as laid down in Sayam Ramamoorthi Dhora v. Secretary of State for India (1) and Hukum Chand Boid v. Kamalanand Singh (2). The matter can be res judicata even between co-defendants as suggested in Hari Annaji v. Vasudev Janardhan (3). Reading this decision with Explanation V of the section, I think it can be held that the relief claimed by the defendants in Suit No. 325 was refused by the Court. I find that the suit is barred by res judicata."

In appeal the learned appellate Judge said (referring to Suit No. 325 of 1917):—

"In that suit the present plaintiffs pleaded that the mortgage-bond (Ex. 22) now in suit must be redeemed as well as the 1882 mortgage. As, however, they failed to produce any evidence, the Trying Court held that nothing was due to them and directed the return of both Survey numbers to Shridhar 'free of the above said mortgage charge.'"

That is not a correct exposition of what took place in the previous suit as appears from the judgment and the decree passed. The Court raised no issue on the question whether the mortgage of 1912 was outstanding, and could be redeemed in the suit, but took an account only of the mortgage of 1882, and directed the return of both Survey numbers free of that mortgage charge, without making any reference to the mortgage of 1912. The appellate Judge went on to say:—

"The wording of the decree would seem to favour appellant's contention that the latter mortgage of 1912, the one now in suit, was not dealt with in Suit No. 325 of 1917. It has, however, been laid down in Babaji v. Hari (4) that in case of there being several mortgage-bonds the account (taken under s. 15D, Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act) must be taken of all of them in the same suit. Appellant himself drew the Court's attention to the existence of the 1912 mortgage but did not attempt to prove it, in Suit No. 325 of 1917. As he failed to prove it in that suit he cannot be allowed another opportunity of doing so now. His claim was advanced in Suit No. 325 of 1917. It was not proved by him and it must be held to have been rejected by the Court. I agree with the lower Court that the present suit it barred as res judicata."

The suit referred to by the learned Judge in Babaji v. Hari (4) was brought by the mortgagors of certain land against the mortgagee under s. 15D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act for an account of the amount due. There were six mortgages in all and, the aggregate amount secured was Rs. 5,750. In the course of the suit the plaintiff's Pleader being doubtful as to the jurisdiction of the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge, the pecuniary limit of which was Rs. 5,000, was allowed to amend the plaint and to withdraw the claim with regard to one of the mortgages for Rs. 900, thus reducing the aggregate amount to Rs. 4,850. On a reference made to the High Court for its opinion, the Court said (p. 352):—

"We think that s. 15D of Act XVII of 1879, which provides for a suit of an exceptional character, was intended to give the mortgagor the power of obtaining an account of what was due on mortgage of his property, and, therefore, in case of there being several mortgage-bonds, the account must be taken of all of them in the same suit, and if the total amount, as in the present case, exceeds Rs. 500, the case does not fall under Ch. II of the Act. If it exceeds Rs. 5,000 the First Class Subordinate Judge alone has jurisdiction."

It will be seen that that case does not touch the question of res judicata. The only way in which the principle of res judicata can be made applicable would be if Explanation IV to s. 11 was in point. It provides that "any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in such former suit shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit."

Now the defendant in the previous suit pleaded on the question whether an account should be taken of the mortgage of 1832, that an account should also be taken of the mortgage of 1912. The question in issue would have been whether the plaintiff was entitled to an account of the mortgage of 1882 only. That would not touch the question whether the plaintiff, the then defendant, was entitled to sue on the mortgage of 1912. It is difficult then to see how the principle of res judicata can apply to the present case. We do not know the circumstances which surrounded the trial of Suit No. 325 of 1917, or why no issue was raised on the defendant's plea. It may very well have been that the plaintiff did not wish the accounts to be taken on the basis suggested by the defendant. However that may be, we cannot know what the actual facts of the case were. We can only refer to the record before us.

In my opinion if a mortgagor executes several mortgages on the same property, and asks for an account on one mortgage under s. 15D of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, although the mortgagee could ask that an account should be taken of of all the mortgages existing on the property, so that the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem except on paying what is due on all the mortgages, still, if the Court takes an account of the one mortgage only, it decides nothing with regard to the validity or the existence of other mortgages at the time when the account is taken. In my opinion, therefore, the decision of the lower Court was wrong and the appeal must be allowed. The case must go back to the Trial Court for decision on the merits. The plaintiffs are entitled to their costs in this Court and in the Court below. All costs in the Trial Court will be costs in the case.

U. P. Land Revenue Act (III of 1901), ss. 111, 233 (k)—Partition, perfect and imperfect, difference between—Section 233 (k), applicability of, to imperfect partition.

The substantial difference between a perfect and an imperfect partition is that in an imperfect partition the joint responsibility for payment of land revenue is not done away with, but subject to this joint responsibility the shares are just as much allotted in separate ownership in the one kind of partition as in the other. Section 233 (k) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act applies just as much to the case of an imperfect partition as to the case of a perfect partition.

The policy of the law is that all disputes as to ownership of a mahal or patti to be partitioned should be finally disposed of in the partition proceedings.

Second appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Budaun, dated the 4th July 1924.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The two points pressed in this appeal are both points of law but as, in my opinion, the view of the Court below is correct I propose to dismiss the appeal.

The suit has been dismissed on the ground that it offends against s. 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act. The plaintiff claimed a fifth share of a grove in patti Tara Singh. He is a recorded co-sharer in that patti but the share which he now claims is not recorded in his name. An application was made by the respondent for imperfect partition of that patti. Notice was issued to the plaintiff and he applied to have his own share separated off. In that partition the share in dispute was allotted to the defendant. On the face of it this is a clear case for the application of the s. 233 (k). The pleas urged are:—

(1) That s. 233 (k) does not apply to an imperfect partition.

(2) That though the plaintiff is a recorded co-sharer in the patti he is not recorded in respect of the particular property which he claims.

On the first point no authority has been shown to me nor has any substantial reason been advanced why the section should not apply. The section is perfectly general in its terms. Both kinds of partition are dealt with in the same Chapter of the Land Revenue Act and the same provisions of law apply to both. I can see no reason why the bar of s. 233 (k) should apply to one and not to the other. The substantial difference between the two kinds of partition is that in an imperfect partition the joint responsibility for payment of land revenue is not done away with, but subject to this joint responsibility the shares are just as much allotted in separate ownership in the one kind of partition as in the other.

The second objection is obviously futile. The policy of the law is that all disputes as to ownership of the mahal or patti to be partitioned should be finally disposed of in the partition proceedings. In practically every case in which objection is taken under s. 111, the objector's case is that he is not but ought to be recorded as proprietor of the land which he claims.

Agreeing with the Court below I dismiss the appeal under O. XLI, r. 11.

RAMCHANDRA KESHAV UKIDVE—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Mortgage-suit—Interest pendente lite*—Discretion of Court—Appellate Court, interference by—Hindu Law*—Damdupat, rule of, applicability of.

In a mortgage-suit there is a discretion vested in the Court to decide whether interest should be allowed on the redemption money from the date of the suit. Where the Trial Court does not deal with the question of interest pendente lite at all, the Appellate Court is entitled to consider whether such interest should or should not be allowed.

It cannot be said that a person who has invested his money in a mortgage and has succeeded in doubling his capital in less than ten years has any particular claim on the Court to award him any further amount as interest.

Semble:—The rule of damdupat has no application in calculating interest in a mortgage-suit from the date of the suit to the date fixed for redemption. The matter is entirely in the discretion of the Court.

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Thana, in Suit No. 135 of 1922.

Mr. A. G. Sathaye, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. V. Bhat, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 9,782-8-0 as the balance still due on a mortgage-bond, dated June 17, 1914, with costs and future interest. The lower Court found that the principal was Rs. 4,999, that the amount of interest due up to the date of suit was Rs. 4,783-8-0 but only allowed further interest after the date of suit so as to make the total of interest awarded equal to the amount of the principal. A preliminary decree was passed directing that the defendants should pay Rs. 9,998 with costs on or before July 15, 1923. Interest after July 15, 1923, was to run on the whole of the above amount at six per cent. until realization.

The plaintiff has appealed on the following grounds:—(1) The lower Court was wrong in holding that the rule of damdupat applied in calculating interest in a mortgage-suit from the date of the suit to the date fixed for redemption. (2) The lower Court should have at least allowed interest on Rs. 9,782-8-0 at the agreed rate from March 26, 1922, till which date interest was calculated as stated in the plaint, up to July 15, 1923, the date fixed by the decree for redemption, after taking into consideration the payment of Rs. 8,100 made on or about April 30, 1923.

In Hirala Ichhalal v. Narsilal Chaturbhujdas (1), the suit was brought for redemption of a mortgage. The plaintiff claimed to be allowed interest on the redemption money for the period between the date of the suit and the actual date of redemption. It was held by the District Judge that the rule of damdupat applied, and, therefore, the amount of arrears of interest to be allowed was limted to an amount equal to the capital sum, but awarded no interest from the date of suit. It was contended that the omission to give interest was due to an oversight as no reference was made in the judgment to the question whether such interest could be allowed. The High Court treated the matter as if the District Judge had in the exercise of his discretion declined to allow interest, and it thought that there had not been an unreasonable exercise of his discretion. Their Lordships of the Privy Council agreed with his decision and the grounds on which it rested. There is, therefore, a discretion vested in the Court to decide whether interest should be allowed on the redemption money from the date of the suit. There is nothing in the judgment of the lower Court in this case from which we can deduce that the Judge dealt with this particular question. He has allowed interest after the date of the suit so as to make the total sum decreed for interest equal to the amount of the principal. We are entitled, therefore, to consider whether in appeal we should allow any further interest from the date of the suit. The plaintiff has succeeded in getting a decree for double the amount of his capital which was invested on June 17, 1914. It cannot be said that a person who has invested his money in a mortgage and has succeeded in doubling his capital in less than ten years, has any particular claim on the Court to award him any further amount. The Court has awarded interest from July 15, 1923, on the total redemption money, and consequently if the defendants failed to redeem, the plaintiff would recover interest not only on the capital but also on a similar amount of interest. We think, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

S. K. KOTHER MYTHEEN ROWTHER AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 8, O. XXXIII, r. 5—Application for leave to sue as pauper—Insolvency of petitioner, effect of—Procedure—Cause of action, meaning of.

The grounds on which an application for leave to sue as a pauper can be rejected are stated in O. XXXIII, r. 5 of the C. P. C., and the subsequent insolvency of the petitioner is not one of such grounds. Where it appears that after making an application for leave to sue as a pauper the petitioner has become insolvent, the proper procedure is for the Court to enquire whether the petitioner is or is not a pauper and if he is and his allegations show a cause of action, leave should be granted. When the leave is granted the application would be numbered as a suit, and the provisions of O. XXII, r. 8 of the C. P. C. can then be applied and the Official Receiver can make himself a party to the suit.

Clause (d) of r. 5 of O. XXXIII of the C. P. C. only requires that the allegations contained in a petition for leave to sue as a pauper must show a cause of action, the clause has no reference to subsequent events, for instance the insolvency of the petitioner.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tinnevelly, in O. P. No. 3 of 1922.

Mr. P. V. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. K. Rajah Iyer and R. Ganapathi Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The order dismissing the pauper application on the sole ground that sometime subsequent to the application and before the Court passed its orders the petitioner became an insolvent, cannot be supported. The grounds on which a pauper application can be rejected are stated in O. XXXIII, r. 5, C. P. C. Subsequent insolvency is not one of the grounds. It is suggested that, on his becoming an insolvent, the petitioner ceased to have a cause of action under cl. (d); but cl. (d) only provides that his allegations should show a cause of action. That refers to his allegations in his plaint and not to subsequent events. The proper procedure would have been to enquire whether the petitioner was a pauper and if he was and his allegations showed a cause of action to give him leave when his application would be numbered as a suit. If he has become insolvent the provisions of O. XXII, r. 8, can then be applied. It is clear that the Official Receiver cannot make himself a party to the pauper application but only to the suit after it is allowed.

The petition is, therefore, allowed and the lower Court's order is set aside and the case remanded to that Court for a fresh disposal according to law. Costs to abide and follow the result.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. G. K. Gadgil), for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff's father died leaving a widow and three minor sons. The plaintiff was the second son. His elder brother at the age of nineteen took charge of the family estate of the Hindu co-parcenary. On July 7, 1908, he passed a certain sale-deed which the plaintiff seeks to avoid in the present suit. Subsequently the elder brother died and also the younger brother leaving the plaintiff and his mother the sole representatives of the family. The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the property specified in the plaint and for a declaration that the transaction entered into by the deceased Ganesh Parashram was void and without consideration and illegal and that if it was held binding to the extent of the one-fourth share of Ganesh a declaration to that effect might be given to him. The suit was dismissed on the plea of limitation, the lower Court holding that the suit had not been instituted within the time prescribed under Art. 44 of the Indian Limitation Act.

In appeal the Judge said :—

"In my opinion although Ganesh styled himself in the sale-deeds as guardian of his minor brothers, he did not enter into this transaction as a guardian but as the manager of the Hindu co-parcenary. The distinguishing feature of the co-parcenary under the Mitakshara Law is unity of ownership. The whole body of the co-parceners are the owners of the property, and no co-parcener can say that he owns any definite share. As regards property of this kind, there can be no guardianship. Article 44 applies in specific terms to guardians and wards. As it restricts the ordinary period of limitation it should be construed strictly."

Accordingly he reversed the decree of the Trial Court and ordered the plaintiff to recover the possession of the property in suit and gave the defendants a declaration that they were entitled to sue for partition of a one-fourth share.

The Trial Judge in finding that Art. 44 applied to the plaintiff's suit appears to have relied on a Full Bench decision of this Court in Fakirappa v. Lumanna (1), where it was held "that the minor, not having sued to set aside his mother's alienation within three years of his attaining majority, was not competent to dispute the alienation ever afterwards; and that much less could the plaintiff do so." On reading the judgment in that case, it is difficult to find any foundation for the Judge's conclusion that it applied to the facts in the present case, where several brothers constituted a joint Hindu family, and though undoubtedly the elder brother was the manager of the family he was not the guardian either de facto or de jure of his minor brothers. But even assuming for the purpose of the argument that he might be styled the de facto guardian that would not make him a guardian within the meaning of the words in Art. 44 of the Indian Limitation Act. For that the authority is Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (2). Consequently Art. 44 was not applicable to the transactions in this case, and the plaintiff was entitled to succeed. The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

An application either written or oral is necessary for the setting aside of a sale under O. XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. Mr. Ali Zaheer, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—After the sale ordered by the Civil Court in execution of a decree was completed the judgment-debtor Ram Autar deposited the money due in accordance with O. XXI, r. 89, of the C. P. C. in the Treasury. The sale took place on 20th February 1924, and the deposit was made on 20th March 1924. No application was made to the Civil Court as required by that rule.

When the decree-holder applied for confirmation of sale the judgment-debtor's Pleader made the following statement:—

"I would orally apply for the setting aside of sale under O. XXI, r. 89. I have paid the decretal amount." This application was made on 5th July 1924. The Executing Court of the Munsif dismissed it on the ground that it was time-barred. He accepted the oral application in place of a written one.

On appeal by the judgment-debtor the District Judge came to the same finding. It was argued here that the period may be extended. This cannot be done in revision. Both the Subordinate Courts have refused to exercise such discretion, if they had any. In this view it need not be mentioned that the provisions of s. 5 of the Limitation Act do not apply to an application under O. XXI, r. 89, which is governed by Art. 166 of the Limitation Act.

There is no necessity to enquire as to whether the deposit was rightly made at the Treasury or not. Even where a deposit is rightly made in the Civil Court itself and no application is made the sale would not be set aside. See Raoji Baburao v. Bansilal Narayan Marwari (1). An application, either written or oral, is necessary for the setting aside of a sale under O. XXI, r. 89, and such an application must be made within the period of limitation of 30 days. When there is no such application the deposit, even if rightly made in the Civil Court, will be of no avail.

I dismiss this application with costs.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 120 of 1924, varying the decree of the Joint Subordinate Judge at Belgaum, in Civil Suit No. 16 of 1922.

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. R. Manerikar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This action was instituted by the plaintiff to recover mesne profits of certain watan land for three years 1918-1920, with interest from October 21, 1918, the date of the death of plaintiff's father, who had mortgaged that watan property in 1908. The land was restored to the plaintiff by the Revenue Authorities in 1921, on the ground that plaintiff's father was not competent to alienate watan land beyond the terms of his life. The Trial Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit on the ground that the possession of the mortgagee, after the death of the original watandar mortgagor, was not wrongful; and that although under s. 5 of the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, 1874, the mortgage itself did not subsist, the personal remedy did not cease.

In appeal the plaintiff's claim was decreed for two years 1919-1920. The District Judge relied upon the decision in Krishnaji Sakharam v. Kashim Mohiddin Saheb (1), where it was held that the mortgage of the watan property came to an end on the death of the mortgagor. Thereafter the possession of the mortgagee became that of a trespasser. In that case the mortgagee sued to recover the mortgage amount with interest relying on a personal covenant in the deed. It was held that the covenant in the mortgage only meant that the mortgagor was personally liable to pay the amount without any hindrance in his life time. The covenant did not refer in terms to his heirs and successors. The receipt of rent after 1901 could not be deemed to be payment for the purposes of s. 20 of the Indian Limitation Act, 1908, and, therefore, the claim was barred by limitation. The question, however, whether the mortgagee from a watandar is liable to pay the mesne profits after the original mortgagor's death for the period between the death of the mortgagor and the time when his successor to the watan obtains possession, does not seem to have been clearly decided in any case to which we have been referred.

In Padapa v. Swamirao (2) it was held that an alienation by way of mortgage of watan property, or any part of it, executed when Regulation XVI of 1827 was yet in force, had no operation beyond the life of the watandar who mortgaged. The mortgage was in its inception void against the heir of the watandar, and had not become validated against the heir by reason of the repeal of the section in Regulation XVI of 1827, relating to this subject, by Bombay Act III of 1874. The Subordinate Judge passed a decree that the plaintiff should recover possession and that the investigation of the mesne profits should be reserved. That decision was eventually confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council. The only question argued before their Lordships was whether the mortgage itself was void, and there does not appear to have been any argument on the question whether the successor to the watan could recover the mesne profits from the date of the death of the mortgagor. It may be taken, however, that the order of the Subordinate Judge with regard to mesne profits was approved. The question whether the successor to the watan can be sued on the personal covenant in the mortgage of his predecessor is an entirely different one. The Trial Judge appears to have been led away by the argument which has been again renewed in this Court that because his father, the mortgagor, was liable to be sued on his personal covenant, the plaintiff was also liable to be sued, so that he could not seek to recover the mesne profits. That question is irrelevant to the present suit. We think that it is clear that the plaintiff was entitled to succeed, and consequently the appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Hindu Law—Jains—Adoption by widow—Agreement between widow and adopted son, validity of—Direction to pay certain sum of money to widow's relative, whether can be enforced—Family arrangement, what amounts to—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 23—Persons not parties to agreement, whether can enforce agreement.

Per Mukerji, J.—A deed of adoption is more often than not executed after the ceremony of adoption has taken place. The law does not require that an adoption should be evidenced by a registered deed. But as a precautionary measure, people do execute such deeds. In such a case any agreement that may have taken place before and as a consideration for the adoption between the adoptor and the adoptee would find place in the deed of adoption and in any deed that the adoptee may himself execute. [p 726, col. 2.]

Among Jains adoption is more a matter of custom than of spiritual necessity. Even a married man may be adopted among them. [p. 728, col 1.]

Section 23 of the Specific Relief Act does not purport to be and is not exhaustive of the cases in which specific performance of a contract may be granted in favour of a person. The section itself simply says that specific performance of a contract may be obtained by the persons mentioned therein. It does not say that specific performance of a contract cannot be obtained by any person other than those mentioned in the section. [ibid.]

Per Lindsay, J.—There is no rule of general application in India which enables persons to bring suits upon contracts to which they are no parties. There could be no right of suit by a stranger to an agreement unless it can be shown that there has been a charge created in his favour or that under the agreement he is entitled to some beneficial interest as a cestui que trust. [p. 730, col. 2.]

A Hindu widow about to make an adoption to her husband cannot stipulate for gifts of her husband's estate to be made to her relations and to strangers by the adopted son after he is taken in adoption. An arrangement which makes the adoption conditional upon the adopted son agreeing to carry out the adoptor's directions to make such gifts cannot be recognised as valid. To allow an arrangement of this nature to be carried out would be to allow a Hindu widow to do indirectly what the law forbids her to do directly and such an arrangement cannot, therefore, be enforced. Any attempt to bind the adopted son by such conditions must fail; the conditions are void and the son takes the estate free from them. [p. 731, col. 2.]

In the United Provinces the consent of the husband is essential in order to enable a widow to make an adoption and while it might be conceded that consent so given would justify the widow in imposing reasonable conditions upon the adopted son for the protection of herself and the estate from which she is entitled to draw maintenance, it would not be assumed that the husband consented to arrangements made by the widow at the time of the adoption whereby extensive portions of his estate can be transferred by way of gift to members of his wife's family. The invalidity of such conditions cannot be cured by showing that the adopted son, a person of full age, assented to them. The invalidity arises out of the inherent disability of the widow under the Hindu Law to give away portions of her husband's estate and an attempt to impose conditions which would lead indirectly to such alienations being made is absolutely void as being ultra vires. [p. 732, col. 2; p. 733, col. 1.]

Even if it can be assumed in such a case that the assent of the adopted son to such conditions creates a trust, the purpose of the trust being unlawful the trust cannot be enforced. [p. 733, col. 2.]

A family arrangement is an arrangement arrived at by members of the same family in settlement of doubtful claims, where there being uncertainty as to the rights of the various claimants, the dispute is composed by a settlement based upon acknowledgment of pre-existing title in the parties concerned. There must be a dispute, the parties must belong to the same family and the property which constitutes the subject-matter of the dispute must be the property of the family to which the parties belong. [p. 734, col. 1.]

A Jain widow adopted the defendant and shortly afterwards executed a deed of adoption wherein she directed the defendant to pay a certain sum of money to the plaintiffs, who were the brothers of the widow. The deed further provided that in case the defendant refused to pay the sum directed by the widow the money might be realized from her estate if necessary by the auction-sale of her property. Two days later the defendant himself executed a document in which he recited that he had been adopted in pursuance of instructions from the widow's deceased husband and that the widow had made certain arrangements concerning her property according to the directions of her husband. He declared that he would abide by all the conditions laid down in the deed executed by the widow and that his adoption was conditional on his acceptance of the stipulation contained in the deed. He bound himself to carry out the terms of the deed and declared that in case of his failure the conditions might be enforced in Court. In a suit by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendant the sum mentioned in the deed of adoption as being payable to them :

Held, Per Mukerji, J. (1)—that the agreement entered into by the defendant with the widow was supported by consideration and that the consideration was good and enforceable in a Court of Law ; [p. 728, col. 1.]

(2) that the arrangement between the widow and the defendant might be regarded as a family arrangement and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled under s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act to sue to enforce the arrangement as being beneficially entitled thereunder ; [ibid.]

(3) that even if s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act was not applicable the plaintiffs were entitled to sue to enforce the arrangement inasumch as the defendant had bound himself to carry out the arrangement and a trust had been created in favour of the plaintiffs ; [ibid.]

(4) that the sum which was directed to be paid to the plaintiffs had been made a charge on the estate and that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to a declaration that the estate in the hands of the defendant was charged with such payment. [ibid.]

Per Lindsay, J.—(1) that the arrangement between the widow and the defendant did not amount to a family arrangement; [p. 734, col. 1.]

(2) that the plaintiffs not being parties to the arrangement were not entitled to sue to enforce the arrangement ; [ibid.]

(3) that the arrangement was void and ultra vires having regard to the provisions of the Hindu Law with regard to the power of a widow to make alienations of her husband's estate. [p. 734, col. 2.]

Case-law referred to.

First appeal from the decision of the Subordinate Judge, Muzaffarnagar at Meerut, dated the 8th July 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—These two appeals arise out of the same suit instituted by two persons Mitter Sen and Gurusaran Das against one Data Ram.

It appears that one Dalip Singh deceased a Jain Agarwal, died some years ago and was succeeded by his wife Musammat Manohri. Musammat Manohri, shortly before her death, adopted Data Ram. The adoption took place on the 27th of October 1918. The plaintiffs are Manohri's brothers. On the 12th of December 1918 Musammat Manohri executed a document which is described in the document itself as a Will and a deed of adoption. By this document she declared that she had taken Data Ram a near relation of hers, as her adopted son and that on her death he would be the absolute owner of her entire property. She however, directed by this document Data Ram to make certain payments. Among these directions one was to the effect that Data Ram was to pay a sum of Rs. 15,000 to the plaintiffs, her brothers, within a period of 15 years. At about the end of the document, Musammat Manohri declared that in case Data Ram refused to pay the various sums directed by her to be paid, the money might be realized from her estate, if necessary, by auction sale of the property. Two days later, viz., on the 14th of December 1918 Data Ram himself executed a document which is described as an agreement. He recited that he had been adopted in pursuance of instructions from Dalip Singh and that Musammat Manohri had made certain arrangements of her property according to the directions of the said Dalip Singh. By this document, Data Ram declared that he would abide by all the conditions laid down in two documents executed by Musammat Manohri (one dated 12th December 1918 and the other said to be dated 13th December 1918 but not forthcoming) and he further declared that his adoption was conditional on his acceptance of the stipulations contained in the said documents. He bound himself to carry out those terms and added that in the case of his failure the conditions might be enforced in Court.

The plaintiffs brought the suit with the allegation that in spite of the execution of the documents Data Ram had denied the plaintiffs' right to receive the sum of Rs. 15,000 and accordingly they had asked for a declaration that they were entitled to that sum of money and they further prayed that a charge might be declared to exist over the entire property of Musammat Manohri in the hands of Data Ram.

Data Ram's defence was that he had executed the document dated the 14th of December 1918 while he was yet a minor, that it was void for want of consideration, that it was executed under undue pressure, that the suit was premature and that the plaintiffs had no right of action.

The learned Subordinate Judge found in favour of the plaintiffs except in this that he found that there was no charge on the property. The learned Subordinate Judge accordingly decreed the suit for a declaration of Data Ram's liability only.

In this Court both the parties have appealed. The contention of Mitter Sen and Gurusaran Das is that a charge ought to have been declared over the entire property in the hands of Data Ram. The contentions of Data Ram are several, but only the following have been urged before us:—

(1) The documents dated the 12th and 14th of December 1918 were executed after the adoption and were, therefore, not binding on the defendant.

(2) The conditions laid down in the documents are void in law.

(3) The plaintiffs have no right to sue.

The question of defendant's minority was raised, but was not argued upon.

When the appeals came for hearing before this Court two issues were remanded. They were directed towards the nature of the estate held by Musammat Manohri. The findings of the learned Subordinate Judge on those issues are to the effect that Musammat Manohri held only a life-interest in the property of her husband which was ancestral in the latter's hand and that she was not competent to make any Will with respect to the said property. The learned Counsel for the parties have accepted the correctness of these findings, although the plaintiffs filed objections to the findings. We have now to take it that the property was inalienable in the hands of Musammat Manohri.

The questions for determination in these two appeals, therefore, are:—

(1) Whether it was agreed at the time of the adoption and as a condition precedent to the adoption that Data Ram would make the several payments he was directed to make by Musammat Manohri's document dated the 12th of December 1918?

(2) Whether if such was not the case the agreement of Data Ram is void for want of consideration?

(3) Whether the plaintiffs are competent to maintain the suit although they were no parties to the documents of the 12th and 14th of December 1918?

(4) Whether the plaintiffs have any charge over the property in Data Ram's possession?

On the first point. It is expressly stated in the deed executed by Data Ram that his adoption was made conditional on his acceptance of the terms enunciated in the deed of the 12th of December 1918 and another deed of the 13th of December 1918 which is not forthcoming. It is common ground that the adoption was effected on the 27th of October 1918 and not exactly $2\frac{1}{2}$ months before the 12th of December 1918 as stated in the document executed by Musammat Manohri on that date. A deed of adoption is more often than not executed after the ceremony of adoption has taken place. The law does not require that an adoption should be evidenced by a registered deed. But as a precautionary measure, people do execute such deeds. In the circumstances any agreement that may have taken place before and as a consideration of the adoption of Data Ram would find place in the deed of adoption and in any deed that the adopted son may himself execute. There can be no doubt that the two documents of the 12th and 14th of December 1918 together form one document and are complementary of each other. Although Musammat Manohri's document purports to have been executed on the 12th of December it was not registered till after the deed executed by Data Ram had been registered. The two documents were registered on one and the same date, viz., on the 14th of December 1918. But the deed executed by Data Ram was registered at the Sub-Registrar's Office between 4 and 5 P. M., while the deed executed by Musammat

Manohri was registered at her house between 6 and 7 P. M. on the 14th of December. Thus, we find that in a written agreement between the two parties, viz., Musammat Manohri and Data Ram certain terms were recorded. Under the circumstances, the burden of proving that the agreement does not recite true state of things must lie heavily on the party who so alleges.

The small amount of oral evidence that has been adduced does not satisfy me that it is untrue that before the adoption, the defendant, who was an adult at the date of adoption, had not agreed that he would make certain payments desired by Musammat Manohri, as a condition precedent to his adoption. I hold, therefore, that it was agreed at the time of adoption and as a condition precedent to the adoption that Data Ram would make the several payments he was directed to make by the deed of the 12th of December 1918.

Point No. 2—From my finding on point No. 1, it follows that the agreement executed by Data Ram is supported by consideration. But it has been urged that the consideration is void and repugnant to law. In support of this argument two cases have been relied upon by the learned Counsel for Data Ram. These cases are Bhaiya Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar (1) and Balkrishna Motiram Gujar v. Shri Uttar Narayandev (2).

These cases and several other cases [see for example Vyascharya v. Venkubai (3), Visalakshi Ammal v. Sivaramien (4) and Ravji v. Lakshmibai (5)] deal with cases in which the agreements for the Court's consideration were those made by the natural guardian of a minor who was adopted by the widow. The ratio decidendi of these cases is that where the condition imposed by the natural guardian of the minor was to his entire disadvantage and to the advantage of the widow or a third party, the condition was ultra vires of the natural guardian and could not be enforced in a Court of Law. It was held that a widow could stipulate that she should be in possession of the property of her husband during her lifetime. But it was held that if she wanted that a portion of her husband's property should go to her daughter who has no right to inherit, the adopted son could repudiate the arrangement. This last mentioned proposition was laid down in the case of Vyasacharya v. Venkubai (3). None of these cases deal with the circumstances in which an adult person is adopted and he agrees to a loss of a portion of the property that would go to him except for the agreement. Such a case arose in Kashibai Ramchandra Ghatge v. Tatya Genu Pawar (6). In this case the last owner of the property left him surviving a widow and a pre-deceased son's daughter. The widow made an adoption and executed a deed of adoption and also a Will. By this Will she gave a portion of the property to her deceased son's daughter. It was held that the deed of adoption and the Will were to be read together and so read they constituted a single family arrangement. It was further held that the adopted son, being of full age and having deliberately accepted the family arrangement and its advantages must be held to it. It was further held that the disposition in favour of the granddaughter was good, not because it was a bequest by the widow, but because it was a part of the single family arrangement which all parties accepted. This case in Kashibai Ramchandra Ghatge v. Tatya Genu Pawar (6) is on all fours with the case before me. Accordingly to the arrangement arrived at by means of the two documents dated respectively the 12th and the 14th of December 1918, as a condition precedent to his adoption, Data Ram agreed that he would make certain payments to certain persons. By executing the agreement Data Ram took the advantage of obtaining property which has been valued, by himself, at something between two and three lakhs of rupees and laid himself under an obligation to pay a sum of a little over Rs. 20,000 to different persons. Even this comparatively small sum was not to be paid at once but gradually and in the course of a long number of years The question under the circumstances is whether Data Ram can now resile from the agreement into which he deliberately entered and the full advantage of which he has taken. He has admitted in his deposition that his father and brother are insolvents and that he does not possess any property on the face of the earth beyond what he got as the adopted son of Musammat Manohri. The plea taken of undue influence and pressure have been abandoned and for the simple and sure reason that there was no evidence to substantiate it. In my opinion it would be highly improper on the part of Data Ram to repudiate the transaction altogether, he having had the full advantage of it. It must be remembered that the parties are Jains and adoption among them is more a matter of custom that of spiritual necessity. Even a married man may be adopted among them. I hold, therefore, that the agreement is not void for want of consideration and the consideration is good and enforcible in a Court of Law.

Coming to the third point. The argument on this point is that if there was an agreement it was between Musammat Manohri and Data Ram, that the plaintiffs were no parties to the agreement and that therefore, they were not entitled to sue for the specific performance of the same. If we regard the case as a family arrangement, as the transactions before their Lordships in the Bombay case [Kashibai Ramchandra Ghatge v. Tatya Genu Pawar (6)] were regarded, the case would come directly within s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act and the plaintiffs would be entitled to sue as being beneficially entitled under the arrangement. If, however, the case cannot be brought within cl. (c) of s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act, it appears to me that s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act does not purport to be and is not exhaustive of the cases in which specific performance of a contract may be granted in favour of a person. The section itself simply says that specific performance of a contract may be obtained by the persons mentioned therein. It does not say that specific performance of a contract cannot be obtained by any person other than those mentioned in the section. The law laid down in Tweddle v. Atkinson (7) has not been followed as the lawfully applicable to India, in the case of Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begum. (8). The case before their Lordships of the Privy Council might possibly be brought within cl. (c) of s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act as being the case of a contract in settlement on marriage. But it is significant that their Lordships did not refer to this provision of the Indian law. The lead of the Privy Council which established in effect that the list of parties who are entitled to sue for a specific performance of a contract as given in s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act was not exhaustive, was followed in Calcutta in the case of Debi Narain Dutt v. Ram Sadhan Mandal (9) which again was followed in this High Court in Nehal Singh v. Fateh Chand (10). In the last two mentioned cases the persons who sued to enforce the contract were no parties to them. The case of Shuppu Ammal v Subramaniam (11) may also be cited. No doubt a contrary opinion was expressed in Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (12), but there it was laid down (at page 761) that in certain cases a stranger could sue. Some of these cases were enumerated as creation of a trust in favour of the plaintiff, the creation of a charge on immoveable property in favour of the plaintiff, where the promisor is estopped owing to transactions between the plaintiff and the promisor and where there is a settlement on marriage in which the plaintiff is beneficially entitled.

Assuming that the present case is one in which the plaintiffs are not directly entitled to sue to enforce the specific performance of the contract executed by Data Ram, I should think that the present case easily falls within the first two conditions laid down in the case of Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (12) just quoted, I will now show how such is the case.

Data Ram by the document executed by him said: "As regards the said documents I declare that I shall abide by all the conditions laid down therein..... .....I, therefore, covenant and bind myself that should I deviate from fulfilling any of the terms then the person in whose favour the said condition might be deemed may have it enforced by the Court" The conditions are recorded in Musammat Manohri's document dated the 12th of December 1918 and one of the conditions is that a sum of Rs. 15,000 would be paid to the plaintiffs in the course of 15 years. Under s. 3 of the Indian Trusts Act (Act II of 1882): "A trust is an obligation annexed to the ownership of property... .....declared and accepted by him (owner) for the benefit of another or of another and the owner." The declaration that Data Ram expressly made was to the effect that his adoption was conditional on his accepting the stipulations mentioned in Musammat Manohri's deed and further that he would abide by the conditions. There is, therefore, a declaration of an obligation in favour of certain persons and that obligation is annexed to the ownership of Data Ram's property. The document executed by Data Ram being a registered one all the requirements of law are fulfilled and the document would operate as a deed of trust binding on Data Ram. It will be noticed that Data Ram expressly gives to the persons mentioned in the document executed by Musammat Manohri an authority to sue him in a Court of Law in case of any deviation by him from the terms of it. Even if Data Ram had not granted such authority to enforce the obligation against him, the obligation could be enforced against him under s. 56 of the Indian Trusts Act. There can, therefore, be no doubt that even if we accept the statement of law as made in the case of Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (12), the present case fully falls within the scope of it. Further, it appears to me that the plaintiffs are entitled to have a charge on Data Ram's property. This point will be discussed under Issue No. 4. If this be the case the plaintiffs will have an additional title to maintain the suit.

Point No. 4. I have already stated as my opinion that the two documents of the 12th and 14th of December 1918 should be treated as one transaction entered into by two persons. Musammat Manohri expressly declared that the monies which Data Ram was to pay on her death would be recovered from her estate in case of non payment. This would evidence an intention to create a charge over the estate of Musammat Manohri. Data Ram in the deed executed by himself accepts these terms and says that the terms could be enforced against him in a Court of Law. It is true he does not say that the monies payable by him could be recovered from the estate in his possession, but the intention is clear. It is to be noted that the main document is the one executed by Musammat Manohri and it alone contains all the stipulations entered into between the mother and the son. The deed executed by Data Ram is a short one and it was found unnecessary to repeat all the conditions already put into the deed executed by Musammat Manohri. I am of opinion that Data Ram did charge the entire estate in his hands with the payment of the several items enumerated in Musammat Manohri's deed. The plaintiffs are, therefore, entitled to a declaration of the charge they ask for.

The result is that I would dismiss the defendant's appeal with costs including Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale and would allow the plaintiffs' appeal with costs granting them a declaration that they have a charge for the sum of Rs. 15,000 over the entire property owned by Data Ram as the adopted son of Dalip Singh. The costs due to the plaintiffs-appellants would include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Lindsay, J.—I regret that I am unable to concur in the judgment of my learned brother. In my opinion the plaintiffs are not entitled to any relief and I hold that their suit should have been dismissed by the Court below.

The main facts of the case have been set out in the judgment of my learned colleague and need not be recapitulated here. I proceed at once to an examination of the case disclosed in the plaint. It is alleged in the first place that Musammat Manohri was the own sister of the plaintiffs and that at the time of her death she was full owner and in possession of considerable property both moveable and immoveable.

It was next asserted that by means of a document executed on the 12th December 1918 and which is described as a combination of a Will and a deed of adoption, Musammat Manohri bequeathed her estate to the defendant Data Ram, her adopted son, subject to certain conditions and provisions one of which was that a sum of Rs. 15,000 was to be paid to the plaintiffs out of the estate.

It was then stated that by a deed executed on the 14th December 1918 the defendant Data Ram accepted all the conditions and provisions referred to above and that he was bound to discharge them.

It was pleaded that the defendant had come into possession of the property on the death of Musammat Manohri which took place on the 15th of December 1918, and that on various dates subsequent he had repudiated his liability to pay the sum of Rs 15,000 to the plaintiffs.

The reliefs which the plaintiffs claimed on these allegations were:

(1) a declaration of the defendant's liability to pay them Rs. 15,000, and

(2) a declaration that the entire property of Musammat Manohri in the hands of the defendant or his transferees was subject to a charge to the extent indicated.

It is clear then that the case for the plaintiffs was that Musammat Manohri being full owner of the property had bequeathed it to the defendant subject to a charge in their favour and that by reason of the agreement between Musammat Manohri and the defendant constituted by the deeds executed on the 12th and 14th December 1918 respectively the plaintiffs were entitled to enforce the charge.

It is to be observed here that the plaintiffs were no parties to the agreement just mentioned—nor is it pleaded, nor could it be pleaded that any consideration for the agreement moved from them. They are strangers alike to the consideration and the contract and have no right of suit unless they can establish that there was over and above a mere contract a conveyance of some interest in their favour which they are entitled to enforce either in law or equity.

While it is true that the doctrine in Tweddle v. Atkinson (7) has been held not to apply in India, it is not to be inferred from the judgment in which this principle was laid down that there is any rule of general application in India which enables persons to bring suits upon contracts to which they are no parties. That this is so is apparent from the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in the case of Jamna Das v. Ram Autar Pande (13). The earlier case decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council in which the dictum regarding the rule in Tweddle v. Atkinson (7) occurs is Khwaja Muhammad Khan v. Husaini Begum (8) and a reference to the judgment shows that the right of suit recorded to a third party in that case was granted on the ground that a charge upon specific immoveable property had been by the agreement created in her favour. It was held in the circumstances that the plaintiff was entitled to proceed in equity to enforce her claim.

The whole law on this subject has been discussed by a Bench of the Madras High Court in Iswaram Pillai v. Taregan (12) and I agree with the view which is there taken.

There can, in my opinion, be no right of suit by a stranger to the agreement unless it can be shown that there has been a charge created in his favour or that under the agreement he is entitled to some beneficial interest as a cestui que trust.

To return now to the case set out in the plaint, it has been pointed out by my learned brother that when these appeals first came up for hearing it was found necessary to remit two issues to the Court below in order to have it ascertained (1) whether the property which was in Musammat Manohri's possession when she died, or any portion of it, belonged to her absolutely or whether it was in part or in whole the ancestral property of her husband Dalip Singh, and (2) whether Musammat Manohri was competent to make a Will so as to bind the defendant by its terms. The Court below has found that the entire property which was in Musammat Manohri's possession was ancestral property in the hands of her husband and that accordingly she had under the Hindu Law no power to dispose of it by Will so as to bind the defendant. She had nothing more than the limited estate of a Hindu female which determined as soon as the adoption was made, and the whole of the property vested in Data Ram by reason of his adoption.

The plaintiffs, as my learned colleague has pointed out, have not been able to controvert the finding that the property was the ancestral property of Dalip Singh and in these circumstances it is obvious that the case set up in the plaint has collapsed entirely. The document executed by Musammat Manohri on the 12th December 1918 in so far as it purports to be a Will is altogether void for the purpose of creating any interest to take effect subsequent to her death and the plaintiffs can derive no benefit from it. Data Ram the defendant has not come into the estate of Dalip Singh under this document. He is in by adoption as the heir of Dalip Singh.

(13) 13 Ind. Cas. 304; 34 A. 63; 16 C. W. N 97; 11 M. L. T. 6; 9 A. L. J. 37; (1912) M. W. N. 32; 15 C. L. J. 68; 14 Bom. L. R. 1; 21 M. L. J .1158; 39 I. A. 7 (P. C.).

In this state of things the plaintiffs have been driven to advance a case different from that with which they started in the Court below and it is now argued that as the adoption of Data Ram was made subject to certain conditions which he, being a person of full age (as he is found to be) accepted by the declarations contained in the document executed by him on the 14th December 1918, he is bound to fulfil the conditions one of which was the payment of Rs. 15,000 to the plaintiffs.

In the 5th paragraph of the additional pleas set out in the defendant's written statement it was pleaded that the conditions referred to were unlawful as being contrary to the Hindu Law, and that the defendant was not bound by them. In my opinion the defendant had the right to raise this defence as against the plaintiffs who, as I have already pointed out, are strangers to the agreement and from whom no consideration has proceeded. They are not the "promisees" under the agreement evidenced by the two documents. Nor has it been pleaded, nor was it possible for the plaintiffs to plead an estoppel against Data Ram. Their position has not in any way been altered by any declaration or conduct on the part of the defendant.

We have then to examine the validity of these conditions sought to be imposed upon Data Ram in connection with his adoption. Pausing here it may be noted that the conditions first appear in these two documents which on the finding of the Court below were executed about 1½ months after Data Ram was taken in adoption. It is to be noted that in the plaint nothing was said as to these conditions having been imposed or accepted before or at the time of the adoption. But on the 14th June 1921 the plaintiffs' Pleader put in an application to be found at page 17 of our printed record in which it was stated that it was the plaintiffs' case that the conditions had been settled before the adoption took place. The defendant in para. 10 of the further pleas in the written statement had denied that the adoption had been made subject to any conditions and in para. 11 it was further set out that the so-called conditions had been put forward about 2½ months after adoption had taken place.

The plaintiffs by their petition just mentioned asked for amendment of the issues in order to have the date of the conditions settled but the Subordinate Judge refused this prayer being of opinion that the issues had been adequately drawn. He did not shut out any evidence regarding this point in controversy, and the defendant himself and three witnesses (two of whom were not cross-examined) deposed that no conditions had been put forward and accepted prior to or at the time of adoption. The plaintiffs were allowed to call evidence in rebuttal but their Pleader informed the Court (see page 27 of the printed record) that he would not call any evidence to show that the conditions had been accepted at or before the time of adoption, and the only evidence in favour of the plaintiffs on this point is to be found in a declaration contained in the deed executed by Data Ram on the 14th December 1918 in which he says that Musammat Manohri had made "some arrangments of the property at that time, i. e., the time of the adoption."

In the document executed by Musammat Manohri herself on the 12th December 1918 there is no mention of any conditions having been put forward when the adoption took place 2½ months before (as she says).

My learned colleague is, apparently satisfied that the conditions were offered and accepted at or before the time of the adoption. The matter is not so clear to me as it is to him: but there is, at any rate, the admission contained in the defendant's own deed and I am not, therefore, prepared to differ as regards this matter. To return to the question of the validity of these conditions, can a Hindu widow, about to make an adoption to her husband, stipulate for gifts of her husband's estate to be made to her relations and to strangers by the adopted son after he is taken in adoption? Can she make the adoption conditional upon the adopted sons agreeing to carry out her directions to make such gifts? In my opinion she cannot. To allow an arrangement of this nature to be carried out would be to allow the Hindu widow to do indirectly what the Hindu Law forbids her to do directly and I hold that no such arrangement can be enforced. Any attempt to bind the adopted son by such conditions must fail: the conditions are void and the son takes the estate free from them.

It is undoubtedly true that conditional adoptions are not unknown to the Hindu Law as administered in our Courts, and there are numerous instances of adoptions in which conditions laid down by the adoptive father or adoptive mother have been enforced.

As regards conditions made by the adoptive father there is no need to consider them for if an adoptive father can dispose of his property before adoption as he chooses, he can at the time of adopting a son impose such conditions as he thinks fit upon the enjoyment of his property by the adopted son. A widow, however, stands in a very different position.

Most if not all of the cases relating to conditional adoptions made by widows have arisen in connection with agreements made at the time of adoption between the adoptive mother and one or other of the natural parents of the child who, save in exceptional cases like the present where the parties are Jains, is a minor.

It has been held legitimate for a widow on such occasions to impose conditions for her own benefit provided they are reasonably designed for her own protection. The widow although the estate is divested from her by the act of adoption is nevertheless entitled to maintenance and may for that purpose make provision for the protection of the estate in her own interest.

The law on this subject has been discussed in a number of rulings of the Bombay and Madras High Courts and I may refer here to a judgment of the former Court reported as Ravji v. Lakhshmibai (5). In the course of the judgment the learned Judge referring to West & Buhler remarks that agreements depriving an adopted son of his immediate right of inheritance are inadmissible in accordance with strict Hindu Law, but are not uncommon in practice and have been upheld by the Courts, custom and practice have moulded the law and fair arrangements for the protection of the widow's interest during her life are allowed. The question in all cases is whether the stipulations are reasonable. If they are unreasonable such as giving the widow absolute powers of disposition over the property they should be rejected.

As an instance in which a condition imposed by the widow was rejected as unreasonable, I may refer to the case of Venkappa v. Fakir Gowda (14). There the agreement made by the adoptive mother with the natural parent was one by which she took power to give away a portion of her husband's estate to her own brother. It was held that the condition was unreasonable and the gift void and the adopted son was held entitled to recover the property.

There are not many cases of this description to be found in the reports of the Courts of these Provinces. There is one in Kali Das v. Bijai Shankar (15) in which an arrangement by the widow that she should remain as manager of the estate for her life was upheld.

The question of the validity of conditions made by a widow at the time of adoption was raised in another case which went up from Oudh to the Privy Council [Bhaiya Rabidat Singh v. Indar Kunwar (1)]. The question was not actually decided for it was held that, as a matter of fact, no conditions had been attached to the adoption. But it was remarked in the concluding portion of the judgment that had it been otherwise the analogy, such as it is, presented by the doctrines of Courts of Equity in England relating to the execution of powers of appointment would rather suggest that, even in that case the adoption would have been valid and the condition void. The learned Judge was here no doubt referring to the rule by which a corrupt bargain made by the donee of a special power to appoint to a certain person or class with such person or a person of such class is deemed to be void and the doctrine would, I take it, extend to a case where the bargain was made not for the benefit of the holder of the power but for the benefit of his relations and friends.

I would here observe with reference to the decisions of the Bombay Courts that the powers of the widow in Western India to take in adoption are more extensive than those which a widow possesses in these territories. In Bombay the widow can adopt without any consent from her husband. In these Provinces the consent of the husband is essential and while it might be conceded that consent so given would justify the widow in imposing reasonable conditions for the protection of herself and the estate from which she is entitled to draw maintenance it would not be readily assumed that the husband consented to arrangements made by the widow at the time of adoption whereby extensive portions of his estate could be transferred by way of gift to the members of his wife's family.

In the document executed by Musammat Manohri on the 12th December 1915 it is nowhere stated that the gift which she was purporting to make had been sanctioned by her husband. There is indeed a statement to that effect made in the subsequent deed executed by the defendant on the 14th December 1918, but it would require better evidence than this to convince me that the widow had been authorized by her husband to make these gifts and no such evidence is forthcoming.

In my opinion Musammat Manohri had under the Hindu Law no authority to make these gifts or to impose upon the defendant Data Ram any condition that he should make them after adoption. The invalidity of such conditions cannot, in my opinion, be cured by showing that the adopted son, a person of full age, assented to them. The invalidity arises out of the inherent disability of the widow under the Hindu Law to give away portions of her husband's estate and an attempt to impose conditions which would lead indirectly to such alienations being made is, in my opinion, absolutely void as being ultra vires. I hold, therefore, that the defendant being entitled as against the plaintiffs to raise the plea that the conditions are invalid is also entitled to a judgment that they are invalid and are not binding upon him.

I cannot agree that as the result of the two documents under consideration the defendant has constituted himself a trustee for the plaintiffs and is bound in that capacity to pay them this sum of Rs. 15,000.

It is clear for the reasons given above that Musammat Manohri was not competent to create any trust over the estate of her husband nor has she transferred any property to the defendant with a trust attached. The defendant has taken the property as the result of his adoption he has not taken it under the so-called Will executed by Musammat Manohri. Nor am I able to spell out of the language of the document which the defendant executed on the 14th December 1914 any such declaration of confidence as would place him in the position of a trustee for the plaintiffs. He has expressed his assent to certain conditions offered him by the widow and those conditions are, according to my opinion, void in law. He stands free of them, and is under no legal obligation to carry them out as effecting the property in his possession.

Further even if it can be deduced from the language of these two deeds that all the formalities necessary to the execution of a deed of trust had been carried out, I should still be of opinion that the purpose of the trust being unlawful the trust could not be enforced. I have touched upon this matter already. There can be no doubt what the purpose intended by these two documents was. Musammat Manohri had either by herself or with the assistance of members of her own family made up her mind that her relations and other friends were to be handsomely provided for out of her husband's estate and as that end could not be achieved by direct action on her part forbidden by the Hindu Law it was considered that the same end might be attained indirectly by having these deeds executed. The purpose being, in my opinion, unlawful as in contravention of the Hindu Law the trust, if there is one cannot be enforced.

There remains only one other matter for discussion. My learned brother following the judgment in the case reported as Kashibai Ramchandra Ghatge v. Tatya Genu Pawar (6) is of opinion that the transaction evidenced by the two deeds of the 12th and 14th December 1918 should be enforced as a family settlement. He also refers in this connection to s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act, with this I cannot agree.

The facts of the Bombay case to which he refers are, in my judgment, very different from those with which we are concerned here.

A Hindu, Bapurao, died leaving a widow, his son's widow and his son's minor daughter. Before his death he recommended his wife to adopt the defendant Anna who was his own brother's son. This she did by executing a deed of adoption on the 10th June 1895, and by a second deed of even date which purported to be a Will she made a bequest in favour of her deceased son's minor daughter. This Will was attested by the adopted son (who was of full age) and by his father and his brother the latter being a qualified Pleader.

The daughter sued for possession of the property bequeathed to her. It was held that although the disposition by Will in the plaintiffs' favour was bad she was entitled to succeed on the ground that there had been a family arrangement to which the adopted son was a party and which he deliberately accepted.

One thing, at least, is apparent from this statement of the facts and that is that all the persons concerned were members of the same family, i. e., the family to which Bapurao belonged and in that sense it may be said that the transactions entered into were between members of the same family and related to property belonging to that family concerning which there was some dispute.

But I am quite unable to discern any case of a family arrangement in the present suit. I have always understood that the arrangements which go by this name are arrangements arrived at by members of the same family in settlement of doubtful claims cases in which, there being uncertainty as to the rights of the various claimants, the dispute is composed by a settlement based upon the acknowledgment of pre-existing title in the parties concerned. There must be a dispute, the parties must belong to the same family and the property which constitutes the subject-matter of the dispute must be the property of the family to which the parties belong.

In the case which is now before me we are concerned with property belonging to Dalip Singh. His widow adopted a relation of her own and thereby made him a member of Dalip's family : up to the time of his adoption he was not a member of that family but belonged to the family of his adoptive mother. So that any arrangement arrived at between him and her before the adoption took place or at that very time cannot be said to have been an arrangement between members of the same family.

Nor again is it apparent that there was any dispute for the settlement of which this arrangement was necessary? There could in fact have been no dispute—no agitation of doubtful claims—and there was no distribution of Dalip Singh's property between the widow and Data Ram each party acknowledging the title of the other? Nor can it be said that there was any family settlement embracing the plaintiffs and other persons named in the document executed by Musammat Manohri—for these persons who were outside Dalip Singh's family had no shadow of a claim to any portion of the estate belonging to Dalip Singh. The arrangements made for their benefit were not come to by way of settling any doubtful rights for they had no rights doubtful or otherwise but were merely candidates for favours from Musammat Manohri, the principles of the family arrangement or settlement cannot be invoked in support of the plaintiffs' case and the judgment in Kashibai Ramchandra Ghatge v. Tatya Genu Pawar (6), assuming it to be a correct judgment on the facts of that case, cannot afford any guide to the disposal of the present suit. With regard to the provisions of s. 23 of the Specific Relief Act what I have already said serves to show that the plaintiffs cannot ground on this provision of the law. Clause (c) of the section to which my leraned colleague refers relates to contracts of settlement on marriage and compromises of doubtful rights between members of the same family and gives a right of action to persons who are beneficially entitled thereunder. Neither case has arisen here; there is no question of any marriage settlement. Nor for the reasons I have given above is there any case of a compromise of doubtful rights between members of the same family.

The result of all this is that, in my opinion, the suit of the plaintiffs should have been dismissed in toto.

First Appeal No. 485 of 1921 should, therefore, be allowed with costs to the defendant Data Ram in both Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale,

The plaintiffs' appeal, First Appeal No. 443 of 1921, in my opinion, fails and should be dismissed with costs including fees here on the higher scale.

By the Court.—As we are divided in opinion regarding the proper decision of both these appeals the result is that both appeals are dismissed with costs including fees in each case on the higher scale.

Partnership, dissolution of—Accounts, suit for—Neglect of partner, liability for.

In a suit for accounts upon a dissolution of partnership one partner is not liable for the probable loss sustained by the firm owing to the neglect or failure of such partner to carry out the duties imposed upon him by the partnership agreement to the prejudice of the firm's business.

Thomas v. Atherton, (1879) 10 Ch. D. 185; 48 L. J. Ch. 370; 40 L. T. 77, distinguished.

Second appeal from the decision of the Joint Judge at Thana, in Appeal No. 137 of 1922, amending the decree of the First Class Subordinate Judge at Alibag, in Civil Suit No. 50 of 1921.

Mr. T. N. Walavalkar, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. B. Shingne, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for accounts of a partnership entered into between the parties to the suit to ply a machawa for hire. The machawa itself has been sold, and the dispute now ranges about some minor matters in the account. The Trial Court came to a decision on those matters. It is contained in what is called a preliminary decree at page 11 of the print. That was not a real preliminary decree, as all the questions in dispute were actually decided, and nothing remained to be done except to make the necessary calculations to give effect to the Court's findings.

The defendant appealed and the Court came to a different conclusion on certain items of the account, and passed a decree accordingly.

The plaintiffs have appealed, and the first ground on which they rely is that the lower Appellate Court had no jurisdiction to interfere with the preliminary decree in an appeal from the final decree. As a matter of fact the decree was not a preliminary decree although the Judge called it so. Consequently that ground of appeal cannot be supported.

An objection is taken to the lower Appellate Court's disallowing an item of Rs. 225 to the plaintiffs on the ground hat one partner is not liable in a suit for accounts upon a dissolution of partnership for the probable loss sustained by the firm owing to the neglect or failure of one partner to carry out the duties imposed upon him by the partnership agreement to the prejudice of the firm's business.

It was contended that the defendant was negligent in not plying the boat for freight, The Appellate Judge has considered that, and has come to the conclusion that there was no negligence on which an action could be founded, and so the plaintiffs would not be entitled to recover damages for negligence against their partner.

We have been referred to Lindley on Partnership, (9th Edition) page 472. The passage runs:

"Before the Partnership Act, 1890, was passed, if a partner was guilty of a breach of his duty to the firm, and loss resulted therefrom, such loss fell on him alone. As was said by the Court in Bury v. Allen (1), 'Suppose the case of an act of fraud, or culpable negligence, or wilful default by a partner during the partnership to the damage of its property or interests, in breach of his duty to the partnership; whether at law compellable or not compellable, he is certainly in equity compellable to compensate or indemnify the partnership in this respect.'"

But it cannot be said that the defendant has been guilty of fraud, culpable negligence, or wilful default.

Reference was also made to Thomas v. Atherton (2). But in that case the managing partner of a mine carried on the workings beyond the boundary. An action was brought by the adjoining owner against the managing partner, and the proceedings before the arbitrators ended in an order against him. In a suit brought by the managing partner against the other partners for contribution, it was held that the other partners were not liable.

That would be an entirely different question from the one now argued before us, namely, that the defendant, owing to his not having plied the boat for freight, would be liable to bring into account the freight that could have been earned as contended for by the plaintiffs.

(2) (1879) 10 Ch. D. 185; 48 L. J. Ch. 370; 40 L. T 77.

We think, therefore, that the decision was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. The cross-objections are dismissed with costs.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and S. N. Rai, for the Appellant.

Messrs. K. P. Jayaswal, S. K. Mitter and Janak Kishore, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Kulwant Sahay, J.—These two appeals arise out of a decree passed by the District Judge of Darbhanga whereby he modified a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge. Appeal No. 452 is by one of the defendants 1st party and Appeal No. 456 is by the plaintiff. The case made by the plaintff in the plaint was that he and the defendants 1st and second parties were the 16-annas proprietors of Mouza Bishunpur Narhan and Patti Nizamat bearing Touzi No. 3942, that the said mouza was under Collectorate partition which had not been finished at the time the suit was brought and that before the said Collectorate partition the said mouza was never divided by the proprietots amongst themselves. But for the sake of facility in enjoyment and use of the joint property the names of different proprietors were entered against some of the plots in the khatian. The plaintiff stated that his zenana house was situated on plots Nos. 2983, 2984 and 2985 and that his male quarters were situated on plots Nos. 2964 and 2965. The dispute was as regards plot No. 2966. The plaintiff claimed that this plot No. 2966 which was an open parti land in front of his male quarters was used by him under right of easement for holding parties, panchayat and celebrating marriage festivals, etc. He also claimed a right of easement to pass from his male quarters to his female quarters across a foot-path in plot No. 2966. He further claimed that plot No. 2966 belonged to him in proprietary interest. The reliefs asked in the plaint were:—

(1) It may be held by the Court that in the land bearing No. 2966, the plaintiff has acquired the right, to use the land at the time of marriage, dance parties, sradhs, bhoj and panchayats etc., and that the way which is marked as (k) (kh) and (ga) in the map attached to the plaint, has been in use without resistence for more than 60 years and that the said right of easement is necessary.

(2) It may be held by the Court that defendants 1st party have no right to erect the house on the said land and that if a house is erected on the aforesaid land the plaintiff will be put to serious loss and the way leading to the male quarters from the female quarters will be closed.

(3) That on adjudication of relief clauses (1) and (2) defendants 1st party may be forbidden by a perpetual injunction from erecting any house and the house which has already been built may be demolished and the aforesaid land be cleared.

The defence of the defendants was that plot No. 2966 belonged to defendant No. 1 exclusively. that the plaintiff had acquired no right of easement over the said plot and that the suit was barred by res judicata. The First Court held that the plaintiff had failed to prove any right of easement over plot No. 2966. He further found that the plaintiff had failed to prove that plot No. 2966 belonged to him exclusively. The learned Subordinate Judge, therefore, dismissed the suit. On appeal by the plaintiff to the District Judge the finding of the Subordinate Judge has been upheld, as regards the question of the plaintiff's title to plot No. 2966 and also the easement claimed by the plaintiff as regards his right to hold parties over No 2966 but as regards the right of way, the learned District Judge has come to a finding that the plaintiff has succeeded in establishing a right of way from his baithak to his zenana house along the foot-path which extended over O to G in the map filed with the plaint in a straight line. The learned Judge also found that the defendants had completed the house on plot No 2966 before any notice was given to them to show cause why injunction should not be issued. In the circumstances he thought that it was not a fit case of mandatory injunction. He held that the plaintiff had no doubt a right of way over the disputed land in a straight line from O to G in the Commissioner's map, but in view of the circumstances appearing in the evidence he was of opinion that this right has now to be exercised by the plaintiff along the line marked O, N, B, F and G in the Commissioner's map and that the plaintiff would not be entitled to use the foot-path claimed although it was found that he had acquired a right by prescription.

Now having regard to the case made by the plaintiff I fail to see how the plaintiff can claim the right of easement over plot No. 2966. His own case is that the whole village is jointly held by him and defendants 1st and 2nd parties and that there is a partition proceeding going on in the Collectorate for a partition of the village among the proprietors. Now if he is the owner of the village he can obviously have no right of easement against himself. The learned Vakil for the plaintiff-appellant relies upon the finding of the District Judge that the plaintiff has failed to prove that plot No. 2966 belonged exclusively to him. What the finding means is that although there has been no actual partition of the village amongst the co-sharers, yet each co-sharer is in exclusive possession of certain plots. Now exclusive possession by co-sharers of portions of undivided estates is a common thing. Such exclusive possession does not amount to an ouster of the other co-sharers. Every joint owner has a right to use any portion of the joint lands so long as he does not exclude the other co-sharers from it. In the present case the use by the defendants of plot No. 2966 exclusively is not an ouster of the plaintiff and if the plaintiff is dissatisfied with the defendants' using plot No. 2966 exclusively, his only remedy is by way of partition. Upon the case made by the plaintiff, I fail to see how he can claim any right of easement over any portion of the village of which he is a co-owner. I, therefore, fail to see how the learned District Judge could come to a finding that the plaintiff had acquired a right of easement by prescription over plot No. 2966. In the circumstances, I think that the decree made by the Subordinate Judge was correct and the suit of the plaintiff must be dismissed with costs throughout. Appeal No. 452 of the defendant is decreed and No. 456 of the plaintiff is dismissed one set of hearing-fee being allowed in both the appeals.

I may add that upon the case made by the plaintiff it is not necessary to decide whether plot No. 2966 is the exclusive property of the defendants or whether the plaintiff has also got a title to this plot jointly with the defendants. That question must be left open in the present suit.

Ross, J.—I agree.

Per Cuming, J.—Where on an application for leave to sue in forma pauperis the Court comes to the conclusion that there is a cause of action, the High Court cannot interfere with the order in revision on the ground that no cause of action is disclosed. The Court has jurisdiction to decide rightly or wrongly and a wrong decision even though on a question of law can by no stretch of imagination be considered to be illegal exercise of jurisdiction or exercise of jurisdiction with material irregularity within the meaning of s. 115 of the C. P. C. [p. 739, col. 1.]

Rule against an order of the Sub-Judge, Second Court, Bakarganj, in Pauper Suit No. 1 of 1921.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Roy Chowdhury and Babu Nando Gopal Banerjee, for the Petitioners.

Babus Brojendra Nath Chatterjee and Satindra Nath Roy Chaudhury, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This Rule was issued on the ground that the plaint does not disclose a cause of action and, therefore, the Court below ought to have dismissed the application of the opposite party for leave to sue in forma pauperis. The plaintiffs' ancestors mortgaged certain properties and in execution of the decree on the mortgage the mortgaged properties were purchased by the predecessors-in-interest of the defendants. An application was made by the mortgagors to have the sale set aside under s. 244 of the old C. P. C., which was dismissed. The present suit is brought in respect of certain subordinate tenures to the taluk which according to the plaintiffs were never mortgaged. The plaintiffs' case is that the property that was mortgaged and sold was the taluk and not the subordinate tenures. The only question, therefore, that I am asked to look into is if the plaint in this case discloses a cause of action under O. XXXIII, r. 5. It is not necessary for me to go to the length of holding that if the plaint, as a matter of fact, does not disclose a sufficient cause of action but if the Court below wrongly holds that it does, we have no jurisdiction under s. 115 to interfere with that order. But in this case the plaint discloses a cause of action, however, weak it may be, according to the petitioners' allegations, and, therefore, it is not proper that we should interfere with the order of the Court below. Reading paras. 5 and 6 of the plaint together it appears that the plaintiff's case is that the property that was mortgaged was the taluk and what was sold was the taluk. The subordinate tenures were not sold at all. It is further alleged that the interpolations in the sale proclamation were made presumably after the sale. If the plaintiffs succeed in proving these facts they cannot be met by the objection that the suit does not lie under s. 244 of the Code of 1882. If all these questions are to be determined here as also the objections taken before us, it may very well be deciding the case. As I have observed, the allegations of the plaintiffs may be right or wrong but they do disclose a cause of action within the meaning of law. It is upon these allegations in the plaint that the Court below has observed that there is nothing in the evidence of the applicants themselves from which it can be held that the properties in dispute were, in fact, sold. In this view of the matter I decline to interfere with the order of the Court below.

The Rule is, therefore, discharged with costs three gold mohurs.

Let the record be sent down at once.

Cuming, J.—This is an application under s. 115, C. P. C. for revision of an order of the Second Subordinate Judge of Barisal granting the petitioner's leave to sue in forma pauperis. It is not necessary for me to set out the facts of the case as they have been stated by my learned brother in the order which he has just delivered. The petitioners in support of the application urge two points. First of all they contend that the learned Judge did not consider the allegations in the plaint but only considered the evidence of the plaintiffs in deciding as to whether the suit was or was not maintainable. On reading the order of the learned Subordinate Judge fairly it seems to me that what the learned Judge meant to say was that the only evidence to be looked into was the plaintiffs' own statements and that it was not open to him to consider any further evidence. It is I think clear that in passing his order and deciding whether the suit was or was not maintainable he was considering the allegations as set forth in the plaint.

The next point urged by the learned Advocate appearing for the petitioners is that the plaint does not disclose a cause of action. Whether the plaint does or does not disclose a cause of action, it is not necessary for me to decide. The learned Judge has decided that the plaint does disclose a cause of action and it is difficult to see how in deciding that the plaint discloses a cause of action he has exercised a jurisdiction not vested in him by law or failed to exercise jurisdiction so vested in him or has acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. The learned Advocate who has appeared for the petitioners complains of the action of the Judge under cl. (c) of s. 115, C. P. C, namely, that he acted in the exercise of his jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity. What the learned Judge has done is that he has decided that there is a cause of action. This decision may be absolutely wrong. But in coming to this decision it is difficult to see how he acted illegally or with material irregularity. It has been pointed out by the Privy Council that the Court has jurisdiction to decide rightly or wrongly and a wrong decision even though on a question of law can by no stretch of imagination be considered to be illegal exercise of jurisdiction or exercise of jurisdiction with the material irregularity. I, therefore, agree with my learned brother in discharging this Rule.

CIVIL REVISION No. 489 OF 1924.

Present:—Mr Justice Ross.

THE BENGAL NORTH WESTERN RY. CO.—PETITIONER

versus

SUKHDEO PRASAD—OPPOSITE PARTY.

B. & N. W. R. Provident Fund Rules, r. 14 (4)—Railway servant, dismissal of—Fine deducted from Provident Fund—Suit to recover amount of fine, whether maintainable—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts—Power to withhold bonus, exercise of.

Plaintiff, who was an employee of the B. & N. W. Railway Company, was dismissed from the service of the Company and was fined a certain sum which was ordered to be realized from his Provident Fund. Plaintiff thereupon brought a suit for recovery of the amount of the fine from the defendant Company on the allegation that his dismissal was wrongful and that the fine should not have been imposed upon him. It was found that the dismissal of the plaintiff was wrongful:

Held, (1) that the matter was of a civil nature and that any agreement entered into by the plaintiff which empowered the Company to impose a fine did not take away the plaintiff's right of action in a claim of this sort and did not deprive the Civil Courts of jurisdiction to determine such a claim; [p. 740, col. 1.]

(2) that in inflicting a fine upon plaintiff the defendant Company purported to exercise their legal powers to fine their servant under the terms of the agreement between them and their servant and did not purport to exercise any arbitrary powers over the bonus portion of the servant's Provident Fund under the Provident Fund Rules, and that, therefore, r. 14 (4) of the defendant Company's Provident Fund Rules had no application to the case; [ibid.]

(3) that as soon as it was held that the fine had been wrongly imposed upon the plaintiff the latter was entitled to a decree for a refund of the amount. [ibid.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Motihari, dated the 14th August 1924, reversing that of the Munsif, Bettiah, dated the 16th April 1924.

Mr. S. M. Bose, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The petitioner is the Bengal and North Western Railway. The opposite party was the Assistant Station Master of Tarsarai. As the result of certain departmental enquiries into the disappearance of a consignment of paddy the opposite party was dismissed from the service of the Company and was fined Rs. 50 which was ordered to be realized from his Provident Fund. The opposite party then brought an action for recovery of this sum. He failed in the Munsif's Court both on the merits and on the ground that under the rules of the Provident Fund in case of dismissal the Agent may cause to be withheld all or any part of the bonus provisionally allotted to the servant.

The Provident Fund consists of two parts, the sum contributed by the Railway servant and the bonus and interest contributed by the Company. A note on the form of the statement of the depositor's account shows that the bonus although shown in the account cannot be claimed as a right by the depositor, but is under r. 14 (2) and (4) wholly at the disposal of the Company which reserves full power over it. The relevant r. 14 (4) has been referred to above. The learned Munsif referred to these rules and then went on to say that the plaintiff was under liability to the Company for payment of Rs. 150 as fine as the Company was entitled to deduct that amount from his account. It is evident, therefore, that the learned Munsif did not absolve the Company of the responsibility for this sum merely on the strenghth of these rules but on the substantial ground that the opposite party was liable to pay fine of Rs. 150. The learned Subordinate Judge held on the merits of the case that there was no proof of any misconduct or negligence on the part of the opposite party and he, therefore, gave the opposite party a decree.

The contention on behalf of the petitioner Company is that the learned Subordinate Judge has not dealt with the question discussed in the latter part of the Munsif's judgment, namely, over that part of the Provident Fund which concerns the bonus and interest is subject to their control. Now the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is that although the Company has under the terms of the agreement power to impose a fine on the Railway servant for breach of any rule or discipline, the Railway servant in this case has not been proved to have broken any rule and the fine was, therefore, illegally imposed and its deduction from the Provident Fund was not justified.

He, therefore, ordered a refund.

Now it seems to me that the Railway Company in deducting this sum from the Provident Fund of the plaintiff was not acting in arbitrary exercise of any power reserved to it under their Provident Fund Rules. It is not even specifically stated that the amount was realized from the bonus and not from the plaintiff's own contribution and it cannot be assumed that that was so. As soon as it is held that the fine was wrongly imposed it seems to me to follow as a necessary consequence that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree for a refund of the amount. The Company were purporting to exercise their legal powers to fine their servants under the terms of the agreement between them and their servants. They were not purporting to exercise any arbitrary powers over the bonus portion of the servant's Provident Fund. Consequently as the Court has found that the fine was wrongly imposed, the plaintff must get the money back. It was objected on behalf of the petitioner Company that by submitting to an agreement which empowers the Company to impose a fine, the plaintiff had chosen his forum and the jurisdiction of the Civil Court was ousted. In my opinion this argument is without foundation.

The plaintiff has been dismissed and has been fined a sum of money and he comes to Court and claims that he was wrongly dismissed and that the fine should not have been imposed. This is a matter of a civil nature and nothing in the terms of the agreement can take away the plaintiff's right of action in a claim of this sort.

I would, therefore, dismiss the application with costs.

Hearing-fee one gold mohur.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Tippera, dated the 11th of June 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, First Court at Brahmanberia, dated the 27th January 1923.

Babus Nripendra Chandra Das and Nikunja Behary Ray, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case out of which this second appeal has arisen are these. The present appellant in execution of a mortgage-decree sought to put to sale the raiyati holding of the judgment-debtor respondent. The judgment-debtor objected to the sale on two grounds. firstly, that the holding could not be sold as the raiyati holding was not transferable without the landlord's consent; and secondly, that being an agriculturist by occupation he was entitled to the protection accorded by s. 60, C. P. C. The First Court decided both these points against the judgment-debtor respondent. In appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that as the attaching decree-holder was not the landlord and as there was no evidence to show that the holding was transferable by custom or usage and as the consent of the landlord was not alleged to have been obtained, the decree-holder was not entitled to put to sale the raiyati holding of the judgment-debtor respondent. In this view of the case he held that it was not necessary to decide the other objection raised by the judgment-debtor and allowed his objections.

The learned Vakil who has appeared for the decree-holder appellant before us contends that a non-transferable occupancy holding is liable to be sold at an execution sale at the instance of an ordinary creditor without the consent of the landlord and that the consent of the landlord is not necessary in such a sale. In support of this contention he has referred us to the decision of the Court in the case of Kenaram Pal v. Kinu Mandal (1), a decision to which one member of this Bench was a party. This decision, undoubtedly, supports the case of the decree-holder and we are bound to follow it. We are, therefore, of opinion that a non-transferable occupancy holding is liable to be sold at an auction sale at the instance of an ordinary creditor.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the order of the Court below set aside and the case sent back to the lower Appellate Court for the decision of the question raised by the judgment-debtor under s. 60, C. P. C. Costs will abide the result.

We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

Record of Rights, entry in—Presumption of correctness—Suit for declaration that entry is wrong—Burden of proof.

Plaintiffs were landlords in a patti and defendants were tenants of certain land in the patti which belonged to persons other than the plaintiffs. A certain plot was recorded in the Record of Rights as ghairmazrua bandh, and as the property of the plaintiffs but certain trees standing on it were recorded as belonging to the plaintiffs and defendants jointly. Plaintiffs brought a suit for a declaration that the trees belonged to them and that the entry in the Record of Rights was wrong. It was found that the Survey Authorities in making the entry in dispute had proceeded solely on what was stated by the defendants on special oath which was administered to them at the instance of the plaintiffs' gomashata:

Held, (1) that the initial onus was on the plaintiffs to prove that the entry in the Record of Rights was incorrect and that they were entitled to the trees to the exclusion of the defendants; [p. 741, col. 2.]

(2) that the entry in the Record of Rights being based on no foundation at all and the plot in dispute having been recorded in the Record of Rights as ghairmazrua bandh and as the property of the plaintiffs in which the defendants had no interest at all, the presumption was that the trees standing on the plot belonged to the plaintiffs. [p. 742, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Gaya, dated the 11th July 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Gaya, dated the 17th August 1921.

Mr. Janak Kishore, for the Appellants.

Mr. Siveshwar Dayal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Plot No. 469 has been recorded in the Record of Rights as ghairmazrua bandh; and certain trees standing on plot No. 469 have been recorded as belonging to the plaintiffs and the defendants. The plaintiffs are the admitted landlords, the defendants are the tenants in respect of the adjoining land in the patti not of the plaintiffs but of other persons. The plaintiffs embarrased by the entry in the Record of Rights giving half the interest in the trees in plot No. 469 to the defendants, sued for declaration that those trees belong to them and that the entry in the Record of Rights is wrong.

The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiffs' suit. The lower Appellate Court differed from the Court of first instance and has dismissed the plaintiffs' suit.

The first question argued before me turns on the question of onus as to which the Courts below have differed. The Court of first instance thought that the onus was on the defendants to establish that they had any title to these trees. The lower Appellate Court thought that the onus was on the plaintiffs to establish that the entry in the Record of Rights giving half the interest in the trees to the defendants is erroneous. It is true to say that the initial onus is on the party who attacks an entry in the Record of Rights. It was undoubtedly for the plaintiffs to establish that they were entitled to the trees to the exclusion of the defendants. But the plaintiffs showed that the land itself was recorded as ghairmazruah bandh. In other words the land upon which the trees are planted is the property of the plaintiffs in which the defendants have no interst whatever. This consideration had great weight with the Court of first instance.

This is not all. The learned Judge in the Court below apparently conceded that it was open to the plaintiffs to show that there were no materials upon which the Survey Authorities could have decided that the defendants were entitled to half the interest in the trees; but he thought that the plaintiffs placed no materials before the Court. Now this is not correct. The judgment of the learned Munsif shows that the Survey Authorities proceeded upon the evidence of one of the defendants to whom special oath was administered at the instance of Gaya Prasad, the gomashta of the plaintiffs. What happened was this. Gaya Prasad apparently said that if the defendants took special oath and said that they had any interest in the trees he would give up his position that the plaintiffs were entitled to the trees to the exclusion of the defendants. The defendants had no hesitation in taking this special oath and this is how the Survey Authorities came to record these trees in the name of the plaintiffs and defendants jointly. If the Court of first instance is right in saying that the Survey Authorities proceeded solely on what was stated by the defendants on special oath, then clearly there is no foundation whatever for the entry in the Record of Rights. Gaya Prasad had no authority from his master to consent to his master's title being bartered away in this manner; and the Survey Authorities apparently did not examine the materials with a view to see whether the defendants had any interest in these trees.

Now the learned Subordinate Judge in the Court below does not deal with this matter at all. But there is a sweeping assertion that it was for the plaintiffs to show that there was no basis for the entry in the Record of Rights. In my opinion the way in which the learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with this matter is somewhat unsatisfactory, and the question should be re-investigated by him.

Mr. Siveswar Deyal draws my attention to that portion of the judgment where the learned Subordinate Judge says that he is satisfied on evidence that the defendants were all along in possession of the said trees and further that the plaintiffs and defendants were entitled to the trees jointly in equal shares. I recognize that this finding looks very much like a finding of fact; but the way in which the learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with the whole case has satisfied me that he ought to re-hear the matter. The learned Judge attached too great a weight to the entry in the Record of Rights and overlooked the fact first that the land upon which the trees stood was gairmazrua bandh and that, therefore, the trees presumably belonged to the plaintiffs, and secondly, that the plaintiffs placed materials before the Court in support of their case that there was no foundation at all for the entry in the Record of Rights. I do not know what the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge would have been had he considered the matter from this point of view.

I would accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the judgment and decree passed by the Court below and remand the case to that Court for a decision according to law.

Costs will abide the result and will follow the decision in the Court below.

Appeal allowed;
Case remanded.

Execution of decree—Sale of property together with arrears of rent—Decree for arrears of rent, whether included in sale.

An arrear of rent which is unpaid is still rent even though it has been merged into a decree. If money is still due, the mere obtaining of a decree does not change the nature of the arrear of rent, and the money due under the decree must still be regarded as an arrear of rent

Ananda Mohan Roy v. Promotha Nath Ganguli, 57 Ind. Cas. 874: 25 C. W. N. 863, followed.

The applicant purchased certain property in execution of a decree "together with all moneys due from tenants in respect of arrears of rent and cesses or otherwise payable to the proprietors." Prior to the sale the judgment-debtors had obtained a decree for arrears of rent against certain tenants. The applicant sought to execute that decree by virtue of his purchase:

Held, that the decree represented arrears of rent and was included in the purchase of the applicant and that the applicant was, therefore, entitled to execute it.

Dr. Dwarka Nath Mitter and Babu Jatindra Mohan Chowdhury, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—This appeal arises out of a certain execution proceeding. The facts are as follows: Some estate belonging to the well-known Tagore family of Calcutta was sold in execution of a mortgage-decreé and purchased by the present applicant together with all moneys due from tenants in respect of arrears of rent and cesses or otherwise payable to the proprietors. The purchaser under the terms of his purchase seeks to execute against the present appellants a certain decree which had been obtained by the Tagores against the present appellants on the 28th January 1919. The purchase at the execution sale was made in December 1919. The judgment-debtors contend that the expression "with all moneys due from the tenants in respect of arrears of rent" does not include arrears of rent which have been merged into a decree. They would seem to contend that if it had been intended to sell such arrears of rent as had been merged into a decree the sale-certificate would have mentioned the same specifically. This contention found no favour with either of the Courts below nor are we prepared to accept it. The respondent purchased all moneys due from the tenants in respect of arrears of rent and an arrear of rent, if still unpaid, is still rent even though it has been merged into a decree. If money is still due, mere obtaining a decree does not change the nature of the arrears of rent and it must still be considered to be an arrear of rent. If any authority is needed for this elementary proposition reference may be made to the case of Ananda Mohan Roy v. Promotha Nath Ganguli (1). We are of opinion that the expression "all moneys due from tenants in respect of arrears of rent" includes also the rent decree which was obtained against the tenants prior to the sale. In this view of the case the appeal is dismissed with costs two gold mohurs. The respondent will also get the costs of the Rule which was assessed at one gold mohur.

P. C., and the order of the Execution Court thereon is subject to appeal and second appeal. [p. 744, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 8th July 1924, reversing that of the Munsif, Gaya, dated the 12th May 1924.

Mr. N. K. Prasad, No. II, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kailash Pati, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Mullick, J.—This appeal arises out of an order made by the District Judge of Gaya on the 8th of July 1924 allowing an appeal from the decision of the Munsif of Gaya, dated the 12th of May 1924. It appears that Bholanath and another got a decree for money against Musammat Wasihan and Toolia and in execution attached two houses in the town of Gaya alleging that they were the properties of the above judgment-debtors. An objection was then preferred purporting to be made under s. 47 of the C. P. C. by the appellant Kaloo who alleged that the houses were his properties and did not belong to Wasihan and Toolia.

The Munsif allowed the application and withdrew the attachment whereupon the decree-holder appealed to the District Judge who set aside the Munsif's order and found that the properties belonged to the judgment-debtors and that they were liable to be sold.

The present second appeal is preferred by the defendant Kaloo who urges that no appeal lay to the District Judge as the decision of the Munsif was one under O. XXI, r. 58 of the C. P. C. and that the only remedy open to the decree-holder was to institute a regular suit. The appellant has also, by way of precaution, filed a petition in revision which has been marked as Civil Revision Case No. 322 of 1924.

The sole question argued before us is whether the appellant was entitled to come in under s. 47 of the C. P. C. The learned Vakil for the appellant urges that though the appellant was impleaded as a denfendant in the original suit in which the money-decree was made, eventually the suit was dismissed against him; and that although his name appears among both the parties to the suit in the decree, he was in fact not affected by the decree not a party within the meaning of s. 47. On this point, there was some conflict of opinion in the various Courts before the present C. P. C. was enacted. It was held, for instance, in Sheo Pargas Singh v. Nawab Singh (1) that s. 244 of the C. P. C. of 1882 does not apply to a dispute between the decree-holder and a person against whom though a party to the suit, no decree has been passed. The general principle upon which this decision and others of a similar kind were based was that it was not fair that a person against whom no decree had been made and who was really in the position of a stranger, should be compelled to have resort to the summary procedure of the Execution Court in order to establish his title. That principle, however, has not been accepted in s. 47 of the present C. P. C. of 1908, which has expressly enacted that the parties to the suit include the parties againnst whom the suit has been dismissed. Therfore, upon the plain wording of the Statute there can be no room for argument as to whether the appellant was entitled under s. 47 of the Code, to apply to the Execution Court for the determination of his claim; and as the decision of the Execution Court was a final decision on a question of right, it was a decree and an appeal lay against it to the District Judge. Therefore the objection that the District Judge had no jurisdiction to entertain the appeal against the Munsif's order fails. The Munsif also does not appear to have treated the application of Kaloo as one under O. XXI, r. 58, C. P. C., and, even if he had done so, the objection that an appeal did not lie would not have been entertainable if in fact that application was one entertainable under s. 47 of the Code.

A second appeal, therefore, would have lain to this Court against the order of the District Judge, if the matter had not been concluded by a finding of fact. The District Judge finds that the attached property was the property of the judgment-debtors and that finding is final in second appeal. The second appeal, therefore, fails and it is dismissed with costs.

Civil Revision No. 322 of 1924 is not pressed and the application is dismissed. There will be no separate costs in the revision.

LAKSHAN CHANDRA RAY CHAUDHURY AND OTHERS—DECREE-HOLDERS—RESPONDENTS.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 173—Order setting aside sale—Appeal, whether lies.

No appeal lies at the instance of the auction-purchaser against an order setting aside a sale under s. 173 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Burdwan, dated the 11th of September 1922.

Babu Gopendra Nath Das, for the Appellant.

Mr. Baranasibasi Mukherjee and Babu Susil Kumar Ghosal, for Babu Krishna Lal Banerjee, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—This appeal arises out of a certain proceeding in execution. A certain property putni Lat Jogeshwardihi has been sold in execution of a decree for rent. One of the judgment-debtors objected to the sale on the ground that the property had been bought at the sale in the benami of another judgment-debtor. The Trial Court held that the purchase of the property was made by Surendra Nath Chaudhury in the benami of his brother-in-law Jotindra Prosad Ray Chaudhury who was one of the judgment-debtors and, therefore, under the provisions of s. 173, Bengal Tenancy Act, set aside the sale.

The auction-purchaser has appealed to this Court. The objecting judgment-debtor has raised the preliminary objection that no appeal lies against an order passed under s. 173, Bengal Tenancy Act. This contention appears to us to be well-founded. Admittedly the sale took place under the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act and the order setting aside the sale was passed under s. 173, Bengal Tenancy Act. No doubt the application to set aside the sale was made under O. XXI, r. 90 as also under s. 173, Bengal Tenancy Act. Some of the objections which were raised at the time of the hearing of the appeal came under the provisions of O. XXI, r. 90 but the sale was set aside not for any of the reasons which justify a sale being set aside under O. XXI, r. 90, but because it came within the mischief of s. 173, Bengal Tenancy Act. Against such an order no appeal lies. This question was considered in the case of Harabandhu Adhikari v. Harish Chandra Dey (1) and this Court held in that case that no appeal lay at the instance of the auction-purchaser against an order setting aside a sale under s. 173, Bengal Tenancy Act. The same question was also considered in the case of Jadab Chandra Mukherjee v. Joy Gopal Bhattacharya (2) and the learned Judges after reviewing all the cases on the subject came to be of the same opinion. No appeal, therefore, lies in this case.

(1) 3 C. W. N. 184.
(2) 20 Ind. Cas. 191; 19 C. L. J. 81.

The learned Vakil who has appeared for the appellant has next contended that even though no appeal lies against the order setting aside the sale, an appeal does lie against the subsequent order by which the Court ordered that Rs. 5,040 which had been deposited in Court in the name of Surendra Nath Chaudhury was available to the decree-holder. This question is obviously one which cannot be decided in the absence of the decree-holder. The decree-holder, is not present and the record shows that no notice was properly served on him. The order-sheet shows as follows:—On the 22nd May 1923; "Notices of appeal and of application have been served by the peon on enquiry in the absence of an identifier lay before Registrar for orders" and the Registrar passed the following order. 'Let service be accepted at the appellant's risk." This expression apparently means that the appellant was willing to take the risk of the service not being considered satisfactory at the time of the hearing of the appeal and did not pray for any fresh service on the decree-holder. The service is clearly not satisfactory. There was no identifier and the peon's affidavit shows that he made the service on enquiry. There was no one to point out to him the decree-holder. In the absence of the decree-holder, we cannot go into the question as to whether this order was or was not rightly made. It is, therefore, not necessary to consider whether as against this order an appeal lies or whether we should or could deal with the matter under s. 115, C. P. C.

The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs to the respondents Nos. 4 and 5. We assess the hearing-fee at three gold mohurs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 182 (5)—

Execution of decree—Payment of process fees, whether application for step-in-aid of execution.

The deposit of process fees for the issue of attachment in execution of a decree is not an application for execution or an application to take a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of Sch. I to the Limitation Act so as to operate to extend limitation for the execution.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Moradabad, dated the 15th of October 1924

Mr. Durga Prasad, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—On the whole, after hearing the learned Counsel in this case, I have come to the conclusion that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is correct.

The question was a question of limitation. It seems that the decree-holder obtained a decree for possession of certain lands and also a decree for costs. On the 3rd of January 1921 he sought out execution of this decree by making an application (1) for delivery of possession; and (2) for attachment of certain property for the realization of his costs. On the 18th of January 1921 the decree-holder got delivery of possession by execution of a dakhalnama. On the 22nd January 1921 he was ordered to pay into Court the necessary process fees for attachment and on that date he paid in a sum of Rs. 3-12.

It was reported after this that no property of the judgment-debtor was available for attachment and so the application was infructuous. On the 16th January 1924 the decree-holder again applied for attachment of property in order to satisfy his decree for costs and he was met with the plea of limitation.

The last application for execution had been made undoubtedly on the 3rd of January 1921 and the application of the 16th January 1924 was, therefore, made more than three years afterwards. Prima facie, therefore, the application was barred.

It was contended, however, that the payment of the process fee on the 22nd of January 1921 saved limitation. I do not think that argument can be maintained. The ruling in Thakur Ram v. Katwaru Ram (1) seems to me to be clear authority against it, and there is also the other ruling of a Bench of this Court in Sheo Prasad v. Inder Bahadur Singh (2).

It seems to me that the only previous application which was made for execution was the application of the 3rd of January 1921 and I cannot treat the payment of process fee on the 22nd of January 1921 as another and distinct application for execution or even as an application to take some step-in-aid of execution. The payment of this process fee must clearly be associated with the application for execution dated the 3rd of January 1921. The two things cannot be detached and treated as separate transactions.

For these reasons I think the judgment of the Court below must be maintained and I dismiss this appeal under O. XLI, r. 11, C. P. C.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 20, Sch. I, Art. 181—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXXIV, r. 5—Payment towards interest, what amounts to—Mortgage-decree—Application for final decree—Limitation, commencement of—Application barred—Subsequent application by defendant to set aside preliminary decree, whether revives right of decree-holder to apply for final decree.

In order to save limitation under s. 20 of the Limitation Act, a payment towards interest must be made "as such;" that is, it must be expressly made towards interest. The section has nothing to do with the general right of the creditor of appropriating a payment either towards interest or towards principal.

An application for a final decree under O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the C. P. C. is governed by Art. 181 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, and the limitation begins to run from the expiry of the period for payment allowed by the decree. After the right of the decree-holder to make an application for a final decree has become barred by time, an application by one of the defendants to set aside the preliminary decree does not revive the right of the decree-holder to make an application for a final decree.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a mortgage-suit. He obtained a preliminary decree against all the defendants except defendants Nos. 7 to 9 on the 14th November 1914. The period of grace was fixed at one month from that date. Thereafter one of the defendants (19*ka*) applied on the 12th April 1918 for a re-hearing of the suit under O. IX, r. 13. On the 10th August 1918 the ex parte decree against defendants (19*ka*) was set aside and the suit restored so far as he was concerned. The suit against defendant No. (19*ka*) was eventually decreed on the 12th March 1919 as he did not appear at the hearing. But before this on the 6th November 1918 the plaintiff had applied under s. 115, C. P. C. to have the entire decree set aside against the other defendants also on the ground that the mortgage-decree was indivisible, and the same could not be set aside against 19*ka* alone. This application was rejected. On the 15th April 1919 the plaintiff applied to have the final decree against all the defendants under O. XXXIV, r. 5, C. P. C. Attempt was made on his behalf to save limitation by alleging that the defendants had paid the plaintiff Rs. 35 in December 1916. The other defendants resisted the plaintiff's application on the ground that it was barred by limitation. Both the Courts below have held that the decree was barred and dismissed the plaintiff's application.

On appeal to this Court two grounds have been taken before us (1) that the lower Appellate Court should have enquired into the fact of payment of Rs. 35 as alleged by the plaintiff and reckoned the period of limitation from that date, namely December 1916. On this question the learned Judge has come to a finding of fact which we are not able to question in second appeal. He has found that the payment alleged by the plaintiff if made towards the principal is not supported by any acknowledgment in writing according to law; and it is not also alleged that this amount was paid towards interest. The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, argues that it is the absolute right of the creditor when payment is made to appropriate it either towards interest or towards the principal; and as the plaintiff has appropriated this amount towards the interest, time ought to run under s. 20, Indian Limitation Act from the date of such payment. This contention is obviously unsound. Under s. 20, Limitation Act payment towards interest must be made 'as such'; that is, it must expressly be towards interest. It has nothing to do with the general right of the creditor of appropriation of money either towards interest or towards principal. This point accordingly fails.

The next question argued is that time should have been counted from the date when the decree was finally passed against one of the defendants namely, 19*ka*. With reference to this question reliance is placed upon the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case of Ashfaq Husain v. Gauri Sahai (1). That case on its facts has no application to the present case. Here, the preliminary decree was passed on the 14th November 1914 and if one month's grace is added to it, the 14th December 1914 was the date from which time ought to be reckoned. The application for final decree under O. XXXIV, r. 5 is governed by the residuary Art. 181 of the Limitation Act. The time for making this application, therefore, expired, about the middle of December 1917. The defendant No. 19*ka* applied for setting aside the ex parte decree against him and re-hearing of the suit on the 12th April 1919 namely, after the plaintiff's right to have the final decree passed was barred by lapse of time. On these facts the learned Judge was unquestionably correct in the view he has taken that the subsequent application by defendant No. 19*ka* did not affect the right of the plaintiff to apply for a final decree as the same was already barred by limitation. This ground also fails.

The appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs to the respondants who have appeared.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 3, O. XLI, r. 4—Appeal—Death of one appellant before hearing—Appeal allowed—Application by legal representatives of deceased appellant to be brought on record, whether can be allowed.

An appeal was filed by two appellants who were members of a joint Hindu family. A few days before the hearing of the appeal one of the appellants died and the appeal was heard and allowed in ignorance of his death. Subsequently the legal representatives of the deceased appellant made an application that the cause title of the decree may be amended and that they may be brought on the record in place of the deceased appellant:

Held, that having regard to the provisions of r. 4 of O. XLI of the C. P. C. the decree passed in appeal in favour of the surviving appellant must enure for the benefit of all the members of the appellant's family and that as the remaining members wished to be formally brought on the record as legal representatives of the deceased appellant, the application should be allowed.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavits filed with the said C. M. P. No. 100 of 1924 the High Court will be pleased to set aside a decree of the High Court in the said Appeal No. 355 of 1917, and rehear the said appeal in so far as it relates to the 2nd appellant and the 3rd respondent.

ORDER.

IN CIVIL MISCELLANEOUS PETITION No. 100 OF 1924.

This is an application to amend the cause title of the decree in Appeal No. 355 of 1917. This appeal was unfortunately heard and determined a few days after the death of the 2nd appellant therein; the fact of this death was not known to the Court or to the Vakils arguing the case. The appeal succeeded and a decree was passed in favour of both the appellants. Subsequently when an application was made to pass a final decree in the Original Court, an application was also put in to implead the 2nd appellant's legal representatives. It is suggested for the respondent that, that application was out of time, even if the 2nd appellant had been alive on the date of the decree, and on that ground they should not have been brought on record. This is not a question which we have to decide here as that application is not before us; but it appears that this is a case where the delay in bringing on record the legal representatives should be excused; and we do not think that it is a ground for disallowing the present application. The fact that the 2nd appellant was dead on the date of hearing of the appeal cannot put his legal representatives in a worse position than if he had not been a party to the appeal at all; and assuming that he was not a party to the appeal, the decree which was given in favour of his undivided brother, the 1st appellant, would enure for the benefit of the other members of the family, namely, these petitioners who now wish to be added. In O. XLI, r. 4, it is laid down: "Where there are more plaintiffs or more defendants than one in a suit and the decree appealed from proceeds on any ground common to all the plaintiffs or to all the defendants, any one of the plaintiffs or of the defendants may appeal from the whole decree, and thereupon the Appellate Court may reverse or vary the decree in favour of all the plaintiffs or defendants as the case may be." On this principle we consider that the decree passed legally in favour of 1st appellant must enure for the benefit of all the members of the appellants' family, and as they now wish to be formally brought on record as legal representatives of the deceased 2nd appellant who was not a party when the appeal was heard, we think that this should be allowed; and we may refer to a similar case in Chintaman v. Gangabai (1), where the same order was passed.

(1) 27 B. 284; 5 Bom. L. R. 90.

We are also asked to implead the legal representatives of the 3rd respondent who had also died on the date of hearing. They do not appear to oppose this petition and, consequently, it may be taken that they assent to its being done.

We accordingly order the petition with costs against the contesting respondents.

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 26th February 1923.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The respondents brought the suit, out of which this second appeal has arisen, for recovery of the site of a house sold along with the building standing thereon by the appellant No. 4 in favour of the other appellants.

It appears that the respondents were co-sharers in the village of Pandauli and on a partition, they obtained exclusive ownership over that portion of the village in which the house in suit was situated. The respondents were dissatisfied with the sale and contended that the site was their property and could not be disposed of by the appellant No. 4 who, they said, was a mere tenant. They asked for recovery of possession and alleged that they had no objection to the purchasers removing the materials of the house.

The vendor did not enter appearance. The vendees, however, contested the suit on the ground that there was a custom in the village by which the residents were entitled to sell their houses along with the sites.

The Court of first instance came to the conclusion that the custom contended for on behalf of the appellants existed and it accordingly dismissed the suit. The Court of First Appeal, viz., the learned Subordinate Judge, came to the conclusion that the evidence was insufficient for establishing the custom and he decreed the suit, allowing two months' time to the appellants to remove the materials.

The question raised being a mixed one of fact and law, vide Ram Bilas v. Lal Bahadur (1). I allowed the question of sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence to be discussed.

It has been definitely held in this Court (see Faiyaz Ali v. Rekhab Das (2) that a custom like the one set up is not an invalid custom. Indeed, the custom comes only to this that the occupier of a house is also the proprietor of the site. It is really a question of title and, therefore, no question of the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the so-called custom arises [see also the judgment of Aikman, J., in the Full Bench case of Ram Bilas v. Lal Bahadur (1) referred to.]

(1) 30 A. 311; A. W. N. (1908) 112; 5 A. L. J. 456; 4 M. L. T. 169.

(2) 61 Ind. Cas. 24; 19 A. L. J. 104.

It has been held in this Court that ordinarily in a pure agricultural village, the zemindar is the owner of every bit of land in the village and whoever asserts that a mere resident in the village, not being a co-sharer, is entitled to sell the site of his house must prove his case by weighty evidence. In the case before me, it appears that the village Pandauli is a very big one and is also a very ancient one. The wajib-ul-arz of the year 1867, a copy of which is on the record, shows that the tradition is that the village was founded 500 years ago. The learned Pleader for the plaintiffs, in the Court of first instance, admitted that the village had a population of about 1,300 souls, out of whom 300 to 400 persons were not agriculturists. The wajib-ul-arz also gives a list of the several professions held by the residents of the village. This list will show that many of the residents were not agriculturists.

It cannot then be contended that all the residents of the village, who are not co-sharers, were there in the village for the purpose of cultivating the zemindar's lands and were, therefore, settled in the village for the benefit of the land-holders. There is a provision in para. 15 of the wajib-ul-arz and it throws some light on the question now before me. It lays down that subsequent to the drawing up of the wajib-ul-arz whoever would want to reside in the village must obtain permission from the landlords for the purpose. It is silent as to what are the rights of the villagers who had already been residing in the village from before the preparation of the wajib-ul-arz.

In this state of things we have to consider the evidence adduced on behalf of the appellants. They have produced no less than 19 sale-deeds, registered and unregistered, by which the residents of the village not being co-sharers, have sold their houses, sites and materials to co-sharers and non-co-sharers and in virtue of which purchasers have occupied houses along with the sites. The learned Judge of the Court below has remarked that only in one case the site is specifically mentioned. But there would be a clear difference between the language of sale-deed of a house in its entirety and that of the sale-deed of mere materials of a house, which the purchaser would remove, as soon as the sale is completed. I have heard most of the sale-deeds and I am clearly of opinion that they purported to transfer not only the materials but also the sites. The houses were described as "owned and possessed" by the vendors and they were sold as the absolute property of the transferrors. These sale deeds range from 1872 to 1920. Only three of these sale deeds are less than 12 years old. Not a single instance has been cited in which these sales were ever questioned.

In addition to the sale-deeds no less than seven witnesses have been examined to prove the so-called custom and three of these are co-sharers in the village. The co-sharers are Ahmad Ali aged 65, Abdul Karim aged 45 and Abdul aged 45. The witness Ismail once owned a share in the village. All these witnesses have sworn that they themselves have purchased houses owned and occupied by the ryots and that they have continued to be in possession of the properties purchased.

On behalf of the plaintiffs not a scrap of evidence has been adduced to explain such a heavy body of transactions and evidence adduced on behalf of the appellants.

Having regard to the history of the village, in my opinion, the evidence is overwhelming to establish the appellants' contention that the occupiers of the village sites are entitled to sell the houses as they stand, viz., the material and the site.

It has nowhere been alleged that the vendors' predecessor-in-title occupied the village after the wajib-ul-arz of 1867 had been framed. No special tenancy subsequent to the wajib-ul-arz has been proved. Indeed, para. 2 of the plaint would indicate that the ancestor of the appellant No. 4 was an ancient resident of the village.

I accordingly allow the appeal, set aside the decree of the lower Court and restore the decree of the Court of first instance, dismissing the suit. The appellants will have their costs in this Court and in the Court below. The Counsel's fees in the Court will be calculated on the higher scale.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 24 (2)—Examination of debtor, absence of—Burden of proof—Adjudication—Petition, whether can be based on debt to which creditor is entitled along with others—Bond executed by debtor along with others, whether can form basis of petition—Suit to enforce bond, pendency of, effect of.

One of several persons who is entitled to the benefit of a decree is not entitled to utilize the decretal debt so as to found upon it a petition for adjudication against the judgment-debtor. [p. 751, col. 2.]

A bond upon which a debtor is jointly and severally liable along with other persons is sufficient to support a petition for adjudication. It is immaterial that the petitioning creditor may not be absolutely entitled to all the money secured by the bond, it is enough that the bond is in his favour. [p. 752, col. 1.]

The fact that a suit has been commenced to enforce the bond is not necessarily a bar to a petition for adjudication based on the bond. [ibid.]

The provisions of sub-s. (2) of s. 24 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, with regard to the examination of the debtor are mandatory, but are applicable only to a case where the debtor is present. Where a debtor alleges a contravention of the provisions of the sub-section the onus is on him to show that he was present in Court at the time of the hearing of the petition. [p. 752, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

IN M. A. NOS. 354 AND 355 OF 1924.

These two appeals are really covered by the same state of facts. The appeal that has been argued before us is Appeal No. 354 but the judgment which I am about to deliver will apply equally to Appeal No. 355.

The appeal is against an order of adjudication passed by the District Judge of Faridpur on the 13th August 1924. A petition was presented by the respondent in respect of two debts, first of all, a decree for Rs. 5,700 which was a consent-decree passed on the 11th January 1923 and secondly, an instalment bond for Rs. 6,400 dated the 24th January 1923. The acts of insolvency alleged in the petition were the removal of articles from the debtor's house so as to protect them from the creditors and secondly, the transfer of immoveable properties by the debtors to some other person who was a relative of the debtor's wife within two or three days of the presentation of the petition. The Court has found the debts established and the acts of insolvency proved and has made the adjudication order.

The first point urged before us in this appeal was with regard to the decree for Rs. 5,700. This was passed in favour of the present petitioner and other persons and accordingly it is said that as the petitioner is only entitled along with others to the benefit of the decree he alone cannot present an insolvency petition in respect of this decree. Secondly, it is urged that so far as the instalment bond is concerned the debtor is only a partner with a very small share in the Firm of Guru Charan Judhistir and that he really cannot be taken to be liable for the whole of the instalment bond and it is further urged that portions of the instalment bond, if not the whole, have already been paid and that a suit has been commenced to enforce the instalment bond. For these reasons, it is urged that there is no proper debt which would support the petition and that even if this is not so the petition was not presented bona fide but for ulterior purposes. So far as the decree for Rs. 5,700 is concerned I am inclined to think that the point is a good one and that as the respondent is not the only person entitled to the benefit of that decree he is not entitled to utilize this debt upon which to found a petition for adjudication. But this is not a question of any importance because it seems to me that the bond for

Rs. 6,400 is amply sufficient to support the petition. It is a bond executed by the debtors and others in favour of the petitioning creditor. It is a bond upon which the defendant is jointly and severally liable with the other persons by whom it was given and consequently, in my opinion, it is sufficient to support the petition for adjudication. It does not matter that the respondent may not be absolutely entitled to all the money secured by the bond, it is enough that the bond is in his favour. It is no answer to say that the debtor's share in the firm is a small one. He elected to give this bond upon which he is liable and he must bear the consequence and I am not prepared to say upon the evidence that the petition was presented with an ulterior motive. It is true that some of the persons who gave the bond are relatives of the petitioning creditor and that he is not proceeding against them but I do not think that this is sufficient by itself to establish a lack of bona fides on the part of the petitioning creditor.

As regards the suit this was not commenced until after the petition and need not, therefore, be taken into account. Even if it is necessary to consider it, if the debt of Rs. 6,400 is sufficiently established, I do not think that the fact that a suit had been commenced to enforce the bond is necessarily a bar to the petition for adjudication based on that debt. So much, therefore, for the bond.

So far as the acts of insolvency are concerned, we were referred to the evidence and were asked to say that we should not accept the evidence with regard to the removal of the articles. The learned Judge has accepted this evidence and the evidence read to us does not cause to doubt the correctness of the conclusion at which the Judge has arrived.

As to the transfer of the immoveables it is suggested that the transfer was made in favour of the person to whom the property was transferred not with a view to protect the property from the creditors but with a view to the transferee paying off the debts to the creditor on the debtor's account and holding the property as security. The learned Judge has disbelieved this story. The result is that there is a debt sufficient to support the petition and the acts of insolvency are to my mind established.

Various other minor points were urged, and amongst them is the fact that the debtor was not examined under the provisions of s. 24, sub-s. (2) of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The provisions of sub-s. (2) are mandatory but that depends upon the debtor being present and in this case there is no evidence before us to show that he was present in Court at the time of the hearing of the petition. The burden was on the debtor to show that he was there and as he has failed to discharge this burden there is nothing in this point, and I reserve my opinion as to whether even if the debtor was present the failure to examine him will necessarily vitiate the order for adjudication.

Then it is said that the debtor could pay his debts and we were referred to the valuation made by the Receiver of his property. The short answer to this is that the debtor has not paid his debts or made any attempt to do so and we do not think that it has been established that the debtor is in a position to pay his debts.

Then it is said that the amount which the debtor has to pay has not been established and that he has been placed in a difficulty thereby. I am not satisfied that this is so. I think that at any rate he is bound to pay the amount of the instalment bond or at any rate such amount as remains due thereon and I have no doubt that there will be no practical difficulty if the debtor were really willing to pay this amount. This I think disposes of all the points, that were raised and we see no reason to alter or set aside the order for adjudication which has been passed by the District Judge.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs. Hearing-fee, two gold mohurs, to be realized in the Court of Insolvency at Faridpur out of the debtor's assets.

IN M. A. No. 361 OF 1924.

We think that the learned Judge was right in the order that he made and this appeal is accordingly dismissed.

We make no order as to costs.

Landlord and tenant—Suit for ascertainment of fair and equitable rent and for recovery of arrears of rent—Plea of jus tertii —Previous suit between landlord and third person under whom tenant claims, decision in—Res judicata—Cause of action, accrual of.

A certain taluk was sold for arrears of revenue and was purchased by the plaintiff. Some years afterwards the plaintiff brought a suit for possession of the lands in dispute against the owner of a neighbouring taluk and obtained a decree in execution of which he obtained symbolical possession of the lands. Subsequently he brought a suit against the defendants for ascertainment of fair and equitable rent and for recovery of arrears of rent. The defendants denied the title of the plaintiff and also denied the existence of the relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and themselves, alleging that the land belonged to the owner of the neighbouring taluk, against whom the plaintiff had already obtained a decree:

Held, (1) that the decision in the previous suit, irrespective of the fact whether it operated as res judicata against the defendants or not, was a strong piece of evidence as against the defendants on the question as to who was entitled to recover rent from them; [p. 754, col. 2.]

(2) that the plaintiff's cause of action as against the defendants arose when he took delivery of possession in execution of the decree obtained in the previous suit and thus became entitled to receive rent. [p. 754, col. 2; p. 755, col. 1.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 6th September 1921, modifying that of the Munsif, First Court at Lakhipur, dated the 27th of June 1919.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The suit out of which this appeal arises was brought by the Receiver of the estate of Khitish Chandra Acharjee Choudhury for ascertainment of fair and equitable rent under s. 157, Bengal Tenancy Act, in respect of lands in occupation of the defendants and for recovery of arrears of such rent from 1320 to the third quarter of 1323 B. S. with damages. The defence was that the land in suit did not belong to the plaintiff's taluk but was a part of a neighbourig taluk owned by one Radharaman Nag and others and that the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 had taken putni settlement of it from the Nags in 1879. The main defence, therefore, was that there was no relationship of landlord and tenant between the plaintiff and the defendants. The Court of first instance found that the land, as a matter of fact, belonged to the plaintiff's taluks, but as the defendants had set up their right as tenure-holders adversely to the plaintiff for more than 12 years, they had acquired the limited interest of a tenure-holder in the lands and assessed rent as against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 only and dismissed the plaintiff's claim against the other defendants. On appeal by the plaintiff and cross-appeal by the defendants the learned Additional District Judge decreed the plaintiff's suit with some modifications. The defendants Nos. 1 to 4 who may be described as the principal defendants and defendants Nos. 5, 6, 10, 11, 12, 24 and 49 contend that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is wrong on the following grounds: first, that the suit should have been dismissed as the plaintiff failed to prove his title to the lands in suit. This ground is directed against the finding of the learned Judge that the lands belonged to the plaintiff's taluk. The fact is that there are two adjacent taluks one called Gangamala and the other known as Taluk No. 190. Taluk Gangamala was sold for arrears of revenue and purchased by the plaintiff in 1883. In 1895 the plaintiff brought a suit for possession of the lands in suit against the owner of Taluk No. 190. On the 9th May 1902 that suit was finally decreed by the High Court. On the 30th January 1905 plaintiff obtained delivery of symbolical possession through Court and brought the present suit on the 18th January 1917. Both the Courts below have relied on the decision of the suit brought by the plaintiff against the Nags who were the owners of Taluk No. 190. The decree in that suit decided finally as between the plaintiff and the Nags that the lands in suit belonged to the plaintiff's Taluk Gangamala. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the decision in that suit cannot in law operate as res judicata against the defendants and, therefore, the plaintiff is bound to prove his title independently of the decision in the previous suit. In support of this contention reliance has been placed upon the cases of Niaz-ullah Khan v. Nazir Begam (1) and Shib Chandra Roy Chowdhury v. Harendra Lal Rai Chowdhury (2). The Allahabad case has no bearing on the present question as it was a case of assignment and not a lease. The decision in the case of Shib Chandra Roy Chowdhury v. Harendra Lal Rai Chowdhury (2) contains some observations based on the doctrine of representations holding that in the case of a permanent tenure-holder the landlord does not represent the tenant so as a decree against the former would estop the latter. That decision is based on the case of Seshappaya v. Venkatramana Upadya (3) which holds that a decision for or against a superior landlord does not operate as res judicata against a tenant holding a permanent subordinate interest. In the view we take of the findings of the Courts below on this point, we are relieved of the necessity of examining the ratio of these decisions. But were it necessary to do so, we would feel considerable hesitation in following them without a word of protest. See Asghar Reza Khan v. Mahomed Mehdi Hossein Khan (4). Even if it is conceded that the decision in the suit brought by the plaintiff against the Nags will not operate as res judicata (it does not appear that the Courts below used it as such), there can be little doubt that it is a strong piece of evidence as to whom the rent is payable. The plaintiff brought a suit for establishment of title and possession as zemindar against the Nags from whom the defendants had obtained their alleged settlement. The question relating to the nature of the defendant's settlement was outside the scope of that suit and the only issue on which the parties went to trial was as to who was the owner of the lands in suit; or, if there were tenants on the land, who was entitled to receive rent from the tenants. The result of the defendant's lessor having lost the suit was to transfer the right of receiving rent from the Nags to the plaintiff. The defendants cannot aver that they are not liable to pay rent to any one. In fact, their case is that they hold a subordinate interest and they are liable to pay rent for the putni to whoever it belongs. If the plaintiff was not entitled to recover rent from them the Nags must be so entitled. But it was decided as between the plaintiff and the Nags that the Nags were not entitled to receive rent. The decision, therefore, in that suit is a good piece of evidence as against the tenants on the question as to who is entitled to recover rent from them. It having been found in that suit that the land in dispute did not belong to the Nags who had, therefore, no right to settle it with the defendants, the defendants cannot claim to be permanent tenure-holders. Hence the theory of representation, or the absence of it, on which Shib Chandra Roy Choudhury's case proceeds does not apply to the present case.

There is another piece of important evidence in support of the plaintiff's case and that is the Record of Rights produced and proved on behalf of the defendants. The Record of Rights shows that the lands in suit belong to the plaintiff's Taluk Gangamala. There is nothing to rebut the presumption of the correctness of the entry and the Court was justified in coming to the conclusion that the plaintiff was the owner of the lands in suit.

The second point raised by the appellants (defendants Nos. 1 to 4) is that the plaintiff's suit for possession was barred by limitation and, therefore, his suit for assessment of fair and equitable rent is also barred. This objection is based on the fact that the plaintiff bought this property in 1883 and did not bring a suit for possession against the defendants till 1917. But it overlooks the fact that the plaintiff could not bring a suit for assessment of rent against the defendants who are the tenants before they could establish their right against the persons from whom they derived their title. Plaintiff accordingly brought a suit against the defendant's lessor and having succeeded in that suit he took symbolical possession of the lands in suit within 12 years before the institution of the present suit. The plaintiff's cause of action as against the defendants, therefore, arose when he took delivery of possession and became entitled to receive rent. He could not sue the defendants in ejectment because the defendants were tenants on the land either as tenure-holders or as occupancy raiyats as found by the lower Appellate Court. This objection, therefore, fails.

The third contention raised by the appellants (defendants Nos. 1 to 4) is that they asserted their putni right in these lands from 1879 the date on which the putni lease was granted by the Nags in their favour and, therefore, they have acquired the interest of a putnidar in the land in suit. This contention also has no substance. The defendants did not hold the putni adversely to the plaintiff from 1879 because the plaintiff had no title in the lands then. They were holding the lands under a lease from the Nags who had set themselves up as the owners of the land. There is no finding by the learned Additional District Judge as to when the plaintiff came to know of the defendant's alleged assertion of putni interest; but he observes that the fact that they held the land in suit in putni did not come to the knowledge of the plaintiff before he instituted the suit in 1895 and that the plaintiff had no right to take possession of the disputed land or to claim rent from the tenants so long as he did not get delivery of possession as against the Nags. It may, therefore, be taken at the best in favour of the defendants that they were holding adversely to the plaintiff from the date from which the plaintiff's right to sue for possession or rent accrued, namely, the 30th January 1905 when he obtained symbolical possession and the right to recover rent from the defendants. Then again the Record of Rights filed by the defendants show that they are entered there as tenure-holders whose rent was liable to be assessed. Their right, therefore, as putnidars was not admitted at the time of the publication of the Record of Rights and it cannot, therefore, be said that they held such right adversely to the plaintiff when he became entitled to possession. It is not found by any of the Courts below that the presumption raised by this entry in the Record of Rights was in any way rebutted by the defendants.

The last point urged on behalf of the appellants is that the decree for assessment of rent should have been passed against defendants Nos. 1 to 4 alone and it should have been held that as the other defendants are holding under defendants Nos. 1 to 4 they are not liable to pay rent directly to the plaintiff. On this point the learned Additional Judge observes that the other defendants set up the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 as their landlords. He finds that defendants Nos. 1 to 4 are merely occupancy raiyats they being in actual occupation of some portion of the disputed land for a long time. He accordingly considers that the other defendants holding likewise had the same status as defendants Nos. 1 to 4.

The case of all the defendants is that defendants Nos. 1 to 4 were tenure-holders and as such had settled the lands with the other defendants. The claim of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 that they were tenure-holders has not been established. The position of the other defendants, therefore, is that they were brought on the land by persons having no title or authority, but as they have been in possession of the land for a long time they have acquired right of occupancy in it. The occupancy right to which the defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have been found to be entitled is only in respect of the portion of the land in suit of which they are in actual possession. It was not claimed and it cannot be extended over other portions of the land in suit of which the other defendants are in possession. The result of the finding on the other issues is that the plaintiff's title to the land in suit unencumbered by the alleged claim of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 as holders of an intermediate interest has been established, thus creating a direct relation between the plaintiff and the occupants of the land, the other defendants. In this view the decree passed by the Court of Appeal below is correct and should be maintained and this objection overruled.

All the points taken on behalf of the appellants failed and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 55—Sale of immoveable property—Encumbrance, existence of, not disclosed—Purchaser compelled to pay amount of encumbrance, whether can recover from vendor.

If, when an immoveable property is sold, the vendor does not disclose an encumbrance on the property and subsequently the vendee has to pay off the encumbrance to save the property from sale in execution of encumbrancer's decree, there is a breach of warranty of title and possession and the vendee is entitled to recover from the vendor the amount paid by him.

Civil revision against an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Aligarh, dated the 15th September 1924.

Mr. Panna Lal, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise a judgment of a learned Judge of the Small Cause Court.

It appears that the applicant who was the plaintiff in the Court below purchased a house from the respondent. The respondent assured the applicant that there was but only one encumbrance over the property. It, however, turned out that one Hazari Lal also held a simple mortgage over the property. Hazari Lal brought a suit on the mortgage and obtained a decree for sale. The applicant as the purchaser of the property to save it had to pay a sum of Rs. 170 and she sued the respondent to make her good this amount.

The learned Judge of the Court below dismissed the suit on the ground that the parties had express stipulations for compensation and as the case did not fall within those express stipulations the suit could not be maintained.

I am afraid the learned Judge has entirely misread and misunderstood the ruling he purported to follow. The ruling is the case of Ram Chandar v. Bhagwati (1). It was held that where in the place of a particular statutory contract parties substitute a contract of their own they must be guided by their own contract and a party to it cannot rely on the statutory one. In that case, as in this there was a previous encumbrance which had not been disclosed. But in the case of Ram Chander v. Bhagwati (1) the parties had stipulated for the express case in which a prior encumbrance might turn out to exist. In the case before me there was no stipulation whatsoever as to what was going to happen in case a previous encumbrance, not contemplated by the parties, happened to exist. The two stipulations relied upon by the respondent relate to warranty of title and warranty of possession and nothing beyond that. In the circumstances the plaintiff ought to have succeeded.

I allow the application, set aside the decree of the Court below and remand it for disposal of the remaining issue. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 11—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 60, O. XXXVIII, r. 9—Attachment before judgment—Claim, dismissal of—Dismissal of suit, effect of—Appeal—Reversal of dismissal—Attachment—Fresh claim—Title suit—Limitation.

It is obligatory upon the Court to withdraw an attachment before judgment upon the dismissal of a suit, and the reversal of the judgment of dismissal on appeal does not operate to revive the cancelled attachment. [p. 757, col 2.]

Protap Chandra Gope v. Sarat Chandra Gangopadhya, 62 Ind. Cas. 348; 33 C. L. J. 201; 25 C. W. N. 544, Sasirama Kumari v. Meherban Khan, 9 Ind. Cas. 918; 13 C. L. J. 243 and Abdur Rahaman v. Amir Sharif, 44 Ind. Cas. 229; 22 C. W. N. 927; 45 C. 780, followed.

Certain property was attached before judgment, and the plaintiff put in a claim under O. XXI, r. 60 of the C. P. C. which was disallowed. The claim under which the attachment was made was subsequently dismissed but was decreed in appeal. Defendants, who were the decree-holders, thereupon again attached the property which had been attached before judgment and the plaintiff put in another claim against the attachment. That claim was also disallowed and within one year of the order disallowing the claim but after more than one year of the date of the previous order by which the plaintiff's claim was disallowed, the plaintiff brought a suit for declaration of his title to the property in dispute :

Held, that the attachment before judgment disappeared as soon as the claim was dismissed and that the reversal of the order of dismissal on appeal did not revive the attachment, and that when in the execution proceedings started after the decree of the Appellate Court a fresh attachment was effected the plaintiff had a right to prefer a fresh claim, on the dismissal of which he was entitled to bring a suit for declaration and that his present suit was, therefore, not barred under Art. 11 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 758, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—The question raised in this appeal is whether the suit is barred by the rule of one year's limitation as provided for in Art. 11 of the First Schedule of the Limitation Act. The plaintiff's suit for declaration of his title to certain immoveable property was dismissed by both the Courts below and the present second appeal is by the plaintiff against the decree of the Subordinate Judge of the Fifth Court of Dacca, affirming the decision of the Munsif, Second Additional Court of that district. The facts which are necessary for the purpose of this appeal shortly stated are these. Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 obtained a decree for possession of certain immoveable property and also a decree for mesne profits to be determined in execution proceedings against the predecessors of defendants Nos. 5 and 6. Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 applied for execution of their decree and amongst other things prayed for ascertainment of mesne profits and obtained an order for attachment of the land in suit before judgment ascertaining mesne profits. The plaintiff put in a claim under O. XXI, r. 60 of the C. P. C. The claim was disallowed on the 28th February 1914. It appears that the execution proceedings were dismissed disallowing the claim for mesne profits on the 22nd of January 1915. It also appears that the execution proceedings were revived on appeal in 1918, the Appellate Court holding that the order disallowing the execution was erroneous. Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 after they had obtained a decree for mesne profits attached the same property again in the year 1921. The plaintiff put in another claim against the attachment. That claim was disallowed on the 2nd of August 1921, and the present suit was instituted by the plaintiff on the 3rd of August 1921 for declaration of his title to the property to which his claim had been dismissed. The defendants amongst other pleas contended that the suit not having been brought within one year from the 28th February 1914, was barred by limitation. The plaintiff, on the other hand, contended that the present suit was brought well within one year from the date of disallowance of his present claim. Both the Courts below have held that the suit, as it was not brought within one year from the 28th of February 1914, was barred.

In this appeal it was contended by the learned Vakil for the appellant that the Courts below were in error in holding that the present suit was barred by limitation. It was urged by the learned Vakil that the effect of dismissal of the execution proceedings on the 22nd January 1915, put an end to the attachment before judgment under the provisions of O. XXXVIII, r. 9.

It is unnecessary to discuss the point at any length, as it is covered by the direct authority which discussed the effect of dismissal of a claim in which an attachment before judgment was obtained. In the case of Protap Chandra Gope v. Sarat Chandra Gangopadhya (1) after reviewing all the previous authorities and the provisions of the Code, Sir Ashutosh Mookerjee, the Acting Chief Justice at page 206* states as follows : " We arenot unmindful that a different rule has been adopted with regard to attachments before judgment. There the view has prevailed that it is obligatory upon the Court to withdraw an attachment before judgment upon the dismissal of the suit and the reversal of the judgment of dismissal on appeal does not operate to revive an attachment which has been cancelled. As explained in the case of Sasirama Kumari v. Meherban Khan (2) this result follows from the provisions of O. XXXVIII, r. 9 which directs the withdrawal of attachment on dismissal of the suit and contains no provision which makes such withdrawal temporary and liable to be vacated on reversal of the decree of dismissal." This view of the law is also supported by the cases Abdur Rahaman v. Amir Sharif (3) and Sasirama Kumari v. Meherban Khan (2). In this view of the law it is clear that the attachment which was put upon the property on the 28th February 1914, disappeared as soon as the claim for mesne profits was dismissed on the 22nd January 1915. The reversal of the order of the 22nd January 1915 on appeal did not revive the attachment. When in the execution proceedings of 1921 a fresh attachment was effected the plaintiff had a right to prefer a fresh claim which was dismissed on the 2nd August 1921 and the period of one year should be counted from that date.

(1) 62 Ind. Cas. 348; 33 C. L. J. 201; 25 C. W. N. 514.

We, therefore, think that the judgments and decrees of the Courts below are wrong and should be set aside and the case is accordingly remanded to the First Court for a re-trial on the merits. The appellants will be entitled to their costs here and the costs of the Courts below are to abide the result of the suit.

A zemindar holding under the Permanent Settlement has a right from time to time to raise the rent of all rent-paying lands within his zemindari at the current rate, unless he is precluded from the exercise of that right by a contract binding on him or by the law in force. [p. 759, col. 1.]

A contract in one case should not be interpreted in the light of the view taken with regard to another contract which is differently worded and under consideration in another case [p. 759, col. 2.]

A nimhowla pattah contained the following clause: "When Survey and jamabandi are made in respect of (the lands of) the other howladars and nimhowladars of the said tappa, the nimhowla will be measured and you will get reduction of proportionate area (jigha rakba) according to the practice in respect of the other nimhowladars, and upon bandobast (Settlement) according to the rates paid for other nimhowlas. If the rent is greater you will pay the same into my office, and if it is less you will get reduction." The parties treated the pattah for a long period of time as creating a tenure the rent of which was not liable to enhancement:

Held, that the terms of the lease were ambiguous and that as the conduct of the parties showed that they had been understood by the parties as creating a tenure of which the rent could not be enhanced, the rent of the tenure was not liable to enhancement. [p. 760, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The main and substantial ground on which this appeal has been pressed is that the finding of the lower Appellate Court that the pattah in suit created a tenure the rent of which was not liable to enhancement is not correct. The tenure, it appears, was created by the pattah dated the 30th December 1885. It was a nimhowla pattah granted by Rajlakshi Debya (who was the howladar) to the predecessor of the defendants. It begins with the following words "There was my husband's permission to grant to you nimhowladari pattah in respect of the entire lands and jamas comprised in the said howla at a profit of Rs. 75." Then follow some words which it is not material to quote and then it proceeds to run as follows: "I grant to you a nimholadari pattah in respect of the entire lands and jamas of the said howla. You shall without objection pay into my office Rs. 102-7-6 being the rent for the howla and Rs. 75 being the amount of my profits the total amount being Company's Rs. 177-7-6 year by year and month by month according to the kists mentioned below." This is followed by the usual recitals in a document of this description with regard to the mode of possession and other matters. The last clause is in the following words: "When Survey and jamabandi are made in respect of (the lands of) the other howladars and nimhowaldars of the said tappa, the nimhowla will be measured and you will get reduction of proportionate area (jigba rakba) according to the practice in respect of the other nimhowladars, and upon bundobast (Settlement) according to the rates paid for other nimhowlas. If the rent is greater you will pay the same into my office, and if it is less you will get reduction." The learned Subordinate Judge in the Court of Appeal below construing this document with certain other documents executed since its creation has come to the conclusion that the tenure created by this pattah was one at a fixed rent and consequently dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

It is argued before us by the learned Vakil for the appellant that this pottah should be read as not interfering with the general right which a zemindar possesses of enhancing the rent of his subordinate tenure-holders. The proposition of law that the zemindar holding under the Permanent Settlement has a right from time to time to raise the rent of all rent paying lands within his zemindari according to the current rate unless he is precluded from the exercise of that right by a contract binding on him or by the law in force is unquestionably correct. See the cases of Bamasoondery Dassyah v. Radhika Chowdhrain (1) and Nirod Chandra Singha Sarma v. Harihar Chakravarti Chowdhury (2). That being so, the only question that remains for consideration is whether the contract embodied in this pattah precluded the zemindar from exercising that general right which he has of enhancing the rent of lands of his zemindari. The learned Vakil for the appellant has strenuously argued that as there are no words in the contract curtailing or barring the right of the zemindar to enhance the rent of the lands within his zemindari, it must be held that the tenure created under the pattah was one the rent of which was liable to be enhanced. In fact the learned Vakil has gone so far as to argue that unless any express words are to be found in a document evidencing a contract debarring the lessor from claiming enhancement of rent in future, it must be held that the tenancy is one in which the rent is liable to be enhanced; and in support of this view reliance has been placed upon the case of Taruck Chander Nundee v. Madhoo Soodan Nandee (3). We do not think that the case carries us so far. In all the cases that have been placed before us attempts have been made to construe the particular contracts invovled in them and it does not seem to be proper that a contract in one case should be interpreted in the view taken with regard to another contract which is differently worded and under consideration in another case. In the case of Taruck Chandra Nandy v. Madhoo Soodan Nandy (3) the learned Judges found that the pattah was a mourashi pattah but the rent fixed in the lease did not appear to have been fixed and invariable, and they remarked as follows: "There are not in it any such words as these: 'that the rent shall not hereafter be altered or increased.'" It is not laid down that these words are necessary in order to establish fixity of rent. In the case of Ramdayal Giri v. Midnapore Zemindari Co. Ltd. (4) the learned Judges observe at page 265* of the report as follows: "It is true there are in the leases no words which by themselves would bar an enhancement such as are used in formal leases in other parts of the country. But there is the contract of the parties.....". We, therefore, consider ourselves relieved from looking for any expression or word in the document fixing the rent in perpetuity.

We are next called upon to consider the general effect of the document. The learned Advocates for the respondents have argued that the contract is plain enough and gives sufficient indication that what the parties intended was that it should be a mourashi mokarari lease. The words, no doubt, lead to a conclusion very much akin to what is contended for by the respondents. The pattah states that the lease was granted by the lessor and according to the wishes of her husband she reserved for herself a profit of Rs. 75 only. The last clause mentions the circumstances in which the rent can be varied so that it may be reduced or increased according as on the Survey of the lands of the other howlas and nimhowlas the assets are found to be less or more than the present and fresh Settlements made according to the rates paid for by other nimhowladars. This contingency has not arisen and it is not necessary, therefore, to consider what would have happened if it arose. But the fact remains that the term of the lease as to enhancement of rent is restricted to the one condition mentioned in it, namely, when the Survey and jamabandi are made in respect of lands of other howlas and nimhowlas of the same tappa. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that it cannot be maintained that because one circumstance is mentioned in which the rent can be varied it cannot be varied under any other circumstance. On the other hand the respondents contend on the doctrine of expressio unius est exclusio alterius that the mention of one condition restricts the power of the landlord to vary the rent only to the happening of that event. We are unable to give effect to the contentions of either side on the mere construction of the pattah before us. We are, therefore, constrained to hold that the lease is not unambiguous in its terms and the interpretations which the parties attempt to put upon it are not without some force. The lease, therefore, being ambiguous in its terms, it is necessary to look as to how it was understood by the parties. The facts are that since its creation in 1855 there has been no variation of rent up to the present time, i. e., for about 70 years and that the nimhowla in suit was described as a mortgage-bond executed by the nimhowladar in favour of the plaintiffs themselves in 1898 as well as in the kobala executed by them in favour of a predecessor of the defendants in 1902. It is also in evidence that the plaintiffs themselves described the nimhowla in suit as a mokarari jama in the plaint filed by them in the suit on the aforesaid mortgage of 1898. These facts were considered by the lower Appellate Court and it came to the conclusion that the lease was a mourashi mokarari lease. The finding thus arrived at by the lower Appellate Court is in the nature of a finding of fact. We think that the conclusion arrived at by the Court of Appeal below was correct and that the lease must be taken to be permanent in character with the rent fixed. In the view that we take of this question it is not necessary to consider the other question raised in the appeal with regard to the procedure adopted in fixing the enhanced rent or to the inapplicability of s. 7 of the Bengal Tenancy Act to the facts of the present case as was contended for by the respondents.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed with costs to the two sets of respondents.

ORIGINAL SIDE APPEAL No. 87 OF 1922.

August 27, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Charles Gordon Spencer, Officiating Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Srinivasa Iyengar.

P. KANAKASABAPATHY MUDALIAR —APPELLANT

versus

V. Hajee OOSMAN SAHIB AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Gift—Muhammadan Law - Bonus to employee—Entry in account books, effect of—Contract - Implied consideration.

Plaintiff, a godown keeper in the employ of a Muhammadan firm, was credited with a bonus of a sum of money out of the profits of the firm in consideration of the good services rendered by him and of the profits made by the firm. Plaintiff alleged that the bonus was carried to his credit in the firm's books some years before and that in the following year he was allowed to draw out a portion of it, but that the defendant firm had since refused in spite of his demand to pay the balance:

Held, that on the facts stated the plaint disclosed a cause of action; there was a completed gift and a transfer of ownership in favour of the plaintiff; and, if ownership in the bonus was completely transferred and there was more than a mere promise without consideration to give the plaintiff a bonus, it was im-material that the amount was originally of the nature of a bonus. [p. 762, col. 2.]

Per Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—It is well-known that apart altogether from the salary paid to the servants in Muhammadan firms the expectation is held out to them according to practice, that, if they should render exceptionally good service during the period of the settlement, they would be rewarded at the time of the settlement by the grant of a substantial bonus. If, in these circumstances, the servants put forth extra work which the masters find satisfactory and, in consideration thereof, a bonus is promised to them, it is really in law a promise for past consideration which is good under the Indian Law; and even apart altogether from any question of gift completed or not, the servant has a case on the footing of a contract which is clearly sustainable. [p. 763, col. 1.]

Appeal from the judgment of Mr. Justice Coutts Trotter, dated the 2nd of August 1922, and passed in the exercise of the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the High Court and made in C. S. No. 917 of 1920.

ARGUMENT.—Mr. C. S. Nageswara Iyer, for the Appellant:—The learned Judge is wrong in dismissing the suit in demurrer. The plaintiff has been given bonus in previous years and the same understanding must be held to have continued during the suit period. The accounts will show the sum due to the plaintiff and credited in his name. The plaintiff has also been operating upon the same by making occasional withdrawals. The defendants are in the position of trustees. Vide Sir Jamsetji Jijibhai v. Sona Bai (1). The same principle was followed in Bai Mahakore v. Bai Mangla (2). The plaintiff has been doing exceptionally good service to the defendant firm and this is the implied contract that if the plaintiff would do good service he would be entitled to bonus. Sabjan Sahib v. Abdul Azeez Sahib (3).

Mr. A. Srirangachari (with him Messrs. R. Purushothama Iyengar and N. M. Prasad), for the Respondents:—The plaint does not disclose any cause of action. Admittedly the amount claimed is a bonus and so there was no legal obligation on the part of the defendant to pay any amount to the plaintiff. No legal claim can be made to any bonus. It has been held that if cheques had been drawn in favour of the employee, the payment may be directed to be withheld. Vide Natha Gulab & Co. v. Shallar and G. I. P. Ry., (4) and Janki Das v. The East Indian Railway Co. (5). There is no allegation that the character of the amount was anything but a bonus. The mere fact that the amount has been credited in plaintiff's name cannot constitute a payment to the plaintiff. The same is decided in the very case cited by the appellant [vide the observation of Abdur Rahim, J., in Sabjan Sahib v. Abdul Azeez Sahib (3).] See also Re Glover (6). To constitute a valid gift, the property being moveable there must be actual delivery (s. 123, Transfer of Property Act). Here the amount has not been paid over to the plaintiff nor have the defendants done all they can to put the amount in plaintiff's possession; Ramamirtha Ayyan v. Gopala Ayyan (7). Even delivery of pro-note without endorsement is no good: Akhoy Kumar Pal v. Hari Das Basak (8). The defendants cannot be deemed to have been trustees. There has been no declaration on their part as required by the Trusts Act that they have constituted themselves as such. Bai Mahakore v. Bai Mangla (2) does not apply as the decision there turned upon the construction of the document which constituted the parties as trustees. An incomplete gift cannot be converted into a valid trust. Manchershaw v. Ardeshir (9). The plaintiff has not been operating upon the amount to his credit as of right. The defendants have stated in their written statement that they did not pay the amount as they were displeased with plaintiff's conduct and their discretion cannot be questioned by the Court.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, Offg. C. J.—This suit was dismissed upon a demurrer, as the learned Judge was of opinion that the plaint disclosed no cause of action. No evidence was taken on either side. From the allegations in the plaint, it appears that the plaintiff, a godown keeper in the employment of a Muhammadan firm styled Messrs. Oosman Hasan and Company, was credited with a bonus of Rs. 3,500 out of the profits of the firm in consideration of the good services rendered by him and of the fine profits made by the firm. The plaintiff alleged that this bonus was carried to his credit in the firm's books in 1919 and that in 1920 he was allowed to draw out of it Rs. 420 but that the defendants refused, in spite of his demand, to pay the balance.

The question of law is whether on the facts alleged the entry in the firm's books constituted a completed gift and whether the defendants were trustees or depositees as regards the undisbursed amount of the bonus. Section 5 of the Indian Trusts Act says: "No trust in relation to immoveable property is valid unless declared by a non-testamentary instrument in writing signed by the author of the trust.....and registered, or by the Will of the author of the trust, * * * * or unless the ownership of the property is transferred to the trustee." Section 123 of the Transfer of Property Act declares that "for the purpose of making a gift of immoveable property, the transfer may be effected either by a registered instrument signed or by delivery." The defendants' liability, therefore, turns on the question whether there was any delivery or transfer of ownership to the plaintiff.

A number of cases have been cited before us. The nearest to the facts of the present case appears to be Bai Mahakore v. Bai Mangla (2). In that case there was a credit entry made by Damodardas in his account books in the name of Harkore, his wife; Chandavarkar, J., held that this constituted a valid trust in favour of Harkore. Heaton, J. held that Damodaradas became a depositee and that the addition of interest to the deposit account and the debiting of money spent on pilgrimage was a further indication of the relations of the parties being those of depositor and depositee. In Sabjan Sahib v. Abdul Azeez Sahib (3), Abdur Rahim, J., held that a mere entry in books of account did not create a completed gift on the facts of that case and he attached much importance to the fact that Sabjan in whose name the credit stood did not draw upon the amount standing at his credit. The present case may be distinguished by the fact that there was a drawing upon the fund. In Sir Jamsetji Jijibhai v. Sona Bai (1) Couch, J., considered all the circumstances of the case as to whether there was an intention on the part of Sir Jamsetji Jijibhai to create a trust in favour of Sorabji Pestanji and, as indicating that intention, he had regard to the manner in which the money was dealt with, which was placed on the credit side of the account. He held in that case that a trust was created because there was no instance in which a sum of money had been placed on the credit side of the account in which the donor afterwards attempted to deal with the money as his own. In Natha Gulab & Co. v. Shallar and G. I. P. Railway (4) a cheque was issued and attached before it was cashed and before the remittance was made by the Bank to the payee. Similarly in Janki Das v. The East India Railway Company (5), before actual delivery took place, the bonus recommended to an employee of the Railway was attached in execution of a decree obtained against him. In the present case, there is not only the allegation that the amount of Rs. 3,500 was credited to the plaintiff in the firm's accounts, but there is the further allegation that he was allowed to operate upon this account. If the firm had paid out the bonus into the hands of the plaintiff and if the next moment he had deposited it for safe keeping with his employers, the position would have been in no way different from that disclosed by the entries as they were made. On the alleged facts which are, of course, open to be rebutted at the trial, it appears to us that there is a case of a completed gift and a transfer of ownership in favour of the plaintiff; and, if ownership in the bonus was completely transferred, and there was more than a mere promise without consideration to give the plaintiff a bonus, it is immaterial that the amount was originally of the nature of a bonus.

The case must go back for hearing evidence and disposing of it upon its merits. The defendants have since the disposal of the suit become insolvent and are now represented by the Official Assignee. The respondents must bear the costs of this appeal which will come out of the estate. The costs of the suit will abide and follow the result. The appellant will be entitled to a refund of the Court-fee on the appeal.

Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—I agree with my Lord the learned Chief Justice in the order proposed and only wish to add this. I do not at all see why the plaintiff's claim should not be deemed to be based on contract, apart from any question whatever of a contemplated gift, or a completed gift, or apart from any relationship between the parties as depositor and depositee or creditor and debtor. No doubt, if the services of the plaintiff had been rendered only for the salary stipulated, a promise of a grant of bonus to him would not be a promise for past consideration. But all those who know anything of these Muhammadan firms know that, apart altogether from the salary paid to the servants of the firm, the expectation is held out to them, according to the mamool or practice, that, if they should render exceptionally good service during the period of the settlement, they would be rewarded at the time of the settlement by the grant of a substantial bonus. If, in these circumstances, the servants put forth extra work which the masters find satisfactory and, in consideration thereof, a bonus is promised to them, it seems to me that it is really in law a promise for past consideration which is good under the Indian Law. It is for the purpose of establishing the implied agreement in such firms that, I take it, the plaintiff has referred in his plaint to the previous settlements, and to the grant of bonus to the plaintiff at those settlements, to such bonuses having been credited at every settlement to his account and to his having operated upon the amount so credited. I, therefore, consider that, even apart altogether from any question of gift completed or not, the plaintiff has a case on the footing of a contract which is clearly sustainable. The averments in the plaint are sufficient for the purpose. I, therefore, agree to the order proposed.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 31—Suit against Railway Company for compensation of non-delivery of goods—Limitation, commencement of.

On 27th July 1922, certain goods were consigned to the defendant Company for carriage and delivery to the plaintiff. On 21st August 1922, plaintiff sent his man to take delivery of the goods who paid the freight, handed over the Railway receipt and obtained permission to remove the goods. The goods could not, however, be found and the plaintiff consequently instituted a suit on 10th December 1923 for recovery of compensation for non-delivery of the goods consigned:

Held, (1) that the suit was governed by Art. 31 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act and that limitation began to run from the date when the goods ought to have been delivered; [p. 764, col. 1.]

(2) that as in this case the parties expected that the goods would be delivered on the 21st August 1922, limitation began to run from that date and the suit having been filed more than one year after that date was barred by time. [ibid.]

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore, dated the 1st of September 1924.

St. C. Thompson, for the Applicants.

Mr. Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This application in revision arises out of a suit instituted in the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore for recovery of compensation for non-delivery of goods consigned. The suit was dismissed on the ground of limitation and the question is whether the decree of the Court below was incorrect.

It appears that on the 27th of July 1922 a bale of cotton goods was consigned to the opposite parties for delivery at Cawnpore. The plaint recites that on the 21st of August 1922 the plaintiffs sent their man to take delivery of the goods who paid the freight, handed over the Railway receipt and obtained a gate-pass in order that he might remove the goods. When, however, the goods were to be actually removed they were found missing. On these allegations the suit was brought for compensation. In para. 7 of the plaint the cause of action was stated to have arisen on the 21st of August 1923.

It appears to me that this date, viz., 21st of August 1923 is merely a slip for 21st of August 1922, the date mentioned in para. 3 of the plaint. It is, however, immaterial for my purpose whether the date given in para. 7 of the plaint is the correct one or not.

It is common ground that Art. 31, Sch. I of the Limitation Act applies to the case. If that be so, the limitation begins to run from the date when goods ought to be delivered. Evidently the parties expected that the goods would be delivered on the 21st of August 1922, the date mentioned in para. 3 of the plaint. The suit was not filed till the 10th of December 1923, that is to say, some sixteen months after the date on which the parties expected the goods to be delivered. On the face of it, therefore, the suit is barred by time.

The learned Counsel for the applicants has relied on a two Judge case decided by this Court, viz. Jugal Kishore v. Great Indian Peninsula Railway (1). On the peculiar facts of that case the learned Judges of this Court held that the defendant Company had been putting off the plaintiff with assurances that they were making an enquiry for the goods and were hoping to find them and to deliver them. The learned Judges, therefore, found that they were unable to say that the goods ought to have been delivered more than one year before the institution of the suit. The case was really decided on the peculiar facts involved therein and does not lay down any general rule of law.

Mr. Thompson sought to argue that in this case also correspondence was going on between the parties and that some subordinate officers of the opposite parties were making reports to their superior officers. Most of the documents referred to by the learned Counsel are not on the record and there is nothing in the judgment of the Court below to show that the plaintiffs were being put off from seeking their remedy by suit on account of any conduct of the opposite parties. In the circumstances the plain rule of law as laid down in Art. 31 of the Limitation Act and as laid down in the two Judge case of Great Indian Peninsula Railway v. Ganpat Rai (2) applies.

The application is dismissed with costs.

THE CACHAR NATIVE JOINT STOCK COMPANY, LTD.—PLAINTIFF AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—OPPOSITE PARTIES.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXVI, r. 11—Accounts, suit for—Order for taking accounts, whether can be made before determination of defendant's liability.

The proper course in a suit for accounts is to try the suit in order to determine the liability of the defendant to render accounts and after this liability has been established to make an order for the taking of accounts. An order for taking accounts cannot be made, notwithstanding the provisions of O. XXVI, r. 11 of the C. P. C., before the liability of the defendant has been established.

Rule against an order of the Court of the Sub-Judge, Cachar (Assam), in Miscellaneous Suit No. 8 of 1920.

Sir B. C. Mitter, Mr. J. N. Mazumdar and Babus Jatindra Mohan Chowdhury and Narayan Chandra Kar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. R. Das and Babu Hemendra Kumar Das, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule obtained at the instance of one of the defendants in the suit with regard to an order that was made by the Subordinate Judge directing certain accounts to be taken by a Commissioner appointed in the suit. The suit was commenced so long ago, I think, as the year 1920 by the Company against certain of its officers including the auditor seeking to make them liable for certain loss which had been incurred by the Company which, it is alleged is owing to the defalcation of some of the officers of the Company.

The claim against the auditor at whose instance this Rule was obtained was for a specific sum of some Rs. 69,000 and before all this was established a reference was made by the Subordinate Judge to a Commissioner directing certain accounts to be taken preliminary to the hearing of the suit. The order in the form in which it had been made by the District Judge was admittedly too wide and an application with regard thereto was made before Mr. Justice Chakravarti and myself sometime in November last. The actual question that now arises before us was not so fa as I recollect raised at that time, the application being confined to the form and extent of the order which had been made. It has now been brought to our notice that the order made by the Subordinate Judge involves the taking of certain accounts before any liability has been established against the present petitioner. We think that this, on the face of it, is not warranted by the nature of the suit notwithstanding the provisions of O. XXVI, r. 11 to which we have been referred. We think the proper course for the Subordinate Judge is to try the suit in order to determine whether the petitioner is liable at all to the Company for the defalcation which has been alleged and we accordingly make the Rule absolute and we direct that the proceedings before the Commissioner shall be stayed and that the suit shall proceed in order that the liability of the various defendants to the Company may be determined if such liability in fact exists.

It is extremely unfortunate that this suit which was commenced so long, I think, as the year 1920 has not been brought to trial and in making the Rule absolute we direct that the Subordinate Judge shall take this case up within one month from date and the matter will be brought to our notice if the case is not commenced within that time with liberty to apply.

Costs-hearing-fee, five gold mohurs will be costs in the cause.

Adverse possession—Mortgagee—Equity of redemption, whether can be acquired—Physical possession, whether necessary.

A possessory title to a property can only be acquired by physical possession which ripens int ownership by the failure of the true owner to tae steps to reocver possession. [p. 766, col. 1.]

Though a trespasser by holding possession against a mortgagor can bar the mortgagor's right to redeem, it cannot be said that an equity of redemption can be acquired by adverse possession unless the person claiming adversely is in physical possession of the mortgaged property. In the case of a possessory mortgage where possession has been delivered to the mortgagee a trespasser obtaining possession may hold adversely to the mortgagee but not to the mortgagor. Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. P. B. Shingne), for the Appellant.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Mr. K. N. Koyajee), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The main facts in this appeal are common to S. A. No. 683 of 1922 and need not be set out again. The heirs of Vinayak filed the suit to recover possession of the other half of the vatan lands. After the final decree in the suit of 1896, was passed in April 1912, Vinayak obtained possession of his half share, in July 1913. In August 1915, Tarabai, in execution of her decree against Antaji dispossessed the tenants of Vinayak as well. Jankibai, widow of Vinayak's uncle sought to recover possession, but her application was rejected in 1916. After her death her grand-daughter filed this suit against Tarabai making Vinayak's grandson and nephew party defendants.

The Trial Judge held that the validity of the mortgage ceased at the death of Hanmantrao, and Parchure who was then in possession became a trespasser. But the plaintiff did not claim through Parchure and until July 1913, neither they nor their predecessors had any possession at all. From July 1913 they had only symbolical possession. As Tarabai sued Parchure for possession and was successful, plaintiff's right to possession also ceased. Consequently the suit was dismissed. The Appellate Judge agreed with this decision except that he found that the Agashes obtained possession in 1913.

In appeal before us it was argued that the Agashes had acquired a title by adverse possession to a moiety in the suit lands Now Antaji Parchure was in possession as sole mortgagee till it was declared in the suit of 1896 that the assignment of Dattaram's share in the mortgage was void, and it was further held that the mortgage had been paid off. If Antaji could have been considered as holding adversely to the next heir of Hanmantrao while holding possession as mortgagee any suggestion of that sort is put an end to,

(1) by the finding that the mortgage was paid off so that the owners of the equity of redemption became entitled to possession under their purchases;

(2) by the decision in Tarabai's suit against Antaji.

It was faintly argued that Antaji must be considered as having been in possession of half the mortgaged lands in trust for Dattaram and consequently that Dattaram had acquired some interest by adverse possession. But this was an impossible argument. There could be no question of trust while Antaji was holding under the assignment in his favour; when that was set aside he became liable to account for half the profits.

But it was argued that the Agashes had acquired a title to the equity of redemption by adverse possession. It is difficult to see how a person can be in possession of an equity of redemption adversely to the true owner. A possessory title to property can only be acquired by physical possession which ripens into ownership by the failure of the true owner to take steps to recover possession. It is true that it appears to have been considered in Putappa v. Timmaji (1) that an equity of redemption can be acquired by adverse possession, but in that case Narsibai actually delivered possession to her vendee Ramappa in 1856 and it was contended that the plaintiff's suit was barred by his adverse possession for more than twelve years, and consequently it did not become necessary to determine what right Narsibai had when she sold. In Chinto v. Janki (2), it was held that there may be possession adverse to the interest of a mortgagee which never the less is not adverse to the interest of the mortgagor: Putappa v. Timmaji (1) was considered and I think that though a trespasser by holding possession against the mortgagor can bar the mortgagor's right to redeem, it cannot be said that an equity of redemption can be acquired by adverse possession unless the person claiming is in physical possession of the mortgaged property. In the case of a possessory mortgage where possession has been delivered to the mortgagee, a trespasser obtaining possession may hold adversely to the mortgagee but not to the mortgagor. Since Tarabai must be considered as the only person with a title other than possessory to the moiety in suit she is entitled to succeed against the plaintiffs who are out of possession unless they can show not only that her rights have been extinguished but that they have already acquired a good title. But at the most they obtained possession in July 1913 and retained it for two years. It is impossible, therefore, to say that they have a right to oust Tarabai and, in my opinion, the decree in her favour was correct and the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Crump, J.—This is a suit by the heirs of Agashe against Tarabai. As regards this moiety of the lands Agashe's heirs hold the rights of both mortgagor and mortgagee by virtue of the order of the High Court in 1907. The question is whether they or those through whom they claim have acquired any title by adverse possession. It is obvious that on Hanmantrao's death in 1897 any alienation by him became null and void, but it may be that persons who remain in possession after that date could acquire a title by prescription against the heirs of Hanmantrao who were at that date entitled to immediate possession. It is necessary, therefore, to consider the possession of the lands from 1897 onwards.

If I apprehend the position correctly the only persons who could acquire any title by adverse possession would be the persons in actual possession of the lands. The actual possession up to 1913 was with Parchure. Up to 1907 the heirs of Agashe held one-half of the equity of redemption, and in 1912 they became the full owners but they got no possession until 1913. If the possession of Parchure as mortgagee was adverse to the heirs of Hanmantrao, they might have become entitled to hold as mortgagees, but from 1907 their possession was also adverse to the heirs of Agashe whose share was then declared free of the mortgage. It is difficult therefore, to see how the heirs of Agashe could acquire a title by adverse possession and as between Parchure and the heirs of Ramrao the matter is concluded by the suits of 1912. As regards the suggestion that there was adverse possession of the equity of redemption, it is clear that Agushe's heirs could not hold that equity adversely when they were never in physical possession of the property. As matters stood Hanmantrao's heirs could not at any time have sued the heirs of Agashe alone as holders of the mere right to redeem.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 74—Res judicata—Question of law—Interest, high rate of—Penalty.

A case must be decided upon the law as it stands when the judgment is pronounced and not upon what the law was at the date of a previous suit, and if the law has been altered in the meantime and the effect of the law has been differently interpreted by judicial decision or altered by Statute, a decision on a point of law in an earlier suit will not operate as res judicata with regard to the same question in a subsequent suit. For instance, where a stipulation as to the payment of interest contained in a kabuliyat is held to be penal and, therefore, unenforceable, and the law is subsequently altered by judicial pronouncements, the decision as to the penal nature of the stipulation will not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit to recover rent on the basis of the same kabuliyat. [p. 768, col. 1.]

In the absence of anything to prove undue influence or to show that there was an unconscionable bargain, a mere high rate of interest is not to be treated either as penal or unconscionable. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent instituted by the plaintiffs for the years 1323 to 1326, the allegation being that the defendants were holding under a kabuliyat executed by their predecessor-in-interest for dwelling purposes in the year 1281. The Court of first instance decreed the plaintiffs' suit. The lower Appellate Court gave the plaintiffs a decree for the amount of rent claimed for the years in suit together with interest at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum, the rate of interest stipulated in the kabuliyat being 75 per cent. per annum at which the suit had been decreed by the Court of first instance. The plaintiffs appeal to this Court, and their contention is that the decision of the lower Appellate Court on the question of interest is wrong. It appears that the ground upon which the rate of interest was objected to in the Court of first instance on behalf of the defendants was that it was penal and unconscionable. The learned Munsif held that according to the present trend of judicial decisions the stipulation as to interest cannot be held to be either penal or unconscionable. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal was of opinion that the question as to the rate of interest was res judicata as between the parties by reason of a previous decision in a suit for rent as between the parties which had been marked as Ex. 7 in the case; and inasmuch as in that decision it was held that the stipulation was of a penal nature, it disallowed the interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat and gave the plaintiffs a decree, as I have said at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the decision in the previous suit on the question of interest cannot in law operate as res judicata. On behalf of the respondents it is urged that the said decision does operate as res judicata; and it is further contended that in any event inasmuch as the defendants were holding over the plaintiffs are not entitled to interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat but are entitled only to such interest as in the opinion of the Court is fair and reasonable. So far as the question of res judicata is concerned, it is necessary to refer to the decision, Ex. 7, upon which the Court of Appeal below has relied. It appears that in the previous suit the issue as to interest was as to whether the plaintiffs were entitled to get interest at the rate mentioned in the kabuliyat and it was decided that the interest claimed was high and was, therefore, penal. This decision was passed on the 30th of April 1917. Since then there have been a number of decisions on the question of penal character or otherwise of interest stipulated in contracts of which it is necessary to mention only one case, namely, the case of Balla Mal v. Ahad Shah (1), a decision of the Judicial Committee, in which it has been laid down that in the absence of anything to prove undue influence or to show that there was an unconscionable bargain, the mere high rate of interest is not to be treated either as penal or unconscionable. The law having thus been altered the question is whether the decision in the earlier suit should operate as res judicata in the present one. On behalf of the appellants reliance has been placed with regard to this matter on the case of Alimunnissa Chowdhurani v. Shama Churn Roy (2). In that case it was laid down that cases must be decided upon the law as it stands when the judgment is pronounced and not upon what the law was at the date of a previous suit, and if the said law has been altered in the meantime and the effect of the law has been differently interpreted by the Judicial decisions or altered by the Statute, the decision on the question of interest in an earlier suit for rent would not operate as res judicata with regard to the same question in a suit for rent for subsequent years. The decision upon which the earlier decision was based in that case had, in the meantime, been overruled by a Full Bench decision. That case seems to me very much the same as the present case. On behalf of the respondents reliance has been placed upon a number of decisions especially upon the decisions in the cases of Rai Churn Ghose v. Kumud Mohan Dutta (3), Rash Behary Sarkar v. Mohendra Nath Ghose (4) and Waman v. Hari (5) for the purpose of contending that the decision upon a pure question of law, even though erroneous, may, under certain circumstances, operate as res judicata. There can be no dispute as to the proposition of law which is contended for on behalf of the respondents. But, as I have said, the facts appearing in the present case are distinguishable from the facts appearing in the cases cited on behalf of the respondents and I can see nothing upon which I can distinguish the case of Alimunnissa Chowdhurani v. Shama Charan Roy (2) upon which reliance has been placed on behalf of the appellants. I am of opinion, therefore, that the decision in the earlier suit for rent does not operate as res judicata. The mere fact that 75 per cent. per annum is a rate stipulated in the kabuliyat does not show that the rate was a penal one nor is there anything to show nor any finding has been arrived at to the effect that the bargain was penal and unconscionable and this is not the first instance in which interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum has been allowed on the basis of a stipulation in a kabuliyat. I may refer for instance to the case of Ashutosh Dhar v. Joy Lal Sardar (6), where in awarding interest in a suit for rent at the contract rate which was 75 per cent. per annum this Court observed as follows: "The rate no doubt is very high, 75 per cent. per annum, but the tenants have the remedy in their own hands. They have only to pay their rent regularly and no interest will be chargeable." I can, therefore, see no reason for not awarding a decree to the plaintiffs at the rate stipulated in the kabuliyat.

So far as the second ground is concerned a reference to the kabuliyat shows that on the face of it, is not a kabuliyat for a period of nine years as contended for on behalf of the respondents and there is nothing to show that, as a matter of fact, the respondents were holding over after the expiry of the kabuliyat. On this ground it is not possible for us to say that the defendants are liable to pay interest at any rate other than that mentioned in the kabuliyat. I, accordingly, think that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge is not correct and I set it aside and restore the decision of the learned Munsif with costs in this Court and the lower Appellate Court.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

MAGAN GHELABHAI GUJARATHI—RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 48, whether retrospective—Mortgage-suit—Instalment decree—Default—Limitation, commencement of.

Section 48 of the C. P. C. is retrospective and governs an application for the execution of a mortgage-decree passed before that Code came into force. Therefore, such an application if presented 12 years after the date of the decree is barred.

Konsilla v. Ishri Singh, 6 Ind. Cas. 188; 32 A. 499; 7 A. L. J. 420, dissented from.

Gopaldas v. Tribhovan, 59 Ind. Cas. 790; 22 Bom. L. R. 1420; 45 B. 365, followed.

In a mortgage-suit redemption was allowed on payment of Rs. 2,000 by annual instalments of Rs. 50 and it was directed that if there was a default in payment of an instalment, the plaintiff was entitled to take out execution for the whole amount. The decree was passed in 1899. There was default in conforming to the terms of the decree in 1901. Various attempts were made to recover the decretal amount by execution and the last application was made in 1922:

Held, (1) that on the occurrence of the first default in 1901 the decree-holder obtained the right to execute his decree for the whole amount and that time began to run against the decree-holder from the date of the default;

(2) that, therefore, the execution application was barred under the provisions of s. 48 of the C. P. C.

Second appeal from a decision of the District Judge at Poona, in Appeal No. 231 of 1922, confirming the order passed by the First Class Subordinate Judge, at Poona, in Darkhast No. 678 of 1922.

Mr. K. V. Joshi, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. H. Kelkar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a decree was passed against the present appellants in 1899 in a suit for sale of certain mortgaged property. Redemption was allowed on payment of Rs. 2,000 by annual instalments of Rs. 50 and it was directed that if there was a default in payment of two instalments, the plaintiff was entitled to take out execution for the whole amount. It is admitted that there was default in conforming to the terms of the decree so far back as 1901. The plaintiff had then the right to execute his decree for the whole amount, and necessarily time was running against the plaintiff from that date with regard to that right. It seems that thereafter various attempts were made by the plaintiff to recover the decretal amount by darkhasts, and it is not suggested that the present Darkhast was filed more than three years after the date of the last darkhast. Accordingly it was held by the Subordinate Judge and also by the District Judge in appeal that the darkhast was in time.

It was argued before us that as this application for execution was made more than twelve years after 1901, it was barred under s. 48 (i) (b) of the C. P. C. Against that view the decision in Konsilla v. Ishri Singh (1) was relied upon. But that decision has been dissented from by this Court in Gopaldas v. Tribhovan (2), where it was held in a considered judgment that s. 48 of the C. P. C., has retrospective effect, and governs an application for the execution of a mortgage-decree passed before that Code came into force. Hence such an application if presented twelve years after the date of the decree was barred.

Therefore, the application to execute the decree for the whole amount cannot be within time, since time began to run against the decree-holder in 1901. He cannot be allowed to continue to execute for the instalments as they fall due, as on default the decree was no longer an instalment decree.

The respondent relied upon the case of Narsinha v. Balvant (3). In that case the judgment-debtor applied for an extension of time to pay one of the instalments, and this Court held that in cases of default of payment of instalment decrees the Court in Equity has power to relieve the debtor from the consequences of his default. But we do not think we can order at the instance of the judgment-debtor that a decree which has ceased to be an instalment decree should be restored to its previous status so as to prevent time from running against him.

We, therefore, think that the appeal should be allowed and the darkhast dismissed with costs throughout.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Murshidabad, dated the 19th of April 1922, affirming that of the Munsif First Court at Kandi, dated the 2nd of July 1920.

Babu Panchanan Ghose, for the Appellant.

Babu Tarkeshwar Pal Chaudhury, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This second appeal is on behalf of the defendants and arises out of a suit for possession of land, decreed by the District Judge of Murshidabad on the 19th April 1922.

The facts shortly stated are these. The plaintiff sued the defendants as trespassers with reference to the lands which admittedly comprised the holding of a tenant Khetra Nath Pal under the plaintiff and the defendants are in possession of those lands as purchasers of the holding which was not transferable by custom. The defence mainly, was, that the entire holding had not been sold and, therefore, the plaintiff could not treat the holding as abandoned.

The learned Munsif decreed the suit but his judgment was reversed on appeal by Mr. Ross, the Additional District Judge and the suit was dismissed on the 25th November 1921.

The plaintiff filed an application for review of that judgment and a notice was issued by the learned Judge who had dismissed the suit.

Mr. Nelson the successor-in-office of Mr. Ross heard the parties and admitted the application for review and re-heard the appeal and set aside the decree of his predecessor and in the result the plaintiff's suit was again decreed with costs.

The present second appeal is against this judgment.

The first point raised by the learned Vakil for the appellant was, that the learned District Judge was in error in admitting a review of the judgment of his predecessor because the grounds for the review did not come within the purview of O. XLVII, r. 1, cl. (2).

The learned Vakil for the respondent submitted that there was no appeal to this Court on the ground that the review was not in accordance with the provisions of O. XLVII, r. 1 (1). He submitted further that the appeal was limited to the grounds set out in O. XLVII, r. 7 and it was further argued that this review was admitted on the ground of "for other sufficient reason" and that a review granted on such a ground was not open to correction by appeal.

We do not think that the objection raised by the learned Vakil for the respondent is sound. Order XLVII, r. 7, expressly provides that when an application for review is granted the party dissatisfied with the order may appeal against that order or may take the same objection in an appeal filed against the final decree.

Rule 7 read with rr. 1 and 4 appears that it is open to the Appellate Court to examine the ground upon which the review was admitted and if the ground for the review does not come within the words of O. XLVII, r. 1 then the Appellate Court is competent to hold that the review was improperly admitted under r. 4 (1) but should have been rejected. This is clear from the case of Chhajju Ram v. Neki (1) and this was the ground which was pointed by their Lordships, their interference in that case when they say that there could be no re-hearing for the purpose of seeing whether a different conclusion on the merits should be adopted.

In this view we think the review was really granted for re-consideration of the evidence in the case and in fact the learned District Judge has reversed the findings of fact by his predecessor.

Although the judgment of the District Judge which was set aside in review is not quite satisfactory still we think that as, the review was not permissible on the grounds upon which it it was admitted, we should not allow the last judgment to stand. If the previous judgment was not open to review it must stand. The result is that the judgment and decree of the District Judge dated 19th April 1922 is set aside and that of the District Judge dated 25th November 1921 is restored. In the circumstance we allow only the costs of this appeal. The parties must bear their costs in the Courts below.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

ALIMAHOMED SALEMAHOMED—PLAINTIFF

versus

MUNICIPAL COMMISSIONER OF BOMBAY—DEFENDANT.

City of Bombay Municipal Act (III of 1888), ss. 3 (z), 394, 515—Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 45—Stables—License, refusal of—Municipal Commissioner, discretion of—High Court, power of, to interfere—Court prohibiting issue of license on ground of private nuisance—Abatement of nuisance—License, whether can be granted under changed circumstances—Public and private nuisances, distinction between—Remedies.

Where a Municipal Commissioner has acted illegally in refusing to exercise his discretion in granting a license under s. 394 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act, the High Court would interfere under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act and order him to exercise his discretion and issue the license. [p. 772, col. 2.]

Section 515 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act is designed to empower a Magistrate to give summary relief by way of prevention or otherwise, not only in respect of a public nuisance, but in respect of any nuisance as defined by s. 3 (z) of the Municipal Act which includes both private and public nuisances. [p. 773, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where in proceedings under s. 515 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act relating to certain stables the Court thinks that the nuisance complained of relates to the whole locality, the nuisance is a public nuisance, but if it relates only to one or two houses it is a private nuisance. The relief which the Court can give in both cases under s. 515 is, inter alia, abatement of the nuisance by ordering the Municipal Commissioner not to grant the license for the stables. But it does not follow from the Court making an order on the Commissioner that he should not grant a license that that order is to govern all circumstances and all cases at all times. [p. 775, col. 2.]

Where the order of the Court proceeds on the assumption that a private nuisance exists, the Commissioner is at liberty to grant a license when he finds that the private nuisance complained of in the proceedings under s. 515 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act has ceased to exist, owing to the residents of the particular houses affected by the nuisance having vacated those houses. [ibid.]

With regard to a private nuisance each individual has his remedy in civil law by way of injunction and damages. He has further his remedy under s. 515 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. It is necessary for the protection of the health and comfort of the inhabitants of a big city like Bombay that any resident who is affected by the nuisance in the manner mentioned in s. 3 (z) of the Act, should have a right to go to a Magistrate over the head of the Commissioner or the Corporation that the Commissioner should be restrained from exercising his powers so as to affect the complainant's individual right as a resident by the creation of a private nuisance. If the private nuisance affects two or three houses only, the inhabitants of the houses might either join in a civil suit or a complaint before a Magistrate and ask the Magistrate to decide specifically that a particular nuisance is a private nuisance affecting to residents of those particular houses. With regard to a public nuisance also, any resident can ask for an order under s. 515 and if the Court finds a public nuisance proved, the order of the Court would give relief to the public of the locality as against the nuisance and the vacating of any one or more houses would not mean abatement of the nuisance as the nuisance, is in respect of the public. In the case of a public nuisance no particular limits need be defined. [p. 775, col. 2; p. 776, col. 1.]

Mr. Campbell, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application under the Specific Relief Act, s. 45, for an order on the Municipal Commissioner to grant the applicant a license for stables for hack victorias erected by him at Love Lane, Mazagaon, under s. 494 (1) (c) of the City of Bombay Municipal Act III of 1888. The Municipal Commissioner has declined to issue a license in this case on the ground that he was prevented from doing so by the order of the Appeal Court: Municipal Corporation of Bombay v. Mallandaine (1). The Municipal Commissioner has put in an affidavit in reply to the application in which he concedes that but for the judgment of the Appeal Court he is quite willing to exercise his discretion in favour of the applicant and to issue a license to him as applied for by him. In the opinion of the Commissioner, who has a discretion in the matter, the applicant is entitled to the license and he says that if he had not been advised by his legal advisers that the Appeal Court judgment prevented him from exercising his discretion in the matter he would have issued the license to the applicant.

The question of the jurisdiction of this Court to order the Municipal Commissioner to exercise his discretion under certain circumstances under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act has not been disputed, but I should like to refer to the judgments of this Court on the point which make it quite clear under what circumstances this Court has jurisdiction to interfere with the discretion of the Commissioner under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act. As to the interference with the discretion of the Municipal Commissioner there is a decision of the Appeal Court in Haji Ismail v. Municipal Commissioner of Bombay (2). That was also a case of refusal to grant a license to the applicant under s. 394 of the City of Bombay Municipal Act. The learned Judges of the Appeal Court lay down at page 260* as follows:—"The power, then, to grant licenses vested in the Municipal Commissioner under s. 394 being purely discretionary, the only limit to its exercise is that it should not be arbitrary, vague and fanciful; but it must be legal and regular." Then, on the facts of the case, the Appeal Court found that they were not satisfied that the Commissioner had exercised his discretion arbitrarily and without any regard to the sanitary interests of the City for which the power is vested in him and accordingly dismissed the application of the applicant.

There is another decision of this Court in Gell v. Taja Noora (3), where the question was of the exercise of discretion by the Commissioner of Police in refusing to grant a license for the conveyance of the applicant on the ground that the Commissioner had approved a certain pattern of victoria as a public conveyance and had refused a license to the victoria of the applicant on the ground that it did not conform to the pattern. That case also went up to the Appeal Court and both the Judge of the first instance Mr. Justice Russell and the Appeal Court held that the ground on which the Police Commissioner had refused to grant the license was illegal and that, therefore, the Court had jurisdiction under s. 45 of the Specific Relief Act to order him to issue the license asked for. The observations of Mr. Justice Batty at page 320* and Mr. Justice Starling at page 321* show that where the Commissioner has acted illegally in refusing to exercise his discretion this Court would interfere, and order him to exercise his discretion and issue the license.

The ground in this case on which the Municipal Commissioner has declined to grant the license to the applicant is that he is prevented by the decision of the Appeal Court referred to by me from doing so. If, therefore, the Appeal Court judgment does not bear the construction which is put upon it by the legal advisers of the Municipal Commissioner, clearly the action of the Municipal Commissioner in declining to grant the license would be illegal.

The sole question, therefore, before me is whether the judgment of the Appeal Court bears the construction which is put upon it by the legal advisers of the Municipal Commissioner and whether that judgment covers the altered circumstances of the case as now existing and, therefore, prevents the Municipal Commissioner from granting the license. I have very carefully considered this question, as I find from the proceedings that the matter was fought out in the Court of the Chief Presidency Magistrate and before the Appeal Court in the most acrimonious spirit and as found both by the Magistrate and by the Appeal Court the parties concerned refused to consider any compromise or any middle way out of the difficulty created by the action of the Municipal Commissioner in then proposing to grant a license to the applicant. It further appears that long before the Municipal Commissioner decided to grant a license the residents of the locality had made complaints to the Municipality and the Municipal Sanitary Committee had examined the locality and made a report and the matter had again come before the Corporation, and ultimately the Corporation having decided to support the action of the Municipal Commissioner in his proposal to grant a license to the applicant, proceedings were taken, under s. 515 of the Municipal Act, by one L. R. Mallandaine, who lived in a bungalow belonging to the applicant and which bungalow was on three sides surrounded by the stables, before the Chief Presidency Magistrate. This was the first case of its kind in Bombay. It appears to me that by reason of its being the first case neither the parties nor the Chief Presidency Magistrate were quite clear in their minds as to what was exactly the issue before the Court and what was exactly the relief as bearing on that issue asked for by the complainant. I make these observations advisedly after very carefully going through the proceedings and the judgment of the Magistrate as I find, as pointed out by Mr. Campbell in his very fair and able argument on the point, that there are stray observations in the judgment of the Chief Presidency Magistrate and indications in the evidence led before the Chief Presideney Magistrate on behalf of the complainant that the complainant was fighting not only his own battle but the battle of the other residents in the locality, who, it appears, had also financed him. The learned Magistrate has, however, based his decision mainly on the evidence which showed that the stables would cause a nuisance to the residents of the house in which the complainant resided. That the point as to whether the nuisance complained of affected the public was before the minds of the parties and the Magistrate appears to me to be clear from the fact that from the very first Mr. Campbell, who appeared for the Municipal Commissioner in that case, raised the point that the Magistrate had no jurisdiction under s. 515 of the Municipal Act to entertain the complaint as the complaint was in respect of a private nuisance and not a public nuisance. The question as to the nature of the nuisance complaind of and whether it came within the terms of s. 515 had to be and was considered by the Magistrate. Moreover, the scope of the order, which he ultimately made, was bound to be circumscribed by the finding as to the nature of the nuisance, with regard to which the Magistrate found action on his part was necessary under s. 515 of the Municipal Act. Here it is important to bear in mind that s. 515 of the Municipal Act is designed to empower the Magistrate to give summary relief by way of prevention or otherwise not only in respect of a public nuisance but any nuisance as defined by s. 3 (z) of the Municipal Act. Section 3 (z) makes it clear that "nuisance" under the Municipal Act includes both private nuisances and public nuisances. The definition runs as follows:—"'Nuisance' includes any act, omission, place or thing which causes or is likely to cause injury, danger, annoyance or offence to the sense of sight, smelling or hearing, or which is or may be dangerous to life or injurious to health or property." The point taken in the very first instance by Counsel for the Municipal Commissioner was that notwithstanding the wide terms of the definition of "nuisance" in the Municipal Act, the words should be read as confining the definition to public nuisance only. That is to say the argument was that unless the community or a large part of the community or a street or locality was affected by the nuisance the Magistrate was not to exercise the summary jurisdiction under s. 515. That point was considered at some length by the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate and although he does not quite clearly find that the nuisance complained of was not a public nuisance, he impliedly holds that it was not. Otherwise one would have found in the very forefront of his judgment that the nuisance complained of was a public nuisance and that, therefore, there was no force in the contention that it was not covered by s. 515. He might then have further held that even if he was wrong in holding that it was a public nuisance, the nuisance complained of was covered by the definition given in s. 3 (z). But he does not do so, and to my mind advisedly. There was no case of public nuisance which was either seriously put forward or which was seriously advanced in the evidence or which was seriously considered by the Chief Presidency Magistrate. There are indications of an attempt on the part of the complainant to bring this nuisance within the definition of a public nuisance by adducing evidence of people in the locality to the effect that since the user of these stables malaria had prevailed in their houses and that malaria was due, if not solely, to a great extent to the fact of the user of the stables. There was nothing to prevent the Chief Presidency Magistrate from holding on the evidence before him that not merely the residents in this house but the residents of the locality were affected by the user of these stables and that, therefore, it was not merely a private nuisance but a public nuisance which he wanted to abate under the powers given to him under s. 515. If one looks at the whole of the judgment, notwithstanding stray remarks here and there which might indicate that the Chief Presidency Magistrate had some doubts as to whether remotely there might not be some danger of malaria to the residents of the locality and the public, in coming to his conclusion he definitely confines himself to the particular house and the residents in that particular house. I need not quote passages from the judgment of the Chief Presidency Magistrate to show that throughout he was considering the question as if it was a fight between the complainant, as representing the residents of the bungalow in which he was living, and the Municipal Commissioner. I may here refer particularly to the appreciation by the Chief Presidency Magistrate of the evidence of Mr. Niblett, Mr. Masani and Mr. Daruwalla, who all stated that although the stables were not a public nuisance, they might result in a certain amount of nuisance to the occupants of the bunglow on the ground of noise caused by the syces talking and shouting and of insanitary conditions which might result by the washing of the horses and the victorias in the stables; and particularly on the evidence of these three gentlemen the learned Chief Presidency Magistrate holds that the stables were proved to be a nuisance within s. 3 (z) of the Municipal Act. He then also refers to the judgment of Mr. Justice Beaman in Bai Bhicaiji v. Parojshaw Jivanji (4) which case also was a case of a private nuisance. In the final conclusion the learned Magistrate does bring in the occupants of the neighbourhood, but considering the judgment as a whole, I am of opinion that the learned Magistrate did not find that there was a public nuisance likely to be created by the user of the stables but a private nuisance which he had jurisdiction to abate under s. 515.

Coming to the judgments of the Appeal Court, although, particularly in the Acting Chief Justice's judgment there are certain remarks which might be construed as referring to the residents of the locality, the judgments as a whole are devoted to the consideration of the question whether the user of the stables would result in a nuisance to the residents of the bungalow of whom the complainant was one. The words in which the learned Chief Justice finds on the question of nuisance are these (page 1326*):—"I hold that it is a nuisance with reference to the residents of this house in relation to the particular circumstances of the case. I do not say generally that any stables properly licensed, and kept according to the terms of the license, would necessarily be a nuisance. My finding has relation to the particular facts of the case including the situation of the stables and the extent to which the stabling accommodation is allowed on this land." This conclusion to which the learned Judges of the Appeal Court came is further made quite clear from their appreciation of the evidence on the complainant's behalf to the effect that the danger of malaria was increased in the locality. There was a divergence of medical evidence on the point, but so far as I can see the Judges of the Appeal Court were inclined to hold that the evidence did not prove the contention of the complainant and of the other residents of the locality that malaria was increased in the locality by reason of the user of these stables. If the ground of malaria was eliminated no other ground remained for holding that it was a public nuisance. I have gone through the whole evidence in that case. One Nibelett, who resided in the house of Ismailji, and Nazir who occupied another house, which two houses are the nearest to the stables next to the bungalow in question, say that they suffered discomfort on account of smell and noise. Their evidence, however, was very perfunctory, and the Judges of the Appeal Court do not specifically refer to it at all and have not brought their mind to bear upon those statements. It is a very doubtful question whether, assuming two or three houses were affected, it would be a case of public nuisance. I find in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXI, at page 511, where public and private nuisances are defined, in the note (k), that where a noise caused by a tinman plying his trade affected three houses only, it was held that there was a private nuisance and not an indictable one. The case referred to is R. v. Lloyd (5). Therefore, even if these two houses were affected practically by this nuisance, it might not amount to a public nuisance. The Judges of the Appeal Court did not particularly consider the case from the point of nuisance being created in respect of the residents of the locality. As I stated the question of the residents of the locality appears to me to have been dismissed from consideration by the Appeal Court on the ground that the evidence did not show that there was increase of malaria or that there was likelihood of increase of malaria. The judgment of Mr. Justice Crump, the other Judge of the Appeal Court, is to my mind equally clear on the question of the stables not affecting the other residents of the locality. He considers at some length the question of increase of malaria and he discards the evidence of the other residents of the locality as evidence of no value at all.

There are further indications given in the judgments of both the Appeal Court Judges that they were merely considering the case of the residents of the particular bungalow. It appears from the judgments that they tried to bring about a compromise and find a middle way of solving the dispute between the residents of the house in question and the owner of the stables and they express their regret that both the parties were fighting the matter so bitterly that they would not consider the suggestion of a middle way. One party insisted on the issue of the license while the other wanted to prevent it absolutely and neither was willing to give up its extreme contention. Now to my mind if the nuisance was considered by the Court to be a public nuisance there would have been no ground at all for a compromise between the complainant and the owner of these stables.

As observed by Mr. Justice Holmwood in Khagendra Nath Mitra v. Bhupendra Narayan Dutt (6), the Court ought most strongly to deprecate the use of the Municipal Act for the purpose of interfering in any way with the rights of private ownership beyond those limited powers which the Corporation had obtained by Statute for the necessary protection of the public and the enforcement of proper sanitation. I entirely agree with those observations, as after all in a big city like Bombay one cannot omit the consideration of the rights of ownership which might be affected to a very large extent by any hasty and improper action of the Commissioner or the Corporation or the Court. No doubt, if the user of the stables was in fact found to be a nuisance in respect of houses other than the bungalow, it was open to the Court and it would have been right for the Court, to find that the nuisance did not relate merely to the particular bungalow but to other houses also. If they thought that the nuisance related to the whole locality it was a public nuisance but if it related to the bungalow in question it was a private nuisance. The relief which the Court can give in both cases under s. 515 is inter alia abatement of the nuisance by ordering the Commissioner not to grant the license for the stables. But it does not follow from the Court's making an order on the Commissioner that he should not grant a license that that order is to govern all circumstances and all cases at all times. Mr. Desai argued that if the order was meant to cover any larger area than the bungalow, such area ought to have been defined in the judgment of the Magistrate and the Appeal Court. I have looked through a good many cases of nuisance and I do not find any where that any limitation as suggested by Mr. Desai has been put and for the obvious reason because it would be very difficult in particular cases to demarcate any particular line. The law has, therefore, provided two very proper demarcating lines which are clear and on which there can be no discussion, and that is, dividing nuisances into private and public nuisances. With regard to a private nuisance, each individual has his remedy in civil law by way of injunction and damages. He has further his remedy under s. 515 of the Municipal Act as interpreted by the Appeal Court and by the Calcutta High Court in two cases arising under a similar provision in the Calcutta Municipal Act: Bhagwan Das v. Rash Behari Mullick (7) and Khagendra Nath Mitra v Bhupendra Narayan Dutt (6). It is necessary for the protection of the health and comfort of the inhabitants of a big city like Bombay or Calcutta that any resident, who is affected by a nuisance in the manner mentioned in s 3 (z) of the Municipal Act, should have a right to go to a Magistrate over the head of the Commissioner or the Corporation and ask that the Commissioner should be restrained from exercising his poweres so as to affect the complainant's individual right as resident by the creation of a private nuisance. If private nuisance affects two or three houses, the inhabitants of the two or three houses might either join in a civil suit or they might file separate suits, or they might join in a complaint before the Magistrate and ask the Magistrate to decide spcifically that the particular nuisance is a private nuisance affecting the residents of houses A, B and C. With regard to a public nuisance also, any resident of Bombay can ask for an order under s. 515, and if the Court finds a public nuisance proved, the order of the Court would give relief to the public of the locality as against the nuisance and vacating of any one or more houses would not mean an abatement of the nuisance in respect of the public. In the case of a public nuisance, no particular limits need be defined.

I have looked through various cases of public nuisance and I find that carrying on of obnoxious trades has been held in some cases to be a public nuisance. As to keeping of animals, under which the user of stables would come, I also find observations in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXI, at page 513 to the following effect:—

"The keeping of any animals in such a position or in such circumstances as to cause material discomfort or annoyance to the public in general or to a particular persons is a nuisance. If it affects the public generally, it is a public nuisance, and may be punished by indictment or restrained by proceedings taken by the Attorney-General; if it violates private rights only, it is actionable by the individual who is thereby injured."

I have gone through all the cases I could find on the question of nuisance created by stables and I do not find a single case where it has been held that the keeping of animals in a stable was a public nuisance. It may be that if a person keeps a very large number of horses and the locality is very thickly populated it may cause discomfort, annoyance and injury to health, not only to the residents of two or three houses but of a much larger number of houses. In that case it would be a public nuisance.

But I particularly wish to emphasize the fact that it was open to the Appeal Court, if it came to that conclusion, to hold that there was a public nuisance. It does not do so. The Appeal Court held that a private nuisance was created which affected the residents of the bungalow only. The private nuisance to the residents of the bungalow no longer exists as the bungalow is not tenanted and is not to be used any more for purposes other than those connected with the stables.

That being the case, to my mind, the applicant is entitled to the relief claimed by him.

I need not go in detail into the various decisions, but the decisions as to stables which are referred to by Mr. Justice Crump in his judgment all relate to private nuisances, and the case in point as regards public nuisance created by the carrying on of an obnoxious trade is Attorney-General v. Code & Son (8), I may mention here that in the English Public Health Acts there are similar provisions for the abatement of nuisances and the provisions apply both to public and private nuisances. There also, therefore, the order passed under summary jurisdiction would be interpreted on the basis of the finding of the Court as to whether the nuisance was a private nuisance or a public nuisance.

In the case of a public nuisance there is a special remedy provided in the C. P. C. Under s. 91 of the C. P. C. the Advocate-General or two or more persons having obtained his consent in writing may institute proceedings for abatement of a public nuisance. There is, further, a provision in s. 268 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of a public nuisance. There "public nuisance" is defined as an act or an illegal omission which causes any common injury, danger or annoyance to the public or to the people in general who dwell or occupy property in the vicinity or which must necessarily cause injury, obstruction, danger, or annoyance to persons who may have occasion to use any public right. I refer to these provisions, because I find from what Mr. Campbell very properly brought to my notice that the inpabitants of the locality have been under the impression, the same impression as conveyed by the Municipal Commissioner to the applicant and which necessitated these proceedings, that the order of the Appeal Court protected all the inhabitants of the locality in respect of this nuisance. Probably they financed that litigation and backed up the complainant Mr. Mallandaine in the belief that if he succeeded, there would be an end of the matter. They did not count upon the ingenuity of the landlord, who got the particular house vacated and got the nuisance in respect of that particular house abated in a manner which was not contemplated by the other residents of the locality. I have looked at the plans put in in that case and I find that the two nearest houses next to the bungalow in that case are the houses of Ismailji and of Nazir.

I express no opinion whatsoever as to whether the user of these stables will result in discomfort or annoyance amounting to a nuisance as defined in s. 3 (z) of the Municipal Act, or whether there will be a nuisance at law actionable in this Court as a private nuisance in respect of any house or houses other than the bungalow or whether it will result in a public nuisance which would be indictable under s. 268 of the Indian Penal Code or actionable under s. 91 of the C. P. C. It may be that the residents of the locality may make a fresh effort and succeed perhaps so as to lay the matter at rest for all time. But unfortunately for them the Courts which considered that case confined their orders to the bungalow and did not hold there that a case of public nuisance was made out. The result is that if these parties are so advised there will be possibly further litigation in this matter. I do not want in any way to debar any resident or residents of the city of Bombay from taking proceedings under s. 515 of the Municipal Act or under the civil law or under s. 91, by moving the Advocate-General or under s. 268 of the Indian Penal Code.

At one time I proposed to order the Municipal Commissioner not to issue the license for a period of one month: but, as pointed out both by Mr. Campbell and Mr. Desai, such an order will really serve nobody's purpose. If the other residents of the locality, or whoever may be affected by the user of these stables, are so advised, they will have ample time to move the Magistrate, or file a suit in this Court and move for an injunction and obtain adequate relief. The applicant had these stables on his land for a long time and he has asked for a license again with his eyes open that other residents may have a cause for complaint and may again drag him to the Presidency Magistrate's Court under s. 515 of the Municipal Act. I trust that the Municipal Commissioner will not unduly hasten the grant of the license. The applicant will have no ground to complain if the issue of the license is delayed for a fortnight or any time which the Municipal Commissioner may think proper so as to give the other parties an opportunity of asserting their rights if they have any. I must say that the Municipal Commissioner has adopted a very proper attitude in bringing to my notice the letters addressed to him by the residents of the locality. Under the circumstances of the case to my mind, he did right in getting this question brought before the Court and decided by the Court, more particularly as he was advised by eminent Counsel who are the retained Counsel of the Municipality, that there would be a contempt of Court if he issued the license in face of the Appeal Court's decision. It is unfortunate that the matter may have to be re-litigated but that cannot be helped in view of the judgments of the Appeal Court. I have not considered the question whether the stables might be a nuisance with regard to the other houses or other residents of the locality and I express no opinion on the question. I wish to make this point quite clear so that it may not be said that the Commissioner uses his discretion under my orders and that, therefore, the other parties are debarred from proceeding under s. 515 of the Municipal Act or taking proceedings under the C. P. C., or taking criminal proceedings. My order is based entirely on the view I have taken that the Commissioner illegally declined to use his discretion on the ground that he was restrained by the Appeal Court's order. I hold that he is not so restrained; therefore, the refusal to exercise his discretion was on an illegal ground. That is all that I decide on this application.

As to whether he has otherwise rightly exercised his discretion or not, is a matter for the Municipal Commissioner and persons affected by the exercise of the discretion. I have not exercised any discretion in the matter. I have not gone into the merits of the question whether apart from the decision of the Appeal Court the Commissisoner would be right in exercising his discretion and issuing a license to the applicant. What I mean is this, in exercising his discretion the Commissioner has to consider whether this would be a nuisance to the other residents of the locality and whether under the circumstances he should grant the license or not. On that point his opinion as expressed in his affidavit before me is clear that there would be no nuisance and he is willing in the exercise of his discretion to grant a license. I am not exercising that discretion at all. I leave open the remedies under s. 515 of the Municipal Act and under the civil and criminal law to any party who may feel aggrieved by the exercise of the discretion by the Commissioner.

The order will be on the Municipal Commissioner in terms of prayer (a). I direct the Municipal Commissioner in the exercise of his discretion to grant the applicant a license under s. 394 (1) (c) of the Municipal Act.

In my opinion the Municipal Corporation has been wrongly made a party to this application.

The applicant shall pay the costs of the respondents.

Civil revision from an order of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore, dated the 1st of September 1924.

Mr. N. Upadhiya, for the Applicant.
Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise a judgment of the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore.

The plaintiff of the Court below is the applicant here. He brought the suit for recovery of money on foot of two promissory notes alleged to have been executed by the respondent. The suit was contested on several points, one of these being that at the date of execution of the promissory notes the defendant was a minor. The learned Judge found on all points in favour of the plaintiff. But on the question of defendant's minority he, laying the burden of proof on the plaintiff, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had failed to establish that the defendant was a major at the date of execution of the promissory notes.

It appears that no satisfactory evidence was adduced on either side and the Court had to rely on the question of onus of proof. The learned Judge was of opinion that it was for the plaintiff to establish that the contract was a valid one and was entered into by people who were majors. Two cases of this Court would support the view taken by the learned Judge, viz., Kanhaya Lal v. Girdhari Lal (1) following an earlier case of Gaya Din v. Dulari (2), on the other hand a Bench of two Judges of this very Court in the case of Narain Singh v. Chiranji Lal (3) laid down that the burden of proof lay on the party who asserts that he was a minor at the date of the contract. In the last mentioned case their Lordships purported to follow the case of Raja of Deo v. Abdullah (4), a decision of the Privy Council.

I have myself considered the case decided by the Privy Council and am of opinion that it does support the view taken in the case of Narain Singh v. Chiranji Lal (3). In the circumstances, the case of Narain Singh v. Chiranji Lal (3) should be followed, not only because it is a later case but it is supported by the opinion of the Privy Council which was not available when the two earlier cases were decided by this Court. Speaking personally, with respect, I should think that the burden of proof should be laid on the party who says that at the date of contract he was a minor. There can be no doubt that it is for the plaintiff to prove the validity of a contract on which he relies. But the age of a person entering into a contract is not such an essential part of the contract as must be proved by the plaintiff. Take for example a case like this. A man apparently of the age of 60, borrows money from a money-lender. When a suit is brought to enforce the payment the borrower pleads that he is a minor. The plea may be ludicrous and may appear to be so to the Court who will see the defendant. But if the burden of proof be laid on the plaintiff, he would be called upon to prove that his debtor was more than 18 at the date of the loan. It would be impossible for the plaintiff to find out the witnesses who would be able to prove the date of the birth of the defendant. Medical evidence can be accepted only as a matter of expert opinion. But the question is whether it is desirable that the plaintiff should be called upon to prove such an obvious case. Question of age is eminently one which the party raising it alone can prove by satisfactory evidence, although he himself may not be able to swear to it with sufficient accuracy from personal knowledge.

(1) 13 Ind. Cas. 956; 9 A. L. J. 103.
(2) 2 Ind. Cas. 839; 6 A. L. J. 693.
(3) 79 Ind. Cas. 945; 22 A. L. J. 461; 46 A. 568; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 730; L. R. 5 A. 353 Civ.

When a party enters into a contract as a major he really makes an admission that he is of age. If, in spite of such an admission, he asserts that he was not of age at the date of the contract, the burden of proof should be on him to establish the fact. In any view of the case, the burden of proof should lie on the party who asserts that he was a minor at the date of the contract in which he entered.

The result is that the judgment of the Court below should be set aside. I accordingly set it aside and decree the plaintiff's claim with costs throughout, I make no order as to interest after the institution of the suit.

A person who is in possession of watan lands as a tenant of the watandar, cannot acquire a right by adverse possession to fixity of rent, so as to deprive the watandar of his right to enhance the rent. It may be that a tenant can acquire a right of fixity of rent as against the immediate holder of the watan, but that would not prevail against the next holder, where the latter brings a suit for enhancement of rent within 12 years of his succeeding to the watan. JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to obtain possession of the lands described in the plaint, or in the alternative for a declaration that he as inamdar was entitled to demand enhanced rent from the defendants, stating that the lands belonged to the Deshpande family as inam watan lands.

The defendants admitted that the lands were watan inam lands; but they contended that the lands belonged to them as their ancestral properties; that they were in possession from ancient times; that the ancestors of the plaintiff had got the right to recover the Government assessment only from them and accordingly they used to pay Rs. 31-32 only in the khata of Ramchandra Gopal for the Judi; that they were not annual tenants; that no proper notice was given to them by the plaintiff; that the father of the plaintiff had instituted Suit No. 34 of 1891, against their ancestors; that in that suit their ancestors had claimed the lands as of their ownership; and that since then they were in possession adversely to the plaintiff and his father for more than twelve years.

It was found in the lower Court that the lands in dispute were the watan inam lands of the plaintiff's family, that on account of the antiquity of the defendants' tenancy there was no satisfactory evidence of its commencement and, therefore, under s. 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code the presumption arose that as against the inamdar's family there was fixity of tenure. The learned Judge said:—

"I, therefore, hold that the defendants are permanent tenants. The usage to enhance the rents of permanent tenants is very widely known and well understood. Such tenants are liable to have their rents enhanced by their landlords: Vyasacharya Madhavacharya v. Vishnu Vithal (1)."

He held that the plaintiff's suit was not barred by adverse possession and that the defendants were liable to pay the enhanced rent. Accordingly he gave a decree to the plaintiff for Rs. 65 for the year 1917-18.

In appeal the learned Judge said:—

"The plaintiff's right to enhance was distinctly denied in Suit No. 34 of 1891, in the written statement Ex. 88. The suit was dismissed owing to a compromise. Then in 1911, they were still obdurately denying the right to enhance. This is clear from the notice Ex. 72. This state of things continued until the present suit. Thus for twelve years and more before suit the right to enhance was adversely held against the plaintiff."

Accordingly the plaintiff's suit was dismissed.

We have been referred to the Full Bench decision of this Court in Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvant Deshpande (2) in which it was held that in the absence of fraud and collusion adverse possession for twelve years during the lifetime of one holder of service watan lands would be a bar to succeeding holders. The contest in that case was between an entire stranger holding adverse possession of the watan lands on the one hand and the watandars on the other. There must be a distinction with regard to the question of adverse possession when the contest is between a tenant already in possession of the watan land as a tenant and the watandar.

In Gopalrao v Mahadevrao (3), it was held that the inamdar's right to enhance the rent and to recover the land in default of payment of such rent was barred by limitation, the tenant so far as the right was concerned having been holding adversely to him for more than twelve years. No reasons were given for this decision and the Court merely said (page 396*):—

"The defendant, therefore, so far as the right of the plaintiff to enhance the rent and to evict the defendant in default of payment is concerned, has been holding adversely to the plaintiff for more than twelve years, and the plaintiff's right to enhance the rent and to recover the land in default of payment of such rent has become lost by operation of the law of limitation."

The question whether persons, who and whose predecessors-in-title, claimed to be, and were, tenants of service watan lands would acquire title to a permanent tenancy of the lands by adverse possession as against the watandars from whom they held was considered in Madhavrao Waman Saundalgekar v. Raghunath Venkatesh Deshpande (4). The case of Radhabai v. Anantrao Bhagvant Deshpande (2) was distinguished. Their Lordships said (page 264†):—

"A careful consideration of Sir Charles Sargent's judgment as given in Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvant Dishpande (2) shows that he was considering the question referred to the Full Bench from the point of view of the grantee having been a stranger to the watan, It is not necessary for their Lordships to decide in this case whether the answer of the Full Bench, limited as it must have been to the case of a stranger to the watan, setting up as a defence, twelve years' adverse possession, was or was not correct, although they are constrained to say that it is somewhat difficult to see how a stranger to a watan can acquire a title by adverse possession for twelve years of lands, the alienation of which was, in the interests of the State, prohibited...In the present case the defence of twelve years' adverse possession as permanent tenants is set up by persons who and their predecessors-in-title, always claimed to be and were tenants of service watan lands, and in the opinion of their Lordships neither the defendants nor their predecessors-in-title could have acquired any title to a permanent tenancy in the lands by adverse possession as against the watandars from whom they held the lands."

If then a person who is in possession of the watan lands as a tenant of the watandar cannot acquire title to a permanent tenancy, that is to say, to fixity of tenure, it is difficult to see how such a tenant can acquire a right by adverse possession to fixity of rent. It may be that, as was held in Gopalrao v. Mahadevrao (3), a tenant can acquire a right of fixity of rent as against the immediate holder of the watan, but that would not prevail against the next holder, and in this case the suit having been filed within twelve years of the plaintiff succeeding to the watan, it is not barred. Therefore, following the decision of the Privy Council, we hold that the right of the plaintiff to enhance the rent exists.

There was another question which arose in this case and it was this. There was no permanent tenancy until the Court declared that the presumption under s. 83 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code arose. Until that was decided the defendants were only annual tenants not even having fixity of tenure, and consequently the plaintiff's right to enhance the rent which was recognised by s. 83 could not have been denied as against the watandars.

On both these grounds it seems to me that the decision of the Trial Court was right. The appeal should be allowed and the decree of the Trial Court restored with costs throughout.

Crump, J.—In my opinion it is impossible to apply to this case the principles laid down by the Full Bench in Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvant Deshpande (2) for that case has been distinguished by the Privy Council in Madhavrao Waman Saundalgekar v. Raghunath Venkatesh Deshpande (4). The facts of that latter case were so similar to the facts now before us that it is binding upon us as an authority for the proposition that a permanent tenancy cannot be acquired by a tenant of watan property as against the holder of the watan, and that authority is, therefore, sufficient for the decision of the case before us. Whether in other circumstances Radhabai v. Anantrav Bhagvantrao Deshpande (2) can still be regarded as an authority is a question which may have to be considered when those circumstances are before us. It seems to me, therefore, clear that the defendants in the present case cannot assert that they have by twelve years' adverse possession acquired a right to hold the property at a fixed rent. I should like further to point out that there is an error in the judgment of the District Judge as to the date on which the suit was filed. The correct date is October 29, 1919, and not October 29, 1921, and, therefore, the suit was within twelve years from the death of the last holder.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE No. 2200 OF 1921

January 7, 1925.

OFFICIAL TRUSTEE OF BENGAL —PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

SAGAR PAIK AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Res judicata—Compromise rent-decree.

A rent-decree passed in a previous suit on the basis of a compromise is, in the absence of the terms of the compromise, by itself no evidence to prove what the defendant admitted, and amounts only to proof of an admission in respect of the amount claimed. It does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the parties with regard to the rate of rent.

Modhusudan Shah Mundul v. Brae, 16 C. 300; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 197 (F. B.), followed.

Appeal against a decree of the Second Additional District Judge, Midnapur, dated the 3rd June 1921, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court, Tamluk, dated the 11th May 1920.

Mr. Gunoda Charan Sen and Babu Santosh Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Khirode Narain Bhuian, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This is a suit for recovery of arrears of rent in respect of 4-annas share of the plaintiff in the holding. The rent is claimed at Rs. 54-11-7 for the 16-annas share; but the Record of Rights shows the jama at Rs. 36-6-7. Both the Courts below have agreed in dismissing the plaintiff's suit on the finding that the plaintiff had failed to prove the jama as alleged by him. The plaintiff produced neither the collection papers nor any other evidence in proof of realization of rent at the rate claimed by him; but he has simply relied upon a certain decree passed in 1895 in a rent suit against the present respondent on confession. A copy of the decree in that suit has been filed in this case which shows that the amount claimed was decreed on confession by the defendant. The terms of the compromise have not been put in. The decree itself does not prove as to what the defendant admitted. As it stands the admission is only in respect of the amount claimed in that suit. It cannot, therefore, operate as res judicata in the present suit with regard to the rate of rent on the principle laid down in the Full Bench case of Modhusudan Shaha Mundul v. Brae (1), Mr. Sen for the appellant has further argued that if the decree in the previous suit may not operate as res judicata, it is a strong piece of evidence against the defendant. Admitting that to be so, the Courts below have on a consideration of this and other evidence came to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to rebut the presumption arising from the Record of Rights and it is a decision on facts. This appeal is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Cuming, J.—I agree.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 32—Suit by co-tenant for damages or profits, whether maintainable.

Section 32 of the Agra Tenancy Act bars a suit for partition of a holding. It does not bar the maintenance of a suit for damages or profits where one of the parties entitled to a holding is kept out of possession by his co-tenants.

Najibullah v. Gulsher Khan, 1 Ind. Cas. 594; 31 A. 348; 6 A. L. J. 343, relied on.

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 23rd February 1923.

St. C. Thompson, for the Appellants.

Mr. Durga Charan Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal involves a very short point and it is one of law. On the death of one Charan who was recorded as an ex-proprietary tenant of 21 and odd bighas of land, his brother's sons and his son's sons had a dispute about the division of the tenancy. They went to the Revenue Court and ultimately came to an agreement which took the shape of a document in writing registered. By this document plaintiffs who are the respondents in this Court were allowed 7 bighas 1 biswa of land. They came to Court with the allegation that the defendants kept them out of possession of this 7 bighas and odd area and were liable to pay damages. The plaintiffs accordingly sued for recovery of possession and for recovery of Rs. 70 as damages.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit in toto. One of the plaintiffs Chet Ram appealed and he asked for damages only. The first ground of appeal was that the suit could not fail in its entirety.

The learned District Judge was of opinion that the suit could not fail in toto. He found that the plaintiffs were at least entitled to joint possession, if they were not entitled to separate physical possession. He accordingly assessed the damages and decreed the claim for a small amount, viz., Rs. 17-8-0.

In this Court the learned Counsel for the defendants-appellants contended that the entire suit was unmaintainable having regard to the provision of s. 32 of the Tenancy Act.

I cannot agree with this contention. Section 32 of the Tenancy Act bars a suit for partition of a holding. It does not bar the maintenance of a suit for damages or profits where one of the parties entitled to a holding is kept out of possession by his co-tenants. The principle of the Full Bench case of Najibulla v. Gulsher Khan (1) applies. I need not express any opinion as to whether a suit for recovery of possession over 7 bighas of land could have been maintained in spite of s. 32 of the Tenancy Act; because that question does not arise in this case.

(1) 1 Ind. Cas. 594; 31 A. 348; 6 A. L. J. 343.

In my opinion there is no force in the appeal and it is hereby dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 63, 73—Assets, when can be regarded as realized—Rateable distribution—Decrees of inferior Courts stayed by superior Court—Decree-holders in inferior Courts, whether entitled to rateable distribution—Procedure—Practice, uniformity in, desirability of.

Where a sale of property belonging to the judgment-debtor is held in execution of a decree, the mere deposit of the earnest money cannot be said to be assets realized by the sale, within the meaning of s. 73 of the C. P. C., until the balance of the purchase-money is deposited and the sale becomes a concluded transaction. Where, however, separate properties belonging to the judgment-debtor are sold separately and their sale-proceeds are realized separately, the sale of each lot must be regarded as having been completed when the whole of the balance of the purchase-money in respect of that lot is deposited in Court. Ramjash Agarwala v. Guru Charan Sen, 3 Ind. Cas. 105; 14 C. W. N. 396; 11 C. L. J. 69 and Maharaja of Burdwan v. Apurba Krishna Roy, 10 Ind. Cas. 527; 15 C. W. N. 872; 14 C. L. J. 50, referred to.

The duty of a superior Court under s. 63 of the C. P. C. is to consider and determine the rights of the attaching creditors in all the cases to which that section applies, whether they have applied to the superior Court or not. There is nothing in that section which requires that before an attaching creditor can have his claim to rateable distribution determined he must obtain a transfer of the decree to the superior Court and apply to that Court for execution. The holders of decrees of inferior Courts, therefore, whose execution has been stopped by a superior Court under s. 63, are entitled to rateable distribution under that section read with s. 73 without any further application. JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—The Rule No. 1082 of 1924 and the analogous application pending in this Court, raise the question as to the distribution of the assets, realized in execution of decree for money, by the Subordinate Judge of Nadia in Execution case No. 17 of 1924. The properties of the judgment-debtor, who is opposite party No. 9 in this Rule, were sold in three lots. Lot No 3 was sold for Rs. 283 on the 17th July 1924, and the whole of the purchase-money deposited on that very day. On the same day lot No. 4 was sold for Rs. 125 out of which Rs. 40 only was deposited and lot No. 5 was sold for Rs.7,800 out of which only Rs. 2,000 was paid on the date of sale. On the 29th July 1924, Rs. 5,800 the balance of the price of lot No. 5 was deposited and on the 1st of August 1924, Rs. 85, the balance of the price of lot No. 4 was deposited. Now the petitioner in the Rule, obtained his decree in the Court of the Subordinate Judge on the 30th July and made his application for rateable distribution on the 31st July 1924. The applicant, in an analogous petition, obtained his decree and made his application on the same days as the petitioner in the Rule. Besides these two petitioners it appears that a decree was obtained by opposite party No. 2 and was executed in Execution case No. 754 of 1924, in the Munsif's First Court at Nadia that opposite party No. 3 also obtained a decree in the same Court and executed it (Execution case No. 1284) and that opposite party No. 4 obtained a decree in the Munsif's Court at Ranaghat which was executed in execution case No. 1016 of 1924. It appears that the records for execution of all these three decrees passed by the Munsifs were transferred to the Court of the Subordinate Judge, by an order of the Court on the 17th July 1924, after the decree-holders in Execution Cases Nos. 754 and 1016 had applied for rateable distribution on the 7th and 4th of July 1924 respectively. Execution Case No. 1248 was transferred along with other two executions on the same day; but, it appears, no specific application for rateable distribution was made before such transfer. I ought to have stated that all the three decree-holders holding decrees of the Munsif's Court had attached the same properties of opposite party No. 9 in execution of their respective decrees, long before their executions were transferred to the Subordinate Judge's Court. The Subordinate Judge before whom all these applications were made for participation in the assets which were realized in the manner stated before, held that the petitioners were entitled to obtain rateable distribution only of the sum of Rs. 85 which was deposited after they had obtained their decrees and made their application for rateable distribution. As to the holders of the three decrees of the Munsif's Court by opposite parties Nos. 2, 3 and 4 the learned Subordinate Judge held that they were entitled to rateable distribution out of the entire sum realized after their decrees had been transferred to the Court. Against this order the Rule now before us was obtained and the analogous petition filed and the learned Vakil for the petitioners contended that their clients were entitled to rateable distribution of the whole of the sale proceeds on the ground that the sale proceeds were not realized until the last deposit was made. Their next contention was that at any rate their clients were entitled to rateable distribution out of Rs. 125, the price realized for property No. 4 on the ground that until the sum of Rs. 85 was deposited, the mere deposit of the earnest money could not be held to be assets of lot No. 4. Lastly, it was contended that opposite parties Nos. 2, 3 and 4 were not entitled to rateable distribution as there were no applications for execution made before the learned Subordinate Judge; and as regards one of the decree-holders, namely, the opposite party in No. 1248, there was no application for rateable distribution. As to the first point it appears to us that there is no ground for this extreme contention: the properties were sold separately their sale proceeds were realized separately and the sale of each lot was at any rate completed when the whole of the balance of the purchase-money was deposited in Court. As to the second contention, it appears to us that it is sound. The point is covered by express authorities. The earliest of these is the case of Ramjash Agarwala v. Guru Charan Sen (1) and the case of Maharaja of Burdwan v. Apurba Krishna Roy (2) also support this view. The mere deposit of the earnest money cannot be said to be the assets realized by the sale until the balance of the purchase-money was deposited and the sale becomes a concluded transaction. In this view we think that the petitioner and the applicant in the analogous case are entitled to the rateable distribution out of Rs. 125 realized for lot No. 4. The third point, namely whether the holders of decrees of any inferior Court the executions of whose decrees had been stayed by the superior Court under the provisions of s. 63, are entitled to rateable distribution of the assets realized by the superior Court under the provisions of s. 63 read with s. 73, C. P. C. As a matter of bare justice to the decree-holders of the inferior Courts whose execution cases were stayed under the provisions of s. 63, because the superior Court is the only Court which could realize assets they are entitled to participate in the assets as they were precluded on that ground from pursuing their own execution cases and bringing the properties which they had attached to sale. But the language of s. 63, which is substantially the same as of s. 285 of the old Code and the provisions of s. 73 which are substantially the same as the provisions of s. 295 of the old Code have been construed differently and in consequence there is a divergence of judicial decisions on the point. The view which has favoured the claim of the holders of the decrees of the inferior Courts, has in effect held that although the right to distribution arises out of provisions of s. 63, the distribution in effect is made under the provisions of s. 73 or at any rate on the principles laid down in it. The divergence of views relates to three points: Firstly, whether s. 63 does at all give any right to the holders of decrees of the inferior Courts to claim satisfaction of their decrees out of the proceeds realized by the superior Court and whether the determination of such claim is contemplated by s. 63, secondly, whether the holders of such decrees must, apply for execution of their decrees before the superior Court and also apply for rateable distribution to that Court before the assets are realized as provided by s. 73. The second point may be very shortly dealt with. If the holders of such decrees

(1) 3 Ind. Cas. 105; 14 C. W. N. 396; 11 C. L. J. 69.

(2) 10 Ind. Cas. 527; 15 C. W. N. 872; 14 C. L. J. 50.

have no right of claim under s. 63 and their only remedy is to apply under s. 73 then it is quite clear that they must comply with the provisions of s. 73 before they can claim benefits under that section. As to the first question, the real point is this :—Do the provisions of s. 63, which prevent the inferior Court from executing their decrees and direct that the sale should be held by the superior Court, leave the holders of such decrees to remedy of s. 73 which is open to any decree-holder of any Court or does s. 63 which provides for the methods for realization of the assets by the superior Court give power to that Court to distribute the assets realized by the sale of the attached properties? It would seem unreasonable to suppose that s. 63 which imposes a bar against the holders of the decrees of the inferior Courts does not contemplate a method by which such decree-holders can ask the superior Court to give them their share of the assets realized by the sale of the properties which they had attached. This question arose in the case of Clark v. Alexander (3) It is a judgment of Mr. Justice Sale sitting on the Original Side and the learned Judge had long experience of the practice on the Original Side of this Court, therefore, his view on a matter of practice is of considerable weight, the present question being really and ultimately a question of practice. The learned Judge at page 203* laid down the Rule in these terms:—" To give s. 295 the signification contended for by the plaintiff would, in my opinion, have the effect of altogether nullifying s. 285. The duty of the superior Court under s. 285 is to consider and determine the rights of the attaching creditors in all the cases to which that section applies whether, they have applied to the superior Court or not. There is nothing in that section which requries that before an attaching creditor can have his claim determined he must obtain a transfer of the decree to the superior Court and apply to that Court for execution. If that were required it would operate with great hardship in the case of creditors for small amounts who had attached through the Small Cause Court, especially where the attached property was of small value. The extra expense that would be incurred by reason of the transfer to the superior Court and the re-attachment through that Court would in some cases deprive the Small Cause Court creditors of all benefit arising under their attachments and the result in those cases would be, at the least, the practical postponement of the rights of such creditors to those of creditors for larger amounts who had attached through the superior Court. It certainly would be a remarkable result if, where property is attached under s. 285, the superior Court, while required by that section to consider the rights of all attaching creditors, irrespective of the Courts by which the attachments were made, should at the same time be restricted so as to have no alternative but to apply the rule of exclusion contained in s. 295 to all creditors except those who have applied to the superior Court prior to realization, and so came strictly within the terms of that section. Such a result cannot have been intended, and may be avoided if ss. 285 and 295 be read together and due effect be given to each." The learned Judge then considered all the authorities then available and referred to three cases of this Court. Apart from the previous authority it appears to us that the reasons upon which the Rule is based are convincing unless there is anything in s. 63 which clearly debars the superior Court from doing what is manifest justice to the holder of decrees of inferior Courts. There is no reason why this Rule based upon long practice should not be followed. Turning to s. 63 of the Code the words " Court which shall receive or realize such property and shall determine any claim thereto and any objection to the attachment thereof shall be the Court of the highest grade." It would be putting a very narrow construction upon the word " shall determine any claim thereto," that is, to the property, to hold that they exclude the determination of the claim of the holders of the decrees of the inferior Court while providing that all the assets should go into the hands of this superior Court. It may be conceded that all the claims coming under O. XXI, r. 60 whether made before the superior Court or the inferior Court should be determined by the former. The determination of the rights of the decree-holders inter se is not in any way excluded, and for the reasons given by the learned Judge, whose words I have quoted above I think that this practice is based upon considerations of justice and simplicity. This question is really more a matter of procedure and practice than of substantive right. The right of all the decree-holders to a rateable distribution is undoubted, the only question is as to the procedure to be adopted. In these matters uniformity is of great practical importance and when a practice has been established it should not be departed from even if there may be some doubt as to its strict soundness. Sir Lawrence Jenkins in the case of Mandal & Co. v. Fazul Ellahi (4) says: "Uniformity on questions of procedure under the Code is of such importance that I think I ought to follow the decision." This view of Mr. Justice Sale was adopted in the case of Bejoy Singh Dudhuria v. Hukam Chand (5) by Mr. Justice Ghose sitting with Mr. Justice Brett, both of whom had considerable experience in these matters. In that case the learned Subordinate Judge sent for the execution case from the Court of the Munsif and without further application made a rateable distribution amongst all the decree-holders including the decree-holder of his own Court. This was done under ss. 285 and 295 read together. A similar view was taken in the case of Harbhagat Das Marwari v. Anandaram Marwari (6) by Mr. Justice O'Kinealy sitting with Mr. Justice Rampini; both of whom had along experience of the practice of the District Courts and those learned Judges, even without referring to the earlier cases, took the same view. The only case in which a contrary view was taken is the case of Ramjash Agarwala v. Guru Charan Sen (1). In that case Mr. Justice Mookerjee and Mr. Justice Vincent held that the holders of decrees of inferior Courts were not entitled to participate in the sale proceeds unless they strictly comply with the provisions of s. 295 and the learned Judges further held that s. 285 had no application to the question of determination of the rights of the decree-holders but the word "claim" in s. 285 was limited to the claim under s. 278 of the old Code The learned Judges there decided the case in the light of the authority of the case reported as Bejoy Singh Dudhuria v. Hukam Chand (5), but did not follow the rule laid down by Mr. Justice Ghose that the Subordinate Judge was right in making the distribution even in the absence of any application either for execution or for rateable distribution filed before the superior Court. Again the learned Judges were not prepared to differ from the rule laid down by Mr. Justice Sale, but observed: "That the whole question shall have to be re-considered in a case in which the question arises in future". The learned Judges observed as follows: "But we need not express any opinion upon the question whether the decision in Clark v. Alexander (3) may or may not be justified on the grounds suggested, nor need we discuss whether that decision may not require re-consideration when another case precisely similar to it, in fact, arises." The view of Mr. Justice Sale was, it appears, also followed in effect in the case of Krishna Kumar Ghose v. Pasupati Banerjee (7) by Mr. Justice N. R. Chatterjea sitting with Mr. Justice Newbould. Although in that case their Lordships did not wish to differ from the case of Ramjash Agarwala v. Guru Charan Sen (1), they held that the decree-holder of the inferior Court in which the attachment was prior to the attachment made by the superior Court was entitled to rateable distribution although application either for execution or for rateable distribution appears to have been made before the superior Court, but not in respect of the decree in which the attachment was subsequent. It is not necessary to discuss that distinction for the purpose of the present case. It is enough to point out that rateable distribution was allowed to holders of decrees of the inferior Courts without any application specially made under s. 295. The decision of Mr. Justice Sale is still good law and although attempts have been made for distinguishing it, it has never been dissented from, much less overruled. On the whole, therefore, on a review of the decisions cited above we do not see any difficulty in following the Rule laid down by Mr. Justice Sale and followed in the subsequent cases that the holders of decrees of inferior Courts whose execution had been stopped by the superior Court under s 63, are entitled to rateable distribution under that section read with s. 73 without any further applications. The decree of the inferior Courts were transferred to the superior Court to which applications for rateable distribution were made in writing in the Cases Nos. 754 and 1016. The Rule laid down by Mr. Justice Sale was followed by Mr. Justice Ghose and Mr. Justice O'Kinealy, and it seems that no further application before the superior Court was thought necessary.

(3) 21 C. 200; 10 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 766.

In the result, therefore, we vary the order of the learned Subordinate Judge with respect to the sum of Rs. 85 and the petitioner is entitled to share in the rateable distribution not only of Rs. 40 but also of Rs. 125, the entire proceeds of the property No. 4. Under the circumstances we make no order as to costs. This judgment governs the application also.

Mr. S. N. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The sole question to be determined in this appeal is one of law and arises under the following circumstances. The property now in suit is a piece of land on which originally stood a house. The house and other properties belonged to one Gayadin. He was succeeded by his wife Musammat Parbati. Musammat Parbati died and her daughter Musammat Rajwanti succeeded to a life-estate. The appellant in this appeal is a male agnate of Gayadin and is the actual reversioner to his estate on the death of Musammat Rajwanti which happened before the institution of the suit, out of which this appeal has arisen. On the 20th of September 1915, Musammat Rajwanti and the appellant entered into an agreement by which Musammat Rajwanti was declared to be the absolute owner of the house and it was definitely stated that she could do anything she liked with the property. Musammat Rajwanti, before her death, on the 16th of January 1922 disposed of the house by way of sale in favour of the present respondent. The present respondent instituted the suit to obtain a declaration that he was the owner of the site by virtue of his purchase.

The appellant contended, inter alia, that Musammat Rajwanti had only a life-interest and she could not make a valid alienation. To this the respondent replied that the appellant having himself been a party to the agreement of the 20th of September 1915, he could not reprobate the contract and is estopped from denying the plaintiff's title.

The respondent's contention on this point has found favour with the Courts below and the only question to be determined is whether the appellant is not estopped from contending that Musammat Rajwanti was the absolute owner of the property and could sell it.

There is a vast amount of literature on the question of estoppel in cases arising under circumstances, more or less similar to the present ones. No useful purpose would be served by examining all the cases on the point. Each case was decided on the peculiar facts under which it arose. The principle, however, was definitely laid down in the Privy Council case of Kanhai Lal v. Brij Lal (1). The principle therein laid down was that where a man, who became ultimately a reversioner, had entered into a compromise in the life-time of a holder of life-interest, he was precluded from disputing the validity of the compromise. This case was followed in this Court in the case of Bahadur Singh v. Ram Bahadur (2). A similar view was taken in Full Bench case of Fateh Singh v. Thakur Rukmini Rawan (3). In my opinion the principle applies with full force to the case before me and I am clear that the Courts below were right in holding that the appellant was estopped from denying the plaintiff's title.

The appeal fails and it is hereby dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

The sale was subsequently set aside at the suit of the patnidars and the zemindars were held liable for the costs of the patnidars and the patnidars recovered these costs from the plaintiff The defendant was compelled to pay the costs of the auction-purchaser in the patnidar's suit. Plaintiff brought a suit against the defendant for contribution in respect of the costs which had been paid by the plaintiff:

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by defendant No. 4 against a decision of the District Judge of Murshidabad confirming a decision of the Munsif. The facts shortly stated are as follows. The plaintiffs and the defendants were joint owners of a zemindari. The zemindari was let out in patni and was brought to sale by the zemindars for arrears of putni rent and it was purchased by a third party. The patnidars sued to set aside the patni sale and the sale was set aside and the zemindars were held liable for the costs of the patnidars and the patnidars recovered these costs from some of the zemindars who are the plaintiffs in the present suit and the present suit was brought against defendant No. 4 and the other defendants for contribution in respect of the costs which had been paid by the plaintiffs. Defendant No. 4 had been compelled to pay the costs of the auction-purchaser in the putnidar's suit and accordingly he contended in these proceedings that he was entitled to set-off as against the claim for contribution the sum which he had paid for the costs of the auction-purchaser. The Munsif disallowed the claim for a set-off for reasons which are not very clear but which apparently are related to some question which arose and as to which there is not a definite finding with regard to the withdrawal of the balance of the amount deposited by the auction-purchaser at the time when he purchased the patni. The lower Appellate Court has agreed with the Munsif's decision and has refused to allow the set-off which defendant No. 4 claims. Hence this appeal.

Now, in our opinion, defendant No. 4 is clearly entitled to set-off as against the plaintiffs' claim the amount which he has paid to the auction-purchaser which represents the liability of the plaintiffs in respect of the auction-purchaser's costs and we do not see how this claim of defendant No. 4 can be resisted. No doubt defendant No. 4 put his claim too high. He is only entitled to a set-off in respect of the actual liability of the present plaintiffs for the costs of the auction-purchaser.

The appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the case is sent back to the Munsif in order that he may ascertain the amount to be set-off that is the amount which defendant No. 4 is entitled to set off against the claim in suit upon the lines indicated in this judgment.

The appellant will be entitled to his costs of this appeal in proportion to his success.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), s. 51—Res judicata—Decision on question of law—Ejectment suit.

A decision on a point of law does not operate as res juzicata if the cause of action in the subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit, as often happens in cases of recurring liability or even in ejectment suits. On the other hand if the cause of action is the same the decision would operate as res judicata.

Param Hansman Tewari v. Dasrathman Tewari, 60 Ind. Cas. 770; 19 A. L. J. 992; 43 A. 445, relied on.

The right to eject a tenant accrues afresh every year and a previous decision in an ejectment suit between the parties that the suit is not maintainable in a Revenue Court does not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit, it being open to the Revenue Court in a subsequent suit to say that on a correct view of the law it has jurisdiction to entertain the suit.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 23rd March 1923.

Mr. Gulzari Lal, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendant's appeal arising out of a suit for ejectment. Previous to this litigation in 1910 a suit for ejectment in respect of this very plot was fought out between the parties. It was dismissed on the ground that such a suit was not maintainable in a Revenue Court. That decision was based on certain rulings of the Board of Revenue which were then in force. Subsequent to this it appears that the Allahabad High Court in the case of Param Hansman Tewari v. Dasrathman Tewari (1) has taken a view that a suit under s. 58 would be maintainable in a Revenue Court. This ruling has since been followed by the Board of Revenue. The result is that under the rulings which are now in force the suit is maintainable. The learned Advocate for the appellant concedes this.

The Court of first instance, however, dismissed the suit holding that it was barred by the principle of res judicata. It remarked that although the present conception of the law may be different nevertheless as between the parties the ruling that the suit was not maintainable was final.

The learned District Judge has taken a contrary view. He has held that the principle of res judicata cannot apply to this case. It is obvious that if the plaintiff were to go to the Civil Court her suit would be thrown out by the Civil Court on the ground that she ought to go to the Revenue Court. The Civil Court will, of course, not be bound by the previous Revenue Court decision and would naturally follow the view of this High Court.

The decision in the previous case turned entirely on an incorrect view of the law. It is true that an issue of law may be res judicata in certain circumstances. The rulings on the point are numerous and some of them are not easily reconcilable, but it may be laid down broadly that a decision on a point of law does not operate as res judicata if the cause of action in a subsequent suit is different from that in the former suit as often happens in the cases of recurring liability, such as maintenance allowance or even ejectment suits. On the other hand if the cause of action is the same the decision would be res judicata. This was clearly laid down in the case of Alemunnissa Chowdhurani v. Shama Charan Roy (2). In the present case the right to eject a tenant accrues afresh every year. Following the Calcutta ruling I, therefore, hold that the previous decision that a suit of this kind was not maintainable in a Revenue Court cannot operate as res judicata. It is open to the Revenue Court to say that in the correct view of the law which now prevails it has jurisdiction to entertain it.

In these circumstances the suit was rightly decreed. The appeal is accordingly dismissed but without any order as to costs as no one appears for the respondent.

Where a Hindu widow and the next reversioner join in conveying a property by which they transfer the absolute interest in the property, the reversioner is estopped, after he comes into possession, from challenging the transaction. [p. 791, col. 1.]

There is no distinction between the reversioner giving consent to a transfer by a widow and the reversioner joining the widow in the transfer. There is not much difference, for practical purposes, between a consent given by word of mouth or conduct or by attestation of a document and by joining in the conveyance with the widow which is sufficient evidence of consent. [p. 791, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 31st May 1922, modifying that of the Munsif, Additional Court, Sudharam, dated the 26th July 1920.

Dr. Sarat Chandra Basak and Babu Gopal Chandra Das, for the Appellant.

Babu Bhagirath Chandra Das, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—The suit which gave rise to this appeal was brought by the plaintiff for recovery of khas possession of the land of the site of a hut described in the schedule to the plaint after establishment of the plaintiff's raiyati title to it. The plaintiff's case is that the property in suit is included within a holding which belonged to Tarini Charan the father of the respondent. He died leaving a widow Raj Kumari and a son the present respondent. The mother and the son jointly executed a deed of sale in favour of the plaintiff on the 21st Baisakh 1324, and it was agreed thereunder that the hut would be removed by the defendants within 15 days. They having failed to do so the plaintiff instituted the present suit against both Raj Kumari and Rajendra the respondent. After the institution of the suit Raj Kumari died and Raj Kumar was the sole defendant on the record as the heir and successor of his father. The First Court gave a decree to the plaintiff holding that the respondent is estopped by the transaction as shown by the kobala of the 21st Baisakh 1324, from denying the plaintiff's title. On appeal the learned District Judge has taken a different view and has held that under s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act the reversionary interest of the respondent who was then a mere reversioner could not be transferred and so the plaintiff purchased nothing more than the eight-annas share which had accrued to the respondent on his father's death and that his claim in respect of the widow's limited interest in the remaining eight-annas share ought to fail. I should mention that Tarini left a widow Raj Kumari and two sons one of the sons died in the lifetime of the mother who inherited his share in the property left by Tarini and had a Hindu widow's estate in it.

The sole question, therefore, which arises and which has been ably argued on both sides before us is whether the respondent is estopped from challenging the sale to which he was a party. The learned Advocate for the appellant contends that the respondent is estopped from denying the validity of the sale and has relied upon a decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Mahdeo Prosad Singh v. Mata Prasad (1). In that case in a very considered judgment the learned Judge on facts similar to the present case held that the reversioner was affected by the doctrine of estoppel and was not entitled to challenge the validity of the deed to which he was a party. There the widow and the reversioner jointly executed a deed of gift in favour of the defendant. It was held that the plaintiff was estopped from challenging the transaction. Apparently a contrary view has been taken in the case of Bai Parvati v. Dayabhai Manchharam (2). In that case the widow and one of the reversioners jointly executed a deed of gift. It was held by the learned Judges that the deed was good only as regards the life-estate of the widow and was bad as regards the reversioner's chance of succession under s. 6, Transfer of Property Act. There being a conflict between these two cases it is necessary to examine them carefully. In the Allahabad case almost all the cases bearing on this point were considered and on a consideration of those cases the learned Judges came to the conclusion that the weight of authority was entirely in support of the view that where the widow and the next reversioner joined in conveying a property by which they transferred the absolute interest in it the reversioner cannot after he comes into possession challenge the transaction under the rule of estoppel. The learned Judges considered the case of Bai Parvati and attempted to distinguish it though I do not personally think that there is any real distinction in principle between these two cases. The learned Judges of the Allahabad High Court expressed themselves with reference to the Bombay case that "if it was intended to lay down the general proposition that in no case a reversioner can by his act or conduct estop himself from challenging a transfer after he had succeeded to the estate, then we would not agree with the decision." As at present advised, I am inclined to follow the Allahabad decision in preference to the Bombay case. In the Bombay case the learned Judges proceeded simply upon s. 6, Transfer of Property Act, on the rule of non-transferability of spes successionis. They have not considered the question of estoppel. It was case of gift and the question of change of position of the donee by the act or conduct of the donor would not have arisen. The present case is not a case of this description. It is a case of sale for consideration. I am not, therefore, called upon in this case to express any opinion as to whether in a case of gift the law of estoppel applies as in the case of transfer for consideration. In the Allahabad case, too, though there was a gift the learned Judges in the course of judgment observe that there was a lease previous to the gift for which a sum of Rs. 2,000 was paid as salami and, therefore, it could not be said that the gift was wholly without consideration.

It has been argued before us by the respondent that there is a distinction between a reversioner giving consent to a transfer by a widow and a reversioner joining a widow in the transfer. It is said that in one case the widow transfers the absolute interest and the reversioner sanctions it by giving his assent. In the other case the transfer is nothing more than of her life-interest and the reversioner joins in the conveyance in transferring the reversionary interest which under the law he is not competent to do. To my mind there does not seem to be much distinction; at any rate that distinction cannot be applied to the facts of this case. In either case it cannot be said that the widow has any absolute interest and the purchaser cannot purchase the absolute interest from the widow but with the consent of the reversioner. There is not much difference for practical purposes between a consent given by word of mouth or conduct or by attestation of the document and by joining in the conveyance with the widow which is sufficient evidence of his consent.

This brings us to the next contention of the learned Vakil for the respondent viz., that the consent of the reversioner to a transaction by the widow clothes it with validity only in a case where the transfer is made ostensibly for legal necessity; in other words, if the widow transfers the property in which she has a life-estate for legal necessity and the reversioner assents to the transfer his conduct presumes that there was legal necessity; and in support of this contention numerous cases have been cited; but it is not necessary to deal with this point as it has been settled beyond controversy: Rangasami Gounden v. Nachiapa Gounden (3). The cases which have laid down that view including the Full Bench case of Debi Prasad Chowdhry v. Golap Bhagat (4) have proceeded on a rule of evidence holding that the conduct of the reversioner in assenting to the transfer affords sufficient evidence of the existence of legal necessity unless it is rebutted by more cogent proof. In these cases, therefore, the question of estoppel did not arise and was not considered. It may also be remarked in this connection that in the cases which have been placed before us the transaction to which the reversioner assented has been challenged by some one other than the assenting reversioner, who succeeded to the property on the death of the widow.

The third point raised by the learned Vakil for the respondent is that there can be no estoppel on a point of law and that by operation of the rule one cannot be held to be bound by a transaction which under the law he is not competent to enter into. Before dealing with this question it is necessary to consider the tenor of the kobala executed by the respondent and his mother in favour of the plaintiff. It recites how the right accrued to the vendors. They stated that on the death of Tarini Charan (father) and Gobinda Kumar (son), Raj Kumari for her life and Rajendra as his heir and reversionary heir became the malik in possession of the maliki share in the properties mentioned in the schedule. It is further stated, "Accordingly we do execute this out and out deed of sale in respect of our interest in the raiyati jama.....In lieu of the said sum of money (Rs. 2,000) we sell to you by means of this kobala the immoveable properties mentioned in the schedule below free from incumbrances owned and held by us..... what right, title and interest we had in the same do accrue to you from to-day..... we and our other heirs have or will have no right, title or interest or claim in connection with the same." Reading the document as a whole it is not disputed, and it appears to be, that what the parties intended to dispose of was the interest of Tarini in the raiyati which was then in the possession of the widow in life-estate to the extent of eight-annas and to which the son has had a reversionary title. The plaintiff purchased the entire interest in the property by payment of proper consideration for it and the executants sold the entire interest held at that time by these two persons. From this transaction it is clear that one party intended to purchase and the other to part with the absolute ownership of the property. In my opinion it does not lie in the mouth of Raj Kumar now to turn round and say 'though I intended to sell to you whatever interest I had in the property and received proper consideration for it, the sale so far as my interest was concerned was bad in law and I am entitled to re-gain possession of it'. That is a position which is not defensible in law or in equity and the rule of estoppel is clearly applicable to such a case. It should be noted that the deed recites that the property was sold to pay off certain debts of and decrees against the respondent.

The question with regard to the effect of the assent of the reversioner to a transfer by a widow not for legal necessity came up for consideration in this Court in the case of Raj Bullubh Sen v. Oomesh Chander Rooz (5). There a Hindu widow with the consent of the then reversioner transferred a property by a deed of gift. It was argued that the validity of an alienation by a widow depends upon legal necessity and the consent of the next heir is of value not as validating the alienation but as the strongest evidence of the necessity. The defendant in that case was the heir of the reversioner who had assented to the gift but died after the death of the widow. Jackson, J., observed as follows: "I would hold the defendant to be concluded not on the ground that he is bound by the act or consent of his father ..... but upon this ground, that the act of the widow sanctioned by the concurrence of the then next heir and reversioner, was in itself a valid ground."

In this connection reference may also be made to s. 43, Transfer of Property Act, the principle of which to my mind applies to this case. The respondent, no doubt, did not claim any right other than what he possessed at that time, but what he purported to sell was the interest he has or would have in the property and which he was competent to sell after the right to the property had accrued to him, after the death of the mother. He cannot now turn round and assert that when he sold the property he had not the right to do so. The principle of estoppel as embodied in s. 43 Transfer of Property Act, was applied by this Court in a case which went up in appeal to the Privy Council, and the judgment of the Judicial Committee is reported as Gur Narayan v. Sheo Lal Singh (6). Their Lordships reversed the decision of this Court not on the ground that s. 43, Transfer of Property Act, and s. 115 of the Evidence Act did not apply to the facts similar in principle to those of the present case but on the ground that in that case s. 43 Transfer of Property Act, and s. 115 of the Evidence Act did not apply as they held on the evidence that it was not proved that the vendee was induced to alter his position in consequence of the representation contained in the deed of conveyance by the reversioner. I accordingly hold that the respondent is estopped from denying the plaintiff's title to the land in suit and in this view I will allow the appeal.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in all the Courts.

Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act (II of 1918), s. 10A—Proceedings for restoration and compensation—Expiration of Act, effect of—Proceedings, whether can be continued—Temporary Statute, expiration of, effect of, on pending proceedings.

Civil proceedings which only arise by virtue of a temporary Statute cannot be continued after the expiration of the Statute. [p. 794, cols. 1 & 2.]

Proceedings which it is permissible for a tenant to take under s. 10A of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, are not primarily proceedings to recover either an ascertained sum or liquidated damages. They must be instituted in the first instance for the purposes of getting an order for restoration from the Court, and it is only when the Court is of opinion not only that the tenant in the circumstances of the case is entitled to restoration but also that the landlord has not acted bona fide, that the Court can direct the payment of compensation to be made to the tenant by the landlord. [p. 794, col. 2.]

Where, during the pendency of proceedings under s. 10A of the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act, for restoration to possession and compensation the Act expired:

Held, that the proceedings could not be continued and were ipso facto determined. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—Plaintiffs filed Suit No. 2244 of 1923 on June 14, 1923, to evict two defendants from the two shops in Nagdevi Street on the ground that they had given them notice to quit as the plaintiffs wanted the premises for their own use and requirements. On the faith of this requisition the defendants agreed to vacate under a consent-decree passed on August 24, 1923, by which they agreed to give possession by January 31, 1924.

On August 20, 1924, defendants took out a notice of motion asking the Court to pass an order not only for the restoration of the premises to the defendants on the ground that the plaintiffs' requisition had not been fulfilled, but also for damages on the ground that the requisition on which they were evicted was mala fide.

The learned Judge found that the requisition on which the plaint proceeded was a false requisition, and the occupation of the plaintiffs was a pretence. It was not, therefore, bona fide and in the ordinary circumstances the defendants would have been entitled on the notice of motion to an order for restoration, and also for an order for payment of such compensation as the Court might think fit. But unfortunately for the defendants the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act (No. II of 1918) with reference to business premises expired on August 31, 1924, and no order on the motion had been made before that date.

The question would arise then, whether the defendants' right to apply to the Court for restoration, and for payment of compensation, would survive the expiration of the Act. That must depend, as the Act was a temporary one upon the construction of the Act itself, because s. 7 of the Bombay General Clauses Act will not apply to temporary Statutes. The proviso to the first section of the Rent Act is as follows:—

"Provided that the expiration of this Act shall not render recoverable any rent which during the continuance thereof was irrecoverable or affect the right of a tenant to recover any sum which during the continuance thereof was under this Act recoverable by him."

That proviso originally was clearly intended to apply to the provisions of ss. 3 and 12. The learned Judge remarks:—

"The proviso, therefore, refers to two cases: (1) proceedings taken by a landlord and (2) proceedings taken by a tenant. The reference to proceedings taken by a landlord is evidently to s. 3 of the Act, and the restriction on the recovery of rent in excess of the standard rent is continued after the expiration of the Act in respect of rent accruing during the continuance of the Act. Then with reference to the proceedings taken by a tenant, the reference is evidently to s. 12 of the Act, which enacts that where a tenant has paid any sum on account of rent in excess of what is recoverable in case of standard rent he has a right to recover that sum from his landlord."

It has been argued that that proviso would also include the right of a tenant to ask the Court for payment of compensation under the provisions of s. 10A. Now s. 10A was inserted by Bombay Act XIV of 1920, s. 2, and it was argued by the respondents in support of the judgment, that if it had been intended to reserve the rights of the tenant to ask the Court for payment of compensation under s. 10A after the expiration of the Act, the proviso to s. 1 would have been amended. It seems most probable that the question whether the rights of a tenant under s. 10A survived the expiration of the Act was not considered by the Legislature.

But even if that question was not considered, the defendants might still succeed if they could bring themselves within the proviso to s. 1. Before I deal with that question, I will deal with the question whether when proceedings have commenced before the expiration of the Act, they can be competent after the expiration of the Act in spite of their not coming within any proviso reserving the rights of a tenant to continue proceedings then pending. Reference has been made to a passage in Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XXVII, page 158, para. 301, where it is stated that if proceedings taken under a temporary Statute are not terminated before the period of the Statute expires, then on the expiration of the Statute the proceedings ipso facto are determined. Various authorities are quoted for that proposition, the earliest being Miller's case (1) and no case has been cited to us in which civil proceedings of this nature, which only arise by virtue of a temporary Statute, have been held competent to be continued after the expiration of the Statute.

The fact, therefore, that these proceedings were commenced on August 20, 1924, before the expiration of the Statute, will not by itself avail the defendants. They must come, if at all, within the proviso. It has been contended that as this is a suit for an unliquidated sum to be ascertained as compensation for the plaintiff's want of bona fides, it cannot, in any event, come within the proviso, which only applies to any sum recoverable by the tenants under the Act during the continuance thereof. I doubt very much whether it can be said that an action by a tenant to recover rent, which should not have been paid under the provisions of s. 12, would be a suit for an ascertained sum, because although he might mention the amount of the claim in suit, the actual amount due could only be ascertained by means of an enquiry. However, I quite agree that such an action would be of a different character from an action for unliquidated damages and I think the answer to the appellants' case lies in the fact that proceedings which it is permissible for a tenant to take under s. 10A are not primarily proceedings to recover either an ascertained sum or liquidated damages. They must be instituted in the first instance for the purposes of getting an order for restoration from the Court, and, it is only when the Court is of opinion not only that the defendant in the circumstances of the case is entitled to restoration, but also that the plaintiff has not acted bona fide, that the Court can direct payment of compensation to be made to the tenant by the londlord. If the appellants' contention were correct, then even after the expiration of the Act, the defendants on proving want of bona fides on behalf of the landlord in turning them out, would be entitled to ask the Court to grant them compensation, although there would be no jurisdiction in the Court to restore the defendants to the premises. But it is perfectly clear that no right is given to the tenant to apply to the Court for compensation only, irrespective of whether he can get restoration or not.

We think, therefore, this particular question was not in the mind of the Legislature when s. 10A was inserted in the original Act, and that the rights of a tenant to recover compensation under the section after the expiration of the Act were not reserved. The appeal, therefore, will be dismissed with costs.

Lunacy Act (IV of 1912), s. 62—"Residing", meaning of—Actual stay, whether necessary.

If a person has a private house to which he may resort in a certain town he has a residence there, and therefore "resides" there within the meaning of s. 62 of the Lunacy Act even if he goes there only occasionally. For the purposes of this section a person may have several residences and may be residing in more places than one.

First appeal from an order of the Additional District Judge, Cawnpore.

Mr. M. N. Raina, for the Applicant-Appellant.

Mr. Majid Ali, for the Opposite Parties-Respondents

JUDGMENT.—We think that there has possibly been a miscarriage of justice in this case and that we must remit the matter for a hearing in the lower Court. It is entirely the fault of the applicant, or rather his misfortune, because at the critical moment he was absent through illness. The Judge did not believe that he was ill, because he said, that there was only the statement of the Pleader to support it. The Judge does not say why he thinks, a man should keep away from an important appointment of this kind which he himself had started, unless there was some insuperable obstacle which prevented his attendance. As the matter was only a miscellaneous case and could be disposed of on any convenient day the learned Judge ought to have adjourned it to another day or dismissed it altogether for default. Instead of that he did just the worst thing he could have done. He started a kind of enquiry on imperfect material. We must, therefore return it to the learned Judge to find as a fact whether Billhaur in Cawnpore, was on the 25th September 1923 a residence of the lady in question. People do not always realise the true meaning of the word "residing" for the purpose of jurisdiction. In this case s. 62 requires the Court to be the District Court within whose jurisdiction such person is residing. That does not necessarily mean that she slept the night on the particular day when the application was filed in the jurisdiction. A person may have several residences and may be residing in more than one place for the purpose of jurisdiction. If a person has a private house to which he may resort in Calcutta, he has a residence there, and, therefore, resides there even if he only goes there once in five years. He may have a residence in Kashmir which he prefers to Calcutta. The word used by the Legislature to get over that difficulty when it desires to specify one place only as the place of service, or for establishing jurisdiction, is the word "ordinarily," that is to say, the place where a person ordinarily resides. Then that confines the Court to the duty of ascertaining the ordinary residence. Here it is sufficient if she had any residence even although she was not staying at the time. Now the evidence on the record throws a heavy burden on the party objecting, not to show that she had a residence elsewhere, but to show that she had no sort of residence in Cawnpore. A sale-deed alleged to be executed by her only one month before the application, namely, the sale-deed, dated 18th August 1923, describes her as a resident of Billhaur in Cawnpore, at present in Kanauj. Unless the Judge comes to the conclusion that, by a curious but true coincidence, there has been a complete abandonment of this residence between the 18th of Augnst, and 25th of September, the lady is really estopped from denying that this place is not a residence of hers within the jurisdiction. It is a question of fact, on which the evidence appears to us to be all one way, even though she may also have a residence in Kanauj. We, therefore, remit the case to the learned Judge to hear and determine on these facts as to whether this residence in the sale-deed is a residence of her in Cawnpore and, if it is, to dispose of the application. The Judge will listen to any further evidence that may be tendered by either party on this question.

Calcutta Rent Act (III of 1920), s. 15—Application for fixing standard rent—Premises originally let as part of larger premises—Rent Collector, power of, to make enquiry determining proportionate rent of premises in dispute.

Where an application is made for fixing the standard rent in respect of premises which were originally let as part of larger premises, the Rent Collector has power to make an enquiry as to what portion of the rent originally payable in respect of the entire premises can be allocated to the premises in respect of which the application is made, so as to determine the question whether he has jurisdiction to entertain the application at all.

Babus Mohendra Nath Roy, Sitaram Banerjee and Sudhansu Kumar Sen, for the Petitioners.

Babu Susil Chandra Ghose, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was granted calling upon the Rent Controller to show cause why a certain order of the 22nd September 1924 dismissing the petitioners' application for standardisation of rent in respect of premises No. 26 Khangrapatty Road should not be set aside and the Rent Controller directed to deal with the application on its merits. The petitioners took a lease for 10 years of premises Nos. 23, 23-1, 24, 25 and 26 Khangrapatty Street at a rental of Rs. 325 a month. The petitioners let out four of these premises in November 1918 at a rental of Rs. 266 and used premises No. 26 for residental purposes. On the expiry of the lease on the 1st of February 1924 the landlord who is the opposite party before us took possession of premises Nos. 23, 23-1, 24 and 25 Khangrapatty Street and demanded rent at Rs. 250 a month for premises No. 26. The petitioners thereupon applied before the Rent Controller for fixing of standard rent for premises No. 26. The Rent Controller dismissed the application on the 22nd September last holding that he had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter as the whole of the premises were let out on the 1st of November 1918 at a rent exceeding Rs. 250 a month and that by virtue of the last amending Rent Act premises, the rent of which exceeded Rs. 250 a month on the 1st of November 1918, were excluded from the further operation of the Calcutta Rent Act. We think that this view is incorrect. It may, for the purpose of fixing of standard rent, be necessary for him to decide what portion of the rent of premises in excess of Rs. 250 a month was to be allocated in respect of premises No. 26. But even so we do not think that the last amending Calcutta Rent Act precludes him from making any such enquiry if it is necessary for the determination of a question such as arises on the present petition. Premises No. 26 were let out at a rental of Rs. 250. These would clearly fall within the provisions of the Calcutta Rent Act as now subsisting and this it seems to us gives the Rent Controller jurisdiction to deal with the matter.

We accordingly make the Rule absolute and the Rent Controller will deal with the application on its merits.

We make no order as to costs.

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss. 13, 87—Pro-note payable to specified person, whether negotiable instrument—Material alteration in pro-note after execution, effect of.

A promissory-note payable to a specified person only is a negotiable instrument within the meaning of s. 13 of the Negotiable Instruments Act and is subject to the provisions of s. 87 of the Act. Where, therefore, a material alteration is made in a promissory-note after its execution without the knowledge or consent of the executant the note becomes void.

Civil revision from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Mirzapur, dated the 11th of July 1924.

Mr. Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. Hamid Hasan, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff brought the suit out of which this application arises to recover Rs. 300 principal and Rs. 186 interest due on a promissory-note executed by the defendant.

It has been found by both Courts and it is indeed apparent on the face of the document itself that originally there was no agreement to pay interest and that the agreement to pay interest at Rs. 2 per cent. per mensem was interpolated after the note was written. Both Courts have found that this was done without the knowledge or consent of the defendant. The Courts, however, have held that s. 87 of the Negotiable Instruments Act which renders a negotiable instrument absolutely void where a material alteration has been made in it does not apply, because this particular note "is not" a "negotiable instrument for it makes the payment due to a specified person only." This finding is opposed to the Negotiable Instruments Act, s. 13 as amended by Act VIII of 1919. This document is clearly a negotiable instrument within the meaning of Explanation I to s. 13 as amended by Act VIII of 1919. Reliance has been placed by the learned Counsel for the opposite party on the case of Makhdum Bakhsh v. Shaukat Ali (1). That was a decision of 1915 before the Act was amended.

It seems to me that as the law now stands the Court had no option but to dismiss the suit on its finding that the promissory-note sued upon had been materially altered.

I, therefore, allow this application, set aside the decrees of the Courts below and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout.

Miscellaneous application under s. 66 (3) of the Income Tax Act.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—In this case notice was issued to the Income Tax Commissioner to show cause why he should not state a case. The order was made ex parte on the application of the applicant. In future when the new rules come into force the applicant will have to establish a good ground on a point of law before the Court to whom he applies, before notice is issued to the Income Tax Commissioner at all. The result of the procedure was that the Commissioner had to show cause on the merits and to instruct the Government Advocate for that purpose, and the hearing was really such as would have taken place if the Commissioner had been required to state a case. In fact, the matter was gone into as though a case had been stated in order to ascertain whether there was a point on which a case could be stated. In the result the application was dismissed on the ground that it was impossible to frame a question of law on which a case could be stated, and on the application of the Government Advocate the Court hearing the matter directed the applicant to pay the costs of the application including the fees certified by the Government Advocate. The Court did that after hearing both parties for reasons which it considered adequate at the time.

An application is now made to us to reduce the amount after issuing notice to the Government Advocate on a sort of rehearing. We cannot do that. By s. 66 (6) costs are in the discretion of the Court. The Court having exercised its discretion is functus officio and cannot re-open the matter. All questions relating to costs and all submissions in which costs are involved must be argued and decided at the time of the hearing and before a final order is drawn up.

The learned Counsel suggested that there was a special ground for exercising the discretion because under s. 66 (2) his client had been compelled by the Act to deposit another sum of Rs. 100 at an earlier stage when he required the Commissioner to refer the question of law to the High Court. The High Court has no jurisdiction, of course, over this sum of Rs. 100 which the Commissioner has received. He has, no doubt, full power to deal with it in his own way and in accordance with the rules of his office. Any application in misericordiam must be made to the Income Tax Commissioner if any rebate of this sum is desired. No doubt, in the exercise of its discretion under s. 66 (6) the High Court could take into account the fact that the assessee had had to pay Rs. 100 to the Income Tax Commissioner, but in the great majority of cases it would appear to be quite irrelevant to the question of the costs of disposing of the matter by the High Court as it relates to something antecedent and the effect of taking it into account would really be indirectly to reduce the fee which the Government Advocate may have certified or which is really payable to him under the Act and Rules. We see no reason to interfere and dismiss the application.

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—Defendants Nos. 3 to 5 appeal and take two exceptions to the decree as passed by the lower Appellate Court.

The first is that that Court ought not to have modified the decree of the Munsif by giving the plaintiffs a decree for the lands in suit. The plaintiffs claimed the tank and its banks as belonging to Khatian No. 1296, whereas the defendants alleged that they belonged to their Khatian No. 1268. The learned Munsif found that the khatian as a matter of fact supported the plaintiff's case and that it showed that the tank and its banks belonged to Dag No 1269. But in the Settlement map the figure 1268 has been placed in such a way as may be said to cover one of the banks of the tank. He has, therefore, passed a decree in the following terms: "Plaintiffs' rent-free raiyati right to Dag No. 1269 of the khatian (Ex. 5) will be declared and the plaintiffs will recover khas possession thereof." He has not exactly found what lands Dag No. 1269 covers in but he has referred to the khatian which will clearly lay down that it covered the tank and its banks. The decree should not have been passed in this form leaving that question as to the extent of Dag No. 1269 undermined though reference was made to the khatian. The point was taken before the learned Subordinate Judge in appeal and the issue arising out of the arguments addressed before him was "whether the plaintiffs have their alleged title to the disputed tank and its banks"? and his conclusion on this issue was that the disputed tank and its banks belonged to the plaintiffs' predecessor and that the disputed tanks and its banks were recorded in the Settlement Record of Rights in the name of Gurudas' widow Kalitara who held it in possession by right of inheritance. He further observed that the plaintiffs and their predecessors were clearly in possession of the tank for about 50 years. On these findings he came to the conclusion that the tank and its banks belonged to the plaintiffs as covered by Dag No. 1269. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that the plaintiffs' Pleader gave the Court to understand that they claimed Dag No. 1269 and nothing more and, therefore, they did not adduce sufficient evidence to show that the banks did not cover Dag No. 1269. This objection does not appear to have been substantiated by the record. Both the parties adduced evidence in support of their respective cases and the issue was whether the tank with its banks was included in the plaintiffs' dag or in the defendants' dag. The learned Subordinate Judge found that they were included in the plaintiffs' dag though he did not say so in so many words. We do not think that the decree as passed by the lower Appellate Court on this point is incorrect. This objection fails.

The next objection taken is that the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong in modifying the decree of the Munsif with regard to the status of the plaintiffs with reference to the land in suit. The Munsif found that the plaintiffs held the land rent free. But relying on the evidence and the fact that their predecessor was recorded banks rent free he declared the plaintiffs' right as niskar raiyati that in his view, the plaintiffs have required a niskar or rather a lakheraj title to the disputed tank", and if that be so, he does not think that the tenancy can still be held to be a raiyati holding. The reasoning is not quite clear, but it appears that what the learned Judge meant is that if a person holds a land free for a number of years, he does not acquire a raiyati right but an absolute title to the land. But in the present case the plaintiffs' predecessor has been recorded in the Settlement record as a settled raiyat of the village holding the tank with its banks rent-free. The plaintiffs themselves admit in their plaint that their predecessors held the land of the taluk in which the defendants are some of the landlords. It is possible for a raiyat to hold lands without paying rent to the landlord but he does not thereby become the proprietor of the soil. He may be a tenant in accordance with the definition of 'tenant' as given in s. 3 (3) Bengal Tenancy Act, and still under a special contract does not pay rent to the landlord. The learned Judge has not referred to any evidence on the point which has induced him to hold that that the presumption arising from the Record of Rights has been rebutted. In this view we are of opinion that the decree assessed by the Munsif relating to the status of the plaintiffs is correct and should be maintained.

The result is that the decree passed by the lower Appellate Court should be modified declaring the plaintiffs' right to the tank and its banks as niskar raiyati right. With this modification the decree of the lower Appellate Court is upheld and this appeal dismissed. We make no order as to costs.

JUDGMENT.—It is necessary to state the following facts:—In November 1861 Ghumraj Rai executed a mortgage by conditional sale of certain property in the village of Pipra Kalan in the Ballia District in favour of Sheo Saran Upadhiya. In 1915 the mortgagor was represented by Sukhdeo Rai and the mortgagee was represented by a certain Lachhman. Lachhman instituted a suit for foreclosure against Sukhdeo Rai. A preliminary decree was passed on the 15th of July 1915 by consent of parties under the terms of which Sukhdeo Rai was given six months within which to pay Rs. 1,104-15-0, and in default of such payment the land mortgaged was to pass to Lachhman. No application was made for a final decree and in 1918 Sukhdeo Rai died. It is suggested that the reason why no application was made for a final decree was because Lachhman had already obtained possession of the property by a private arrangement with Sukhdeo Rai. After the death of Sukhdeo Rai certain people claimed to be his heirs in respect of this property, Lachhman then applied for the preparation of a final decree. He had to ascertain who was the legal representative of Sukhdeo Rai. This was clearly not an easy task for many persons had put themselves forward as the heirs of Sukhdeo Rai. Sukhdeo Rai belonged to the Rudra Rai branch of the family and he was the sole survivor of that branch, and his heirs had to be found in the Dina Nath Rai branch of the family. To any person acquainted with the circumstances of the Ballia District it will be seen that Lachhman was in a position of real difficulty in discovering who Sukhdeo Rai's heirs would be. He finally put forward Mahadeo Rai as Sukhdeo Rai's successor. Mahadeo Rai did not contest the position that he was the representative and a final decree was passed on the 12th of April 1919. On the 10th of May 1921, a certain Dip Narain Rai instituted a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Ghazipur for possession of this property as of right or in the alternative for possession of this property by redemption of the mortgage on the ground that he had succeeded to a portion of the property of Sukhdéo Rai. The Subordinate Judge decided that he was not an heir and dismissed his suit. An appeal was then filed before the District Judge who found that Dip Narain Rai was an heir but that his suit must fail as the proceedings were finally concluded by the final decree of the 12th April 1919. Dip Narain Rai has preferred this second appeal.

The point for decision is briefly as follows:—When a judgment-debtor under a preliminary decree for foreclosure has died between the passing of the preliminary decree and the final decree and the decree-holder has honestly substituted the person whom he believes to be the sole representative of the judgment-debtor and that person has accepted the position, and when a final decree for foreclosure has subsequently been passed, can a person who had a right to be a co-representative of the judgment debtor's estate and had as such a right to redeem the property enforce a right to redeem subsequent to the passing of the final decree? There is no direct authority upon this point. In order to decide it we have to examine certain considerations. The law as to the representation of a deceased defendant before the passing of a decree is contained in O. XXII, r. 4 of the C. P. C. This rule reproduces with no change of principle s. 368 of the old Code as amended in 1888 The law in respect of substitution of the representative of a deceased defendant may be shortly stated as this. It is in the first instance for the plaintiff to bring the representative of a deceased defendant upon the record. If he does not do so within 90 days of the date of the death his suit abates under the provisions of Art. 177, Sch. I of the Indian Limitation Act as amended in 1920. While it is obligatory upon the plaintiff to discharge this duty in so far as he is capable of doing so, any person who has not been so substituted by the plaintiff who claims to be interested as a representative of the deceased defendant has a right to come before the Court and claim to be substituted as such representative. It has been held in particular instances that, when the plaintiff has, in such circumstances, made an honest and intelligent endeavour to secure such representation the estate is ordinarily sufficiently represented for certain purposes.

There is nothing in the Code or in the Orders which explicitly covers the case of the substitution of the representative of a deceased judgment-debtor but the principles already enunciated undoubtedly govern such substitution. When a mortgagor judgment-debtor dies during the period that elapses between a preliminary decree for foreclosure and a final decree for foreclosure it may well happen that a person who claims to be his representative and has not been made his representative, may have a grievance. It may be that through no fault of his he is deprived of the knowledge that such a decree exists. This is practically the position taken up by the appellant in this appeal. Against this it may be said that on the principles which we have already enunciated it is open to the representative of a deceased judgment-debtor, whose name has been inadvertently omitted from the array of parties to come forward and to apply that his name should be added. Dip Narain Rai does not seem to have suggested that he had no knowledge of the proceedings. He says that he was very ill at the time they took place. The District Judge does not believe him on this point.

There is no direct authority upon the subject but two decisions have been quoted to us by the learned Counsel for the respondents which have a bearing upon the point. The earlier of these decisions is contained in Kadir Mohideen Marakkayar v. Muthukrishna Ayyar (1). The Bench which decided this appeal upheld the validity of a transfer of a sale made under a final decree on a mortgage. The mortgagor was a man called Kadir. He died before the passing of the decree. One of his sons was substituted as his heir on the application of the plaintiff and the decree was passed against that son as sole defendant. That son's name appeared alone as defendant both in the proceedings up to the prel minary decree and in the proceedings up to the final decree. It was subsequently found that there was a second son who ought also with others to have been named as a representative of the deceased Kadir. But the Bench held that it was not open for the second son or his representatives or successors to question the validity of the transfer in any way as the estate of the deceased had been sufficiently represented for the purposes of the suit and in the absence of any fraud or collusion the decree bound the estate. The Bench was of opinion that this son had sufficient remedy in the power to apply to be joined as a representative.

In a subsequent decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Khairajmal v. Daim (2) their Lordships held that when a Muhammadan had died and three out of four of his legal representatives had been brought on the record in his place while the name of the fourth had been inadvertently omitted, the estate was sufficiently represented for the purposes of the suit and that no right of redemption remained.

After consideration accepting the principles laid down in the above decisions we decide this appeal as follows :—

We consider that the proceedings for substitution of the name of the deceased Sukhdeo Rai were honest and correct, that the decree-holder legitimately did all what he could be properly expected to do and that the decree of the 12th of April 1919 concludes the matter.

We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs which will include fees on the higher scale.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (ii), (iv) (c)—Suits Valuation Act (VII of 1887), s. 8—Suit for declaration as to ownership of annuity, valuation of—Court-fee payable—Value for purposes of jurisdiction.

A suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is the owner of the Toda Giras Hak, as the heir of a deceased recipient of the Hak, and is as such entitled to recover it, falls within the purview of s. 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, and not within s. 7 (ii) of the Act, and Court-fee thereon is payable according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint. In such a suit the value for purposes of jurisdiction is under s. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, the same as for Court-fees.

Appeal against an order passed by the District Judge, Broach, in Appeal No. 56 of 1920, ordering the plaint to be returned to the proper Court, in Civil Suit No. 79 of 1919, decided by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Ankleshwar.

Mr. H. V. Divatia, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. T. Telivalla, for heir No. 1 of the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued, inter alia, for a declaration that he was the owner of the Toda Giras Hak of Rs. 500 received by Bai Surajkuvar as her heir and as such entitled to recover the same. The total claim was valued for Court-fees at Rs. 2,143-5-8 and also for jurisdiction. The suit was tried by the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Ankleshwar who passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff.

On appeal to the District Judge, an issue was raised whether the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit. The District Judge held that the suit was not within the jurisdiction of the Subordinate Judge of the Second Class at Ankleshwar, and ordered the plaint to be returned for presentation to the proper Court under r. 10 of O. VII of the C. P. C.

We think that that order was wrong. It depends, in the first place, upon what value should be placed on the first relief claimed, namely, the declaration that the plaintiff was the owner of the Toda Giras Hak of Rs. 500. The District Judge thought the claim was for payment of an annuity, and the value for the purposes of the Court-fee under s. 7 (ii) would then be ten times the amount claimed to be payable for one year. We do not think it can be said that the plaintiff was claiming payment of an annuity, the suit really comes within s. 7 (iv) (c) "to obtain a declaratory decree or order where consequential relief is prayed." All that the plaintiff was seeking was a declaration that he was entitled to an annuity which was enjoyed by Bai Suraj, and having got that declaration, he would be entitled to go to the official whose duty it was to pay the annuity, and demand payment according to the decree of the Court. The Court-fee stamp would be according to the amount at which the relief sought was valued in the plaint, namely, Rs. 500.

The next question is what would be the value of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction. Under s. 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, the value as determinable for the computation of Court-fees in suits other than those referred to in the Court Fees Act, 1870, s 7, paras v, vi, ix and para. x, cl. (d) is the same for purposes of jurisdiction.

Accordingly the appeal will be allowed and the appeal will be sent back to the District Judge for being heard on its merits. The appellant will be entitled to his costs of the appeal.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit by the landlord for ejectment and arrears of rent of certain premises which are at present used as a brothel. A part of these premises is in the occupation of the pimp Lal Mahomed, defendant No. 3 who lives in it with the prostitute Kaima. The other part is in the occupation of the defendant No. 4 Kio, a Japanese prostitute. Some years ago the plaintiff gave these premises on rent to defendant No. 1. He instituted Suit No. 423 of 1923 of this Court for ejectment and for rent against defendant No. 1. This suit was, however, dismissed on several grounds, one of the defences raised in the suit and relied on by the learned Judge in his judgment being that the defendant No. 1 had ceased to be a tenant of the plaintiff about two or three years prior to the suit and that the plaintiff had agreed to recover the rent from defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The plaintiff thereupon instituted this suit impleading defendants Nos. 2 and 3, and subsequently joined defendant No. 4 as being the person in occupation of a part of the premises.

Several pleas have been raised by the different defendants. So far as the relief for ejectment goes, there can be no question that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree. The premises are being used as a brothel. The rent is admittedly in arrears both defendants Nos. 1 and 2 have denied the tenancy, defendants Nos. 3 and 4 according to their showing are occupying the premises as sub-tenants either of defendant No. 1 or defendant No. 2. If the plaintiff let the premises to defendant No. 1 or defendant No. 2 with the knowledge that they would be used as a brothel, then the lease was void on the ground of public policy, and though on the one hand he could not under those circumstances recover the overdue rent (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. VII, para. 810), Choga Lal v. Piari (1), on the other hand he could recover possession of the premises occupied by the defendants under a void lease: (Per Tindal, C. J., in Gas Light and Coke Co., v. Turner (2)... If, on the other hand, the plaintiff had no knowledge that the premises were used as a brothel, he is equally entitled to recover possession on the ground that his tenants have denied the tenancy, have failed to pay the rent due to him and have sublet it to prostitutes or pimps as a brothel.

With regard to the claim for rent, defendant No. 1 has admitted that he took the premises on rent for a bona fide sugarcane business which he stopped carrying on when on account of the war the working of the Badin Railway was stopped. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have denied having attorned to the plaintiff and have offered no evidence to show that the plaintiff knew at the time he gave the premises on rent that they would be used as brothel. There is no legal bar to the plaintiff's claim for recovery of rent on the ground of public policy. The plaintiff has, however, given up his claim for rent, if any, against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and has confined his claim to defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who are in active occupation of the premises. Though there is no privity of contract between the plaintiff and defendants Nos. 3 and 4, there is a privity of contract between them and the plaintiff is entitled to recover rent from them as the person in occupation of the premises provided they have not already paid rent to the person from whom they took the premises on rent. Section 108, cl. (j) of the Transfer of Property Act preserves the right of the lessor to proceed against the tenant who transferred the tenancy but does not take away the lessor's right to proceed against the transferee. He is at liberty to proceed against both of them provided he can have execution only against one of them: Kunhanujan v. Anjelu (3). Defendant No. 3 admits that he has not paid the rent either to defendant No. 1 or to defendant No. 2 subsequent to May 1923. He is, therefore, liable to pay rent to the plaintiff from 1st June 1923 upto the date of ejectment. The rent of the portion in his occupation is Rs. 12-7-0 per mensem as shown in the certificate given by the Controller and should, therefore, account to the plaintiff for rent at that rate. Defendant No. 4 was paying Rs. 30 per mensem as rent to defendant No. 2. She pleads payment of rent upto the 2nd of May 1924: She has deposited Rs. 30 as rent for the current month in Court; the rent payable by her according to the Controller's certificate is Rs. 11-7-0 per month. She should account to the plaintiff for rent at the rate of Rs. 11-7-0 per mensem from 2nd May 1924 upto the date of possession.

I, therefore, pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff for ejectment against defendants Nos. 3 and 4 and also for rent against defendant No. 3 at the rate of Rs. 12-7-0 per mensem from 1st June 1923 upto the date of possession, and for half the costs of the suit, and against defendant No. 4 for rent at the rate of Rs. 11-7-0 per mensem from 2nd May 1924, upto the date of possession. Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 should Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 92—Deed executed by manager of joint Hindu family—Members of family, whether parties to deed.

Where a Hindu father, as manager of a joint family, executes a deed of transfer of family property as representing all the members of the family who are joint with him, such other members must be treated as parties to the document within the meaning of s. 92 of the Evidence Act.

Appeal from an order of the District Judge, Dharwar, in Appeal No. 156 of 1921, reversing a decree passed by and remanding the suit to the Subordinate Judge, F. C., at Dharwar, in Civil Suit No. 65 of 1920.

Mr. R. A. Jahagirdar, for the Appellants.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this action in 1920 asking for a declaration that the sale-deed, Ex. 27, was of the nature of a mortgage, and prayed that the amount due under it to the mortgagees might be ascertained. The document was passed on May 27, 1902, and even if the previous decision of this Court that agriculturists in this District were not entitled to take advantage of s. 10A of the Dekkan Agriculturists' Relief Act had been set aside since the case was heard in the Trial Court as ss. 2 and 20 of the Act were only extended to this District from January 21, 1903, the plaintiff could not take advantage of that extension. After the suit was dismissed in the Trial Court, the District Judge in appeal made an order that the suit should be remanded to the lower Court under O. XLI, r. 23, C. P. C., for trial on the other issues which had been framed.

Now in 1902 the plaintiff and his father were joint. The father had sold the property as manager of the joint family. It is not suggested in this case that the father was exceeding the powers he had as such manager. The real question is whether the son can dispute the transaction of his father by seeking to call evidence to show that the document, although on the face of it a sale, was in reality a mortgage. It was contended in both the lower Courts that the real question then was whether the plaintiff was a representative-in-interest of his father. If he was not, he could lead evidence and prove Ex. 27 to be a mortgage under s. 99 of the Indian Evidence Act. The proper question to be considered was whether the plaintiff was a party to the document of 1902 so that he would be excluded from calling the evidence which he sought to adduce under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. It is clear that if a father as one of the joint owners sells, as representing all the other members joint with him, those other members must be treated as parties to the document. Otherwise most disastrous results would follow if the members of a joint family were enabled to dispute the transaction effected by the manager of the family, not on the ground that the manager had no power to effect the transaction, but on the ground that the transaction was really a different one from what it appeared to be on the face of the document. That is the real point in dispute, and we are of opinion that as the plaintiff was joint with his father at the time of the transaction of 1902, clearly he must be considered as a party thereto, and he cannot, therefore, seek to show by calling oral evidence that the sale-deed was a mortgage. The appeal, therefore, must be allowed and the decree of the Trial Court restored with costs throughout.

A suit to recover damages for a period of six years was decreed by the Court of first instance in respect of a period of five years. Both parties appealed, the defendant claiming in appeal that the whole suit ought to have been dismissed as time-barred and the plaintiff claiming that his suit with regard to the sixth year should also have been decreed. The two appeals were heard together and were disposed of by one judgment by which it was held that the plaintiff was entitled to claim damages for the sixth year and that no part of his claim was barred by time, but the rate of damages allowed by the First Court was reduced and the net result was that the decree which had been passed by the First Court in favour of the plaintiff was reduced in amount. Two separate decrees were prepared in the two appeals. The defendant filed a second appeal in the High Court only from the decree in the appeal filed by him in the lower Appellate Court in which his objection, that the whole suit ought to have been dismissed, was not allowed. It was objected by the plaintiff that the decree in the other appeal having become final, operated as res judicata and that the defendant's appeal was not, therefore, competent:

Held, that the decree in the other appeal, which had not been appealed from by the defendant, being substantially in his favour, the second appeal preferred by them was not barred by the fact that no formal appeal had been preferred from the decree in the other appeal. [p. 806, col. 1.]

Where a vendee is aware that a portion of the property which he is trying to purchase cannot be purchased by him under the provisions of the law and nevertheless enters into the contract with his eyes open in violation of the express provisions of the law, he cannot subsequently refuse to pay that portion of the sale consideration which is left in his hands at the time of the sale on the ground that the vendor has failed to fulfil his part of the contract in respect of that portion of the property which was not legally transferable in favour of the vendee. [p. 806, col. 2.]

Where a certain portion of the sale consideration in respect of a sale of immoveable property is left in the hands of the vendee for payment to a third person, no time being fixed for the payment, and the vendee fails to make the payment, the breach is committed by the vendee on the date when the sale-deed was executed and limitation for a suit to recover damages from the vendee for the breach commences from that date. In such a case there is no continuing breach within the meaning of s. 23 of the Limitation Act, nor successive breaches within the meaning of Art. 115 of Sch. I to the Act. [p. 807, col. 1.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 19th February 1923.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for damages for Rs. 525. The Court of first instance decreed the claim for Rs. 349-11-6 on account of a period of five years. The defendants appealed to the Judge and their appeal was numbered as Civil Appeal No. 482 of 1921. In this they claimed that the whole suit ought to have been dismissed. The plaintiffs also appealed and their appeal was numbered as Civil Appeal No. 484 of 1921. In this they claimed damages for one year extra which had been disallowed by the Court of first instance. The learned Judge heard the two appeals together and disposed of them by practically one judgment. The result was that he held that the plaintiffs were entitled to claim damages for six years no part of which was barred by time, but he thought that the rate of damages allowed by the First Court was excessive. The net result of his finding was that the decree which had been passed by the First Court in favour of the plaintiffs was reduced in amount. There were two separate decrees prepared in two separate appeals. The defendants have come up to this Court and have filed an appeal only from the decree in appeal filed by them in which their objection that the whole suit ought to have been dismissed was not allowed. They have preferred no appeal from the decree in the plaintiffs' appeal.

There is a preliminary objection on behalf of the respondents that the present appeal is barred by the principle of res judicata. The law on this question is laid down in the Full Bench case of Ghansham Singh v. Bhola Singh (1). At page 469* it was remarked: "Where there are two decrees arising out of two appeals to a Subordinate Appellate Court, and only one of such decrees is brought up in second appeal and there is nothing prejudicial to the appellant in the decree from which no appeal has been brought which is not raised and cannot be set right if the appeal which he has brought succeeds, the right of appeal is not barred either by the rule of res judicata or at all by reason of his failure to appeal from the decree which does not prejudice him."

I have already stated that the result of the findings of the learned Judge was that the amount decreed to the plaintiffs by the First Court was actually reduced. In substance, therefore, the plaintiffs' appeal in which they had claimed a larger sum was really not allowed at all, nor was the question of their right to get any amount decided in it which was not raised in the other appeal. The present appeal is preferred from the main appeal in which the question as to whether the entire claim ought or ought not to have been dismissed was raised. In view of the pronouncement in the Full Bench case I am bound to hold that the hearing of this appeal is not barred by the fact that no formal appeal has been preferred from the decree in the other appeal which really was in favour of the defendants.

The learned Vakil for the appellants has not pressed grounds Nos. 1 and 2 taken in the memorandum of appeal. Only two points have been pressed, (1) that the plaintiffs not having delivered possession of certain sir lands were not entitled to sue for damages and (2) that the entire claim was barred by limitation.

As to the first point it may be mentioned at the outset that there was no specific ground to that effect raised in the grounds of appeal before the lower Appellate Court. That question in a quite different form was raised in point No. 4 mentioned in the lower Appellate Court's judgment. I am, however, of opinion that there is no force in this contention. In 1910 there was a usufructuary mortgage of about 36 bighas of land by the plaintiffs in favour of Inder Lal and Sham Lal. Under s. 10, sub-cl. (2) of the Tenancy Act ex-proprietary rights were created in respect thereof. According to the rubkar recorded by the Court of first instance the plaintiffs became ex-proprietary tenants of their previous sir lands and entered into possession as such. Subsequently on the 29th of May 1924 the defendants obtained a sale-deed from the plaintiffs of 10 bighas out of the mortgaged lands. In this they included the ex-proprietary lands of the plaintiffs and called them both sir and ex-proprietary lands. Part of the sale consideration was left in the hands of the vendees for payment to the prior mortgagees. It is obvious that the sale of ex-proprietary rights to the defendants was altogether illegal and invalid. Such a transfer could never be enforced in law. The mere fact that in spite of the supposed sale the plaintiffs have not delivered possession of their ex-proprietary holdings to the defendants cannot be availed of by the latter or justify their non-payment of the amount due to the prior mortgagees. They must be presumed to have known that what they were trying to purchase could not be purchased by them. They entered into the contract with their eyes open and in violation of the express provisions of the law and they cannot take advantage if they find themselves unable to compel the plaintiffs to fulfil their illegal contract. The defendants vendees kept in their hands part of the sale consideration and it was their duty to pay this sum to the mortgagees. Had they paid it to the prior mortgagees the result would have been that the entire 36 bighas of land would have been redeemed, the plaintiffs obtaining possession of 26 bighas and the defendants of the remaining 10 bighas.

The real question in the case is whether the plaintiffs' claim as brought in 1921 was barred by limitation. The Court of first instance held that it was barred by limitation with regard to the first year. The lower Appellate Court has taken the view that it is not at all barred by time because the breach was a continuous breach and no question of limitation really arose.

In the sale-deed there was no time fixed within which the defendants vendees were to pay off the prior mortgage. The ordinary presumption would be that they were to pay the amount on the date of the execution of the sale-deed in their favour. If they failed to make the payment they did commit a breach of the implied covenant in the sale-deed. The question is whether that breach is a continuing one that is to say whether as every day passes the defendants are continuously committing a breach of the covenant to pay off the mortgage or whether they committed the breach when they did not pay off either on the date of the execution of the sale-deed or at any rate within a reasonable time of it. In the case of Raghubar Rai v. Jaij Rai (2), a Division Bench of this

(2) 14 Ind. Cas. 244; 34 A. 429; 9 A. L. J. 534.

Court laid down very clearly that upon failure to pay money due by a vendor to a third party which the vendee agreed to pay and no time was fixed for payment, the breach was committed on the date when the sale-deed was executed and there was no continuing breach within the meaning of s. 23 of the Limitation Act, nor successive breaches within the meaning of Art. 115. That ruling of the Division Bench is binding upon me as a Single Judge. I am, therefore, bound to hold that the failure by the defendants to pay the mortgage-money to the prior mortgagees was a breach of their covenant which took place once and for all and that there was no continuing breach which would give successive causes of action to the plaintiffs to sue. It is true that on the facts there is a slight difference between the present case and the reported case. In the present case the mortgage was a usufructuary one. The loss to the plaintiffs consists in their not getting the profits out of the mortgaged lands owing to the delay in redemption. In the reported case the loss to the plaintiffs consisted in the continual accrual of interest on the mortgage-money. In one case there is an actual loss by non-receipt of profits day after day and in the other there is a loss by a continual enhancement of liability. But the principle underlying both the cases seems to me to be identical.

In the reported case there are certain observations at pages 432 and 433* suggesting that even if subsequently the plaintiffs have themselves to pay off the mortgage-money and redeem the property they may not have a fresh cause of action to recover the amount from the defendants. Those observations, however are mere obiter dicta and they were not necessary for the purposes of that case inasmuch as there the suit had been brought before the plaintiffs had actually made any payment. It is, therefore, possible that in this case even though the present claim is to be held to be barred by time the plaintiff's remedy may be either for recovery of the amount treating it as their unpaid purchase-money with a charge on the property transferred, or for recovery of damages after they have themselves redeemed the property by payment of the mortgage-money. But in view of the reported case mentioned above I am bound to hold that the present claim brought more than six years after the sale-deed for recovery of damages for failure to pay to the mortgagees the amount left in the hands of the vendees for such payment, is barred by limitation.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal must be allowed and the decrees of the Courts below set aside and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed. As, however, the plaintiffs have obviously suffered considerable loss owing to the deliberate default of the defendants to pay off the amount left in their hands for payment to the mortgagees I think this is a fit case in which the parties must be ordered to pay their own costs in all Courts.

In the view which I have taken of the case the cross-objection must be dismissed, the parties bearing their own costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIII, r. 1—Withdrawal of suit with liberty to bring fresh suit—Order directing payment of costs, non-compliance with, effect of—Fresh suit, dismissal of, as non-maintainable—Third suit, whether maintainable.

Where a plaintiff is allowed to withdraw a suit with liberty to bring a fresh suit on condition that before instituting a fresh suit he pays the costs of the defendant, and he institutes a fresh suit without complying with the condition and that suit is dismissed as non-maintainable, he has no further right to bring a suit after payment of costs to the defendant, for the permission granted in the first suit would only extend to the filing of one fresh suit and not to the filing of any number of fresh suits which might be dismissed each in its turn without any trial on the actual merits of the case between the parties, for failure of the plaintiff to pay the costs of the first suit.

Second appeal from the decision of the District Judge, Dharwar, confirming a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Hubli, in Suit No. 455 of 1920.

Mr. Y. N. Nadkarni, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for Respondent No. 1

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed Suit No. 143 of 1917 in the Subordinate Judge's Court of Hubli on a certain cause of action. He withdrew that suit with permission of the Court under O. XXIII, r. 1, alleging that on account of the misreading of one of the issues framed by the Court he was not ready with his evidence on the day fixed for trial of the case. The Court made the following order:—

"On condition that plaintiff pays defendants' costs and bears his own costs and pays defendants' costs before filing a fresh suit, he is under the circumstances mentioned in this application, permitted to withdraw with permission to file a fresh suit."

Therefore, the condition precedent to his being allowed to file a fresh suit was that he should pay defendants' costs. However, without paying the defendants' costs, he filed fresh Suit No. 92 of 1919. He paid the costs three days before the day fixed for the hearing of the evidence in the case. The Court dismissed the suit on the ground that the suit being filed without previous costs having been paid was bad ab initio. This order was confirmed in appeal. The plaintiff, however, considering that the permission given him by the Court in Suit No. 143 of 1917 was still surviving in spite of the second suit being dismissed, filed this third suit on the same cause of action.

It was argued that the dismissal of the previous suit amounted to res judicata, and if that argument did not succeed, it amounted to a withdrawal without permission under para. 1 of O. XXIII, r. 1, C. P. C. Both these arguments failed to convince the Subordinate Judge who held that the present suit was maintainable, and dealing with the further issues, passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff for possession.

In appeal the decree was confirmed.

We think that both these decisions were wrong on this very simple ground that the permission granted by the Court in the original suit would only extend to the filing of one fresh suit, and not to the filing of any number of fresh suits, which might be dismissed each in its turn, without any trial on the actual merits of the case between the parties, for failure to pay the costs of the suit. When the plaintiff had refused to comply with the condition on which alone he could file a second suit, he could not avail himself of the original permission of the Court for filing a third suit. That permission no longer remained in force. If we were to accede to the argument of respondent No. 1 and uphold the decision of the lower Courts, we would be illegally extending the provisions of O. XXIII, r. 1, in favour of the plaintiff, who would thus be allowed to harass the defendants with a succession of suits. The appeal must be allowed and the suit must be dismissed with costs throughout.

Receiver appointed by High Court—Subordinate Court, power of, to restrain Receiver from performing his duties—Procedure.

It is not competent to a Subordinate Court to restrain a Receiver appointed by the High Court from performing his duties as a Receiver.

Where a Receiver is appointed in a suit pending on the Original Side of the High Court and is given permission to sell certain property, any person who desires to prevent the sale of the property by the Receiver must apply on the Original Side in the suit on notice to the Receiver asking the Court to direct the Receiver not to sell the property.

Appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge, Second Court, 24-Perganas, dated the 26th of September 1924.

Babus Surendra Nath Guha and Amiruddin Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Babu Manindra Nath Banerji, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by a Receiver appointed in Suit No. 930 of 1911 instituted on the Original Side of this Court. The suit was one for administration and partition and the order appointing the Receiver was in the usual form. On the 31st January 1917 an order was passed by the Original Side of this Court giving liberty to the appellant to sell certain of the premises of which he had been appointed Receiver, namely, 203 Lower Circular Road for the purpose of paying off the mortgage that existed on the property. I understand that since the date of that order the mortgage referred to in the order of the 31st January 1917 has been paid off. Subsequent to the appointment of the Receiver the parties who were interested in the properties mortgaged their interest in those properties to the respondent before us. The mortgagee under that mortgage commenced a suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of the 24-Perganas to enforce his mortgage and apparently having heard that the Receiver was contemplating selling the properties for the purpose of paying costs and commission be applied to the Subordinate Judge to restrain the sale by the Receiver. The Receiver opposed the application for injunction but ultimately the injunction was passed. This is the order against which this appeal is directed and, in my opinion, the order of the Subordinate Judge was clearly wrong. It was not competent for him to restrain the Receiver, performing his duties as a Receiver and the proper course is for the parties, if they desire to prevent the sale by the Receiver, to apply on the Original Side in the suit on notice to the Receiver, asking the Court to direct the Receiver not to sell the property and offering if they are so advised to pay any sum that may be due either for costs or commission payable by the Receiver. The order of the Subordinate Judge of the 26th September 1924, restraining the Receiver is, in my opinion, wrong and misconceived and accordingly, we set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge of the 26th September 1924.

The respondent has mistaken his remedy and must pay the costs of this appeal. We assess the hearing-fee at two gold mohurs.

Hindu Law—Mitakshara—Property acquired jointly, whether joint family property—Presumption—Intention.

Under the Hindu Law where the members of a joint family acquire property by or with the assistance of joint family funds or by their joint labour, such property is the joint property of the persons who have acquired it, whether it is an increment to ancestral property or whether it has arisen without any nucleus of descended property. [p. 810, col. 1.]

If a single individual acquires a fortune by his own exertion, without any assistance from ancestral property, his issue would take no interest in such property. Where, however, several brothers acquire property by their joint exertions in the absence of any indication of an intention to the contrary, the property would be owned by them as joint family property, and in that case their male issue would necessarily acquire a right in it by birth, for under the Mitakshara system there can be no joint family property in respect of which the male issue of the joint owners do not take a share by birth. If there is satisfactory evidence of an intention to treat the property not as joint family property but as joint property only, i. e., as the joint self-acquisition of the acquirers, such intention will be given effect to. But the presumption is in favour of its being regarded as joint family property. [p. 810, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 11th December 1922, in Civil Appeal No. 146 of 1922.

Mr. M. Gupta, for the Appellant.

Dr. H. S. Gour, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-respondent is the father of the defendant-appellant and sued to eject him from a portion of the house in suit, claiming that it was his self-acquired property. The defendant pleaded that it was joint family property. The First Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit. On appeal the District Judge, Nimar, reversed the decision, holding that the property was self-acquired. Defendant makes this second appeal.

The history of the family is given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. The appellant has raised three points in this appeal.

First it is contended that there is an admitted nucleus of joint family property in Rajputana, whence the family comes, consisting of 100 acres of land, and, therefore, the presumption is that the suit property was acquired by the aid of the nucleus. Reference is made to Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th Edition, pages 375 and 379, to Karsondas Dharamsey v. Gangabai (1), and to Lakshman Mayaram v. Jamnabai (2).

(1) 32 B. 479 at p. 492; 10 Bom. L. R. 184.

It is argued that the property in Rajputana is admittedly still undivided and so plaintiff has an interest in it. The burden is on the plaintiff to prove that no assistance was taken from the ancestral property. He admitted in his written statement in the partition suit that the suit house was joint.

On this point the learned District Judge has recorded a finding of fact that no assistance was taken from the nucleus in acquiring this property. He holds on the evidence for the plaintiff that the nucleus was not touched in the acquisition of certain property later.

This is a finding of fact behind which this Court cannot go in second appeal.

It is next contended that if the business is a joint family business any property acquired must be joint. The defendant carried on joint business as there is evidence that he used to work in the shop, though he lived separately owing to the usual family disputes.

P. W. No. 2, plaintiff's brother Ghisalal, says the defendant was working in the joint firm of the three brothers when he reached years of discretion. Reference is made to Mayne's Hindu Law, 9th Edition, page 359, para. 277, where it is laid down that where the members of a joint family acquire property by or with the assistance of a joint family funds or by their joint labour such property is the joint property of the persons who have acquired it, whether it is an increment to ancestral property, or whether it has arisen without any nucleus of descended property.

The learned District Judge holds that the evidence only amounts to the defendant having been in the shop in his boyhood and early youth.

It is to be noted that the plaintiff himself admits that his other son has an interest and share in the house in suit as he has worked under him and as he is his son. In the face of this admission and of the admission of the P. W. No. 2, plaintiff's brother, it is difficult to see why the defendant should be excluded.

It is further contended that if defendant's father and uncles all carried on business jointly, defendant would acquire an interest in it by birth. This subject is dealt with in the paragraph of Mayne's Hindu Law quoted above, at page 360 where it is stated that if a single individual acquired a fortune by his own exertions, without any assistance from ancestral property, his issue would certainly take no interest in it. If several brothers did the same, the property would, in the absence of any indication of an intention to the contrary, be owned by them as joint family property, and in that case their male issue would necessarily acquire a right in it by birth, for under the Mitkshara system there can be no joint family property in respect of which the male issue of the joint owners do not take a share by birth. If there is a satisfactory evidence of an intention to treat the property not as joint family property, but as joint property only, i. e., as the joint self-acquisition of the acquirers, it will be given effect to. But the presumption is in favour of its being regarded as joint family property. Reference is made to Sudarsanam v. Narasimhulu (3) and Muniswami Chetty v. Muruthammal (4).

In the present case the property was acquired jointly by the three brothers and in view of the admission by the plaintiff that his other son has an interest in it because he has worked in the shop and because he is his son, I am of opinion that the property must be regarded as joint family property in which the defendant takes an interest by birth.

The only reason for the plaintiff differentiating between the defendant and his other son appears to be that he is on bad terms with defendant.

Apart from the question of nucleus the view of the lower Appellate Court appears to me to be against the ordinary presumption of Hindu Law, and I cannot accept it.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court is consequently set aside and that of the First Court restored with costs throughout on the plaintiff.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiff sued for the partition of certain properties. His case was that the properties in suit belonged to one Srimanta. Srimanta left three sons and three daughters. The sons were Nitai Makhan and Ram Lal. Two of the sons Makhan and Nitai died unmarried after the death of Srimanta. Their mother Prasanna Moyi, therefore, inherited their share of the property. Plaintiff purchased this share from Prasanna Moyi. Plaintiff's case is that he has in a previous Suit No. 670 of 1916 established his title to these lands and that as he has been dispossessed of some of the lands he has brought this suit for partition. Defendant No. 1 is the widow of Rakhal son of Prem Moyi one of the daughters of Prosanna Moyi. Her case was that plots Nos. 2, 3, 7 and part of plot No. 4 were purchased from Ram Lal the husband of Hira Moni defendant No. 2 and that the plaintiff has no claim to partition.

The Trial Court decreed the suit of the plaintiff. He ordered that the title of the plaintiff be declared to a two-thirds share of the land in dispute and that of defendant No. 2 to a one-third share less the lands that had been conveyed by Ex. A which would go to the defendant No. 1.

On appeal the Appellate Court found that the suit for partition did not lie. That the previous Suit No. 670 of 1916 did not operate as res judicata, that the lands had been amicably partitioned before between the plaintiff and the defendants excluding the lands that were in possession of defendant No. 2 and totally dismissed the suit of the plaintiff.

In appeal to this Court it has been contended on behalf of the appellant that the decision in the Suit No. 670 does operate as res judicata. That this suit determined the title of the plaintiff to the lands in dispute and it also determined the question of the adverse possession of the defendants which it decided against them.

We think that this contention is correct.

In that suit it was determined that the plaintiff had title to the share that he claimed in plots Nos. 4 and 7. To determine this point it was necessary to determine the title of the plaintiff to his share in the whole of the lands that had been left by Srimanta. The lower Appellate Court has held that this decision was based on an erroneous view of the law and hence did not operate as res judicata. In support of his decision he has referred to two authorities one reported as Alimonnessa Chowdhurani v. Shama Charan Roy (1) and the other in Parthasaradi Aiyyangar v. Chinnakrishna Ayyangar (2).

In the case reported as Alimonnessa Chowdhurani v. Shama Charan Roy (1), it was held that an erroneous decision on a pure question of law did not operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit between the same parties where the cause of action in the two suits is not identical. The same view was taken in the Madras case above referred to.

The appellant has referred us to the case of Aghore Nath Mukherjee v. Kamini Debi (3). There it was held that a finding on a mixed issue of law and fact stood on the same footing as a decision on a question of fact and operated as res judicata.

In the case of Dwijendra Narayan v. Jogesh Chandra (4), a case to which one of us was a party it was held that a judgment operates as res judicata with regard to all the findings that are necessary and essential to the judgment.

It is not easy to see how the decision in the previous suit proceeded on a pure question of law. It would seem to depend on two questions of fact, viz., whether the plaintiff had purchased the lands in suit and if he had done so whether his title had been extinguished by adverse possession. In the previous suit it does not appear that the defendant did contend that the title of the present appellant had been extinguished by adverse possession. The decision in that suit did not proceed on a pure question of law but as far as can be seen on a question of fact or mixed law and fact.

Moreover as far as can be seen the cause of action in the two suits is the same. In the first suit the plaintiff sued for a declaration of his title and recovery of possession of two plots, 4 and half of 7. His title was declared to these plots but it was held that he could not recover possession in that suit from a co-sharer but that his remedy lay in a suit for partition.

In this suit he is suing for partition of these plots and some others having been deprived of possession by the defendants. It has been contended that in the first suit the plaintiff did not sue for the declaration of his title to plots Nos. 2 and 3.

That, no doubt, is correct. But in order to decide that suit it was necessary to decide his title to the whole two-thirds share in the whole property left by Srimanta. Applying then the principle enunicated in the case of Dwijendra Narayan v. Jogesh Chandra (4), the question of the plaintiff's title to these plots also must be held to be res judicata as between the parties. It will be observed that the parties to the two suits were the same.

The decision in the Suit No. 670 operates as res judicata between the parties in this suit. That being so it was not open to the lower Court to go into the question whether previous to the title suit there had been a partition between the parties.

The plaintiffs must, therefore, be held to have title as claimed to the two-thirds share.

The result is that the order of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the order of the Trial Court restored. The appellant is entitled to his costs in all the Courts.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

DHANAJI JHELAJI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT
versus
GULABCHAND PANA—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 253, 254—Partnership—Assignment of his share by partner, effect of—Assignee, position of—Suit for accounts by assignee, whether maintainable—Release of his rights by a partner before assignment, effect of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 6 (e)—Right to sue to set aside release, whether can be transferred.

An assignment by one of the partners in a firm of his share in the partnership, without the consent of the other partners, does not cause an immediate dissolution of the partnership, nor does the assignment give the assignee a right to an account of the profits. He must accept the account of the profits as agreed to by the partners. It is only when dissolution occurs that the right of the assignee arises to claim an account as from the date of the dissolution. [p. 814, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is only a partner who can file a suit against the other partners for dissolution. Consequently, an assignment by one partner in favour of an outsider merely gives a right of action to the other partners to ask the Court to dissolve the partnership. [p. 814, col. 2.]

Plaintiff filed a suit for accounts of a partnership on the allegation that defendants Nos. 1 to 5 constituted a partnership together with defendant No. 6 whose right, title and interest in the partnership had been purchased by the plaintiff. Defendants Nos. 1 to 5 set up a release executed by defendant No. 6 before the assignment in favour of the plaintiff. Defendant

No. 6 urged that the release was obtained from him by fraud and misrepresentation:

Held, (1) that if the release executed by defendant No. 6 in favour of the other defendants was valid, defendant No. 6 had ceased to have any right of action against his co-partners and that there was nothing left in him which he could have assigned to the plaintiff; [p. 814, col. 2.]

(2) that if the release executed by the defendant No 6 was not binding on him on the ground that it had been obtained from him by misrepresentation or fraud, defendant No. 6 would have a right to have the release set aside, but that such a right, being a mere right to sue, could not be transferred to the plaintiff; [ibid.]

(3) that assuming that the defendant No. 6 succeeded in having the release set aside, the partnership would still be existing between defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and the plaintiff, as assignee of defendant No. 6, who was one of the partners, would have no right to sue for an account of the profits of the partnership; [ibid.]

(4) that in either view of the case the plaintiff's suit was liable to be dismissed. [ibid.]

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, Thana, in Civil Suit No. 250 of 1919.

Mr. G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. P. B. Shingne), for the Appellant.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Mr. W. B. Pradhan), for Respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

Mr. V. B. Virkar, for Respondent No. 5.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed this suit, alleging that defendant No. 1 and his sons defendants Nos. 2 to 5 together with defendant No. 6 were trading in partnership in the name and style of Pana Nathaji, that plaintiff purchased the right, title and interest of defendant No. 6 in the partnership on March 20, 1918, that notice to render accounts was given to defendant No. 1 on March 21, when defendant No. 1 replied that the defendant No. 6 had passed a release on settlement of his right on April 3, 1918. Accordingly he prayed for a declaration that he was the owner of the 2¼ anna-share of defendant No. 6 in the shop and that the moveable and immoveable property of the shop should be divided and accounts taken of the shop.

Defendants Nos. 1, 2 and 4 pleaded inter alia that defendant No. 6 had passed a release in their favour on February 17, 1918.

Defendant No. 6 alleged that the release was obtained by fraud and misrepresentation, but that plaintiff purchased his right, title and interest with knowledge of the real facts relating to the release and that the assignment was passed on the express understanding that defendant No. 6 was not to be liable to the plaintiff.

The plaintiff had also sued in the alternative for the recovery of Rs. 5,999 and interest as the consideration paid to defendant No. 6 for the assignment in case it was held that defendant No. 6 had no right.

The Trial Judge held inter alia (1) that the release was not obtained from defendant No. 6 by fraud by the other defendants.

(2) That the sale-deed of the plaintiff was not fraudulent or without consideration.

(3) That the plaintiff had no right to claim the share of defendant No. 6 in the partnership.

(4) Nor could he claim the amount of the consideration from defendant No. 6.

Consequently the plaintiff's suit was dismissed. The plaintiff has appealed to this Court. The release having been executed before the assignment, even assuming that the plaintiff was entitled to sue to set it aside on the ground of fraud, his suit was bound to be dismissed as there was nothing left in defendant No. 6 after the release which he could assign.

But assuming that the release could not be avoided an important question arises with regard to the right of an assignee in a share in a partnership.

If one partner assigns his share to an outsider without the consent of his partners during the existence of the partnership, no immediate rights accrue to the assignee as against the other partners, the assignee only having a right against his assignor. If, at the time of the assignment, the partnership has already been dissolved, then the further question would arise whether the assignee would have any right at all against the other partners, and whether he would be entitled to file a suit for an account.

The sixth defendant might be entitled to file a suit against the other partners for a declaration that the farkhat was not binding on him on the ground that he had been induced to sign it by misrepresentation or by fraud or on any ground on which a party is entitled to ask the Court to set aside a document he has signed. But whatever rights the sixth defendant may have had to ask the Court to set aside the document, he could not assign such a right to a third party. That would be a transfer merely of a right to sue which cannot be allowed under the provisions of s. 6 of the Transfer of Property Act.

So it was suggested by the plaintiff that the assignment operated as a dissolution of the partnership and entitled the assignee to sue. There is authority for that proposition in Juggut Chunder Dutt v. Rada Nath Dhur (1). The head-note runs:—

"The effect of cl. (6) of s. 253 of the Contract Act is not to render an assignment of a share in a partnership concern illegal or void as between the parties to the assignment, but only so far void as between those parties and the other partners as to cause an immediate dissolution of the partnership."

With due respect it is difficult to see how that construction can be placed on s. 253, sub-cl. (6) of the Indian Contract Act which merely states that no person can introduce a new partner into a firm without the consent of all the partners.

The common law with regard to the position of an assignee of a partner has now been codified by s. 31 of the English Partnership Act, 1890, as follows:—

"(1) An assignment by any partner of his share in the partnership, either absolute or by way of mortgage or redeemable charge, does not, as against the other partners, entitle the assignee, during the continuance of the partnership, to interfere in the management or administration of the partnership business or affairs, or to require any accounts of the partnership transactions, or to inspect the partnership books, but entitles the assignee only to receive the share of profits to which the assigning partner would otherwise be entitled, and the assignee must accept the account of profits agreed to by the partners.

(2) In case of a dissolution of the partnership, whether as respects all the partners or as respects the assigning partner, the assignee is entitled to receive the share of the partnership assets to which the assigning partner is entitled as between himself and the other partners, and, for the purpose of ascertaining that share, to an account as from the date of the dissolution."

Therefore at common law the assignment by one of the partners of his share in the partnership without the consent of the other partners did not cause an immediate dissolution of the partnership. It did not give the assignee a right to an account of the profits. He had to accept the account of the profits as agreed to by the partners. And that must obviously be according to the principles of common sense, because when there is a contract of partnership, one partner cannot by his action introduce a third party without the consent of the other partners, so as to give the third party a right to interfere in the management of the business or to ask for an account. It is only when dissolution occurs that the right of the assignee arises to take action in the same way as his assignor could have done to claim an account as from the date of the dissolution.

That this also is the law in India appears from the following provisions of s. 254 (3) which apparently was not noticed by the Court in the case of Juggut Chunder Dutt v. Rada Nath Dhur (1): "At the suit of a partner the Court may dissolve the partnership in the following cases: (3) when a partner, other than the partner suing, has done any act by which the whole interest of such partner is legally transferred to a third person." Consequently the assignment by one partner merely gives a right of action to the other partners to ask the Court to dissolve the partnership. The plaintiff then in this case was placed in this dilemma. If the farkhat was a valid release by defendant No. 6 of his interest in the partnership, he ceased to have any right of action against his late partners, and there was nothing left in him to assign to a third party. Defendant No. 6 could have brought an action to set aside the farkhat on the ground that it was induced by misrepresentation or fraud. He could not assign his right to sue to a third party. Then supposing on either of those grounds defendant No. 6 succeeded, and the farkhat was set aside, the partnership would still be existing between the partners, and the assignee from one of them would have no right of action. It is only a partner who can file a suit against the other partners for dissolution. Even assuming, as we are asked to believe that the sixth defendant was excluded from the partnership after he had signed the farkhat, that by itself would not effect a dissolution. It would only give a right of action to sue for a dissolution under s. 254 (5) of the Indian Contract Act "when a partner, other than the partner suing, is guilty of gross misconduct in the affairs of the partnership or towards his partners." Therefore, if the office doors are closed against a partner, so that he is excluded from taking part in the partnership business, he can either treat the partnership as still existing, or he can file a suit for a declaration that the partnership is to be taken as dissolved from the date on which he proves misconduct towards him on the part of his partners. So that whichever way you look at the case, it is obvious that the plaintiff has no cause of action against defendants Nos. 1 to 5. He has joined with the cause of action against defendants Nos. 1 to 5, a cause of action against defendant No. 6, for the recovery of the money he had paid as consideration for the assignment passed in his favour by defendant No. 6. That was disallowed by the Trial Court in para. 29 of the judgment. It is, no doubt, open to a plaintiff to make an alternative claim even on inconsistent pleadings. But the Judge says "in the present case, however, the plaintiff purchased an actionable claim with full knowledge of the risk involved, and I do not think that he is entitled to any refund as on a failure of existing consideration, and I find on issue No. 4 accordingly." We agree, and as against defendants Nos. 1 to 5, the plaintiff purchased nothing but a right to sue which is not transferable.

The appeal, therefore, must be dismissed with costs. Costs to be given to respondents Nos. 1 to 4.

Z. K. Appeal dismissed.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 93, 99—Common manager, appointment of—Restoration of estate, when can be, refused.

The most essential condition requisite to justify a Judge in appointing a common manager of an estate under s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is the existence of a dispute between the co-owners. When therefore, the question arises as to the restoration of the estate under s. 99 of the Act, and it is alleged that the dispute is no longer existing, what the Judge has to consider is whether it has been really and effectively settled in such a way that the management will be conducted by the co-owners without inconvenience to the public or injury to private rights. If he is satisfied that the dispute has been effectively settled he cannot refuse to make an order directing the restoration of the estate, merely because there is apprehension that the co-owners will oppress the tenants or that there will be a breach of the peace as the result of such oppression. [p. 816, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This Rule is directed against an order of the District Judge of Bakargunge refusing to restore the management of a certain estate named mehal khontakhali to the co-owners under the provisions of s. 99 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There was an application made by one or some of the co-owners with regard to this estate in the year 1903 under the provisions of s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act in consequence of which the learned District Judge appointed a common manager in respect thereof and afterwards it was placed under the management of the Court of Wards. The present application was made on behalf of the co-owners and the two material facts upon which this application was based were, firstly, that the co-owners had settled amongst themselves the dispute that had been in existence from before and secondly, that the costs of the management of the estate had become very heavy and that the co-owners were, as a matter of fact, satisfactorily managing another estate, a much bigger estate, in respect of which a similar order had been previously passed. The learned District Judge after taking into consideration the letter of the Collector and the report of the Manager of the Court of Wards in respect of this matter and after hearing the Pleader for the petitioners and the Local Government Pleader refused to restore the management of the estate to the co-owners. The grounds upon which the learned District Judge has made the order are mainly that from the report of the Manager, it would appear that the tenants were afraid that they would be oppressed if the estate was released to the proprietors and that at least the release would probably lead to endless friction and to the danger of a breach of the peace. The report of the Manager or the letter of the Collector does not challenge the truth of the statement that the dispute has been settled, but opposes the restoration of the estate mainly on the ground that the tenants would be oppressed and harassed by enhancement of rent and eviction, and that the interests of the tenants would suffer and also that in consequence thereof there would be apprehension of a breach of the peace. Now the condition requisite for making an order under s. 93 of the Bengal Tenancy Act is that there should be a dispute existing between the co-owners of an estate or a tenure as to the management thereof and that in consequence of such dispute there ensues or is likely to ensue either inconvenience to the public or injury to private rights. When the estate is to be released under the provisions of s. 99 the Judge is to satisfy himself that the management will be conducted by the co-owners without inconvenience to the public or injury to private rights. It is clear upon consideration of the terms of s. 93 that the most essential condition requisite to justify a Judge in placing an estate under a common manager or the Court of Wards is the existence of a dispute between co-owners. Assuming for a moment that injury to private rights includes invasion of the rights of the tenants and not merely injury to the private rights of the co-owners, and assuming also that the injury apprehended by the tenants in the present case comes within that category, and granting further that the apprehension of a breach of the peace is well-founded, they would not be sufficient for the purposes of s. 93, if there is no dispute between co-owners to which such injury or apprehension is attributable. It follows, therefore, that when the question arises for restoration of the estate under s. 99 of the Act and it is alleged that the dispute is no longer existing what the Judge has to consider is whether it has been really or effectively settled in such a way that the management will be conducted by the co-owners without inconvenience to the public or injury to private rights. In the present case there has been no consideration of this matter and the order passed by the learned Judge is based upon matters wholly extraneous and irrelevant.

On a consideration of the whole of the circumstances, I am of opinion that there is no justification for an opposition to restore the management of the estate to the co-owners.

For the above reasons, I think that the order passed by the learned District Judge is without jurisdiction and that it should be set aside. The Rule is, accordingly, made absolute and the order of the District Judge is set aside and it is ordered that the estate be restored to the management of the co-owners under the provisions of s. 99 of the Bengal Tenaacy Act.

There will be no order as to costs in this Rule.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiffs sued to recover possession of the plaint property after a declaration that plaintiff No. 1 was an owner or in the alternative if plaintiff No. 1 was not an heir that plaintiff No. 2 should be declared the owner.

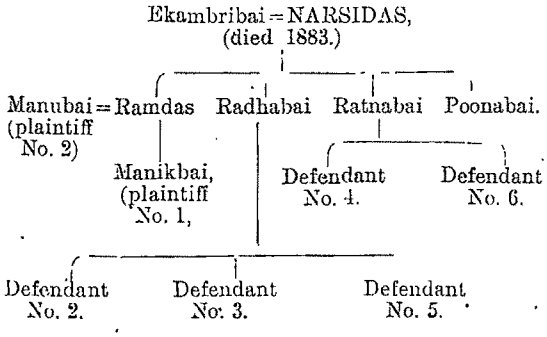
It was alleged that the property originally belonged to two brothers Narsidas and Shankerdas, but it has been found by the Court below, and that finding has not been disputed in this Court, that the brothers were not in union, and so the following pedigree will be sufficient for the purposes of this appeal.



The property was held jointly by Narsidas and his son Ramdas. Narsidas died in 1883. Ramdas was adopted in 1908 by one Bhagwandas, a first cousion of Narsidas. At the time of his adoption Ramdas had a wife plaintiff No. 2 and a daughter plaintiff No. 1.

The plaintiffs claim that they are entitled to the property originally owned jointly by Narsidas and Ramdas, as against the defendants who are the grand children of Narsidas by his daughters Radhabai and Ratnabai.

It was decided in Kalgauda Tavanappa v. Somappa Tammangauda (1) that when a married Hindu having a son is given in adoption, the son does not like his father lose the gotra and right of inheritance in the family of his birth, and does not acquire the gotra and right of succession to the property of the family into which his father is adopted. It was also held that when a married Hindu is given in adoption his wife passes with him into the adoptive family because according to the Shastras husband and wife form one body. The second plaintiff, therefore, can in no case succeed. But the rights of a daughter in the event of her father being adopted have, as far as we can ascertain, not been considered either in texts or reported cases, neither have they been discussed by any of the writers on Hindu Law. It is not surprising that the texts are silent on the question as in olden times the adoption of a married man having children would be repugnant to orthodox Hindu customs.

The Trial Judge has taken it for granted that the main issue was 'Who was the heir of Narsidas after the adoption of Ramdas'? and it cannot be disputed that the defendants were nearer heirs to Narsidas than plaintiff No. 1.

Paragraph 12 of the judgment says: "After Ramdas left the family by adoption Ekambribai was the heir of Narsidas to whom the property belonged and she lived in the house till her death which took place on September 12, 1912"; and para. 75 says: "the property in dispute belonged to Narsidas. Defendants Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4 and 6 are sons of the daughters of Narsidas and are his heirs preferably to plaintiff No. 1 or plaintiff No. 2." He had some justification for so holding. As in Ramchandra v. Manubai (2), Ramdas attempted to execute a decree obtained by his father. The case came up to the High Court when it was held that Ramdas by his adoption lost all rights in his father's estate which thereafter went to the heirs of Narsidas. The judgment-debtor was the only other party to the proceedings, and the rights of the present plaintiff No. 1 as daughter of Ramdas were never taken into consideration. It would have been sufficient for the Court to decide that Ramdas was incompetent to execute the decree without going on to say in whom the right to execute lay. In any event plaintiff No. 1 is entitled to raise the point in the present suit, the question is not res judicata, and the dictum of the High Court being obiter must at the best be treated with the respect usually attached to such dicta. The Trial Judge says: 'By his adoption Ramdas lost all rights of inheritance in his natural family as completely as if he was never born in it. Inheritance must be traced from the previous male-holders.'

It is true that his right to the property of his adoptive family accrued as if he had been born in it, and it is equally true that he lost all rights to the property of his natural family. But I think the Judge is led into a fallacy by using the words 'right of inheritance' without regard to the varying circumstances which may exist in different cases. If Narsidas had been alive in 1908 Ramdas would have lost all rights to the family property which he had as co-parcener, and all rights to succeed to any self-acquired property of Narsidas. The adoption would have put an end to those rights in the same way as if he had died, but it is quite unnecessary to add a further fiction 'as if he had never been born in the family.'

(1) 3 Ind. Cas. 809; 33 B. 669; 11 Bom. L. R. 797.

(2) 52 Ind. Cas. 695; 43 B. 774; 21 Bom. L. R. 776.

It is unfortunate that when we get within the realm of fiction the ordinary rules of logic no longer apply. If the adopted son is to be considered as having been born in his adoptive family, the ordinary result should follow that he takes the whole of his family then in existence into the adoptive family, but as I have pointed out above he does not take his sons with him, and presumably his unmarried daughters are left behind as well. There can be no difficulty with regard to the rights of the son in his father's property. If father and son are joint the son on his father's adoption succeeds by survivorship. If there are other co-parceners the result is the same. If there is a daughter unmarried she is entitled to maintenance and marriage expenses. The difficulty arises when the adopted son is the sole owner of ancestral property as Ramdas was. If he is to be treated as having civilly died in the natural family when he was adopted, the property should go to his heirs, as he was the last male-holder and not to the heirs of his fathers. If in 1908 he had died a natural death, undoubtedly, plaintiff No. 1 would have been his heiress, and if he is to be treated as dead by a fiction, there can be no possible reason for departing from the ordinary rule of devolution of property under the Hindu Law. One result of tracing descent from the next generation above would be, that if Narsidas and his brother Shankardas had been joint, as the plaintiff contended, since Shankardas survived Narsidas the property would go to his heirs and not to the heirs of Narsidas, with the result that Ramdas would have become entitled to the property as son of Bhagwandas his adoptive father, first cousin of Shankardas, in preference to his brother's son's daughter or his brother's daughter's sons. The fallacy in the passage of the judgment under review lies in the failure to recognize that Ramdas had no right of inheritance to the property of Narsidas to lose. He had already acquired it by survivorship. In Dattatraya v. Govind (3), it was held on the authority of the text of Manu, Adhyaya 1, verse No. 142. that a Hindu, the sole owner of ancestral property lost his right to the suit property on adoption, but in the case of property acquired by partition it was held in Mahableshwar v. Subramanya (4) that the suit property was not the estate of the natural father within the meaning of the above-mentioned text, and, therefore, the son was not divested of it on adoption. Consequently the question who would succeed to it if he were divested did not arise. But I expressed the opinion that then the heir of the defendant at the time of his adoption would have had to be ascertained as if he were dead.

In Dattatraya v. Govind (3) also the question was not decided as the mother of the adopted son was the heir of her son and also of the father.

Thouh there is an objection to referring to an adopted son as civilly dead in his natural family (cf., Sri Rajah Venkata Narasimha Appa Row v. Sri Rajah Rangayya Appa Row (5), I cannot see myself that there is any reason in this case for holding that the property should go to the heirs of Narsidas and not to the heirs of Ramdas.

In my opinion, therefore, plaintiff No. 1 is entitled to succeed to her father's property. There will be a decree for possession and an inquiry as to mesne profits from date of suit with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Greaves, J.—The question which arises on this Rule arises in the following manner. The petitioners before us who were plaintiffs in the suit brought a suit for accounts. On the 24th June a preliminary decree for accounts was passed in favour of the plaintiffs. The original defendant the father of the opposite parties appealed against the decree of the 24th June 1920 and on the 30th November in that year the District Judge made an order staying further proceedings pending the hearing of the appeal. The original defendant, the father of the opposite parties died on the 25th September 1921 and on the 21st February 1922 the fact of his death was brought to the notice of the Court. It is stated that the plaintiffs were not represented in those proceedings and that, accordingly, they could not come to know of the death at that time. On the 21st February 1922 an order was made that the appeal had abated and on the 3rd March 1922 the appeal was dismissed. On the 20th April 1923 records were returned to the lower Court. On the 25th May 1923 an order was made for a Commissioner to take the accounts. An order was also made at this time setting aside the abatement which was said to have occurred owing to the death of the original defendant. The learned Judge subsequently withdrew this order as he said that there was no statement in the petition as to the date of the defendant's death. At any rate on the 25th May 1923 the death of the defendant became known to the plaintiffs. On the 4th July 1923, an application for substitution of the heirs of the deceased defendant was made by the petitioners. But this was refused and subsequently this Rule was obtained. It seems to us, assuming that the death was not known to the plaintiffs until the 25th of May 1923, that they have not explained the delay that had occurred between that date and the 4th July 1923 and we think that the Court below was right in the order that it made refusing the application for substitution on the grounds which are stated in the order.

A further point, however, has been raised before us on this Rule, namely, that the case is governed by the provisions of O. XXII, r. 10 and that consequently no question of time arises and that an order should have been made setting aside the abatement. We were referred in support of this proposition to various cases reported under the old C. P. C. and under s. 368 to which corresponds O. XXII, r. 4 and to s. 372 to which corresponds O. XXII, r. 10. The case mostly relied on under the old Code was the case of Surendra Keshub Roy v. Khetter Krishto Mitter (1). In that suit it was decided on directions to take an account in a suit that the suit is still pending within the meaning of s. 372 of the C. P. C., until the final order on the taking of the account is made and that the right to apply in such a suit to have the death of a defendant recorded and the names of his heirs substituted on the record accrues from day to day and is not barred under Art. 171 of the Second Schedule of the Limitation Act and it was further decided that s. 368 which as we have stated corresponding to O. XXII, r. 4 has no application to a case like this. Under the old Code, therefore, it was held that where a preliminary decree had been passed and one of the parties subsequently died the matter fell not under s. 368 but under s. 372 and consequently we are asked to say that the present case falls not under the provisions of O. XXII, r. 4, but under the provisions of r. 10 of that Order. As against this we were referred on behalf of the opposite parties to the fact that in s. 368 of the old Code the words "before decree," occur and it is stated that the omission of these words from O. XXII, r. 4 shows that an alteration in the law was intended and that it was intended that the provisions of O. XXII, r. 4, should operate as well before as after a preliminary decree in a suit for accounts. Consequently it is argued that the provisions of O. XXII, r. 10 has no application and that the order passed by the Court below was correct and we were further referred, in support of this contention, to the case of Bhutnath Jana v Tarachand Jana (2), where it was held by a Division Bench of this Court that although a mortgagee has three years to apply for making a preliminary decree final, if the judgment-debtor died within that period the mortgagee had to apply within six months (this now being 90 days) to have his heirs substituted and that O. XXII, r. 4, applied to a case of that kind. I was inclined to think at first that the contention of the petitioners was correct and that the first four rules of O. XXII, apply to deaths occurring before a preliminary decree had been passed and that the provisions of O. XXII, r. 10 apply to the cases of deaths after passing a preliminary decree. But I think that the omission of the words in the old s. 368 of 'before decree' is very significant and that it is not possible now to say that O. XXII, r 4 does not cover a case of this nature and I am not prepared to say that the decision in the case of Bhutnath Jana v. Tarachand Jana (2) is not correct. Consequently, we think that the order of the Court below should stand and that this Rule should be discharged.

We make no order as to costs.

Mukerji, J.—I agree.

A suit was originally filed as a Small Cause by the plaintiff. On the application of the defendant it was transferred to the regular list and became a regular suit until the record was closed. The Judge, however, without recording reasons re-transferred the case back to the Small Cause Court's list and eventually dismissed the suit on the merits:

Held, that there being an order by a competent Court that the suit may be tried as a regular suit and not as a Small Cause Court suit, the Judge had no power to set aside that order and to re-transfer the case back to the Small Cause Court's list.

JUDGMENT.—This suit was originally filed as a Small Cause Court suit by the plaintiffs. On the application of the defendant it was transferred to the regular list and became a regular suit until the record was closed. For reasons which do not appear to have been stated in writing the Judge re-transferred the case back to the Small Cause Court list. He then found on the issues without giving any reasons and dismissed the suit with costs.

That procedure was clearly irregular. There having been an order by a competant Court that the suit should be tried as a regular suit and not as a Small Cause Court suit, the Court would have no power to set aside that order and transfer the case back to the Small Cause Court list. The decree, therefore, must be set aside and the case must be remanded to the Subordinate Judge to continue the hearing from the time when the wrong order was made transferring the suit to the Small Cause Court list. The Rule is made absolute with costs.

Mr. A. C. Roy, for the Appellant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts are set out in the judgments of the Courts below. There is no dispute as to them. The plaintiff brought the present suit for a declaration that the final decree passed on 14th July 1917 (in Suit No. 144 of 1910) was null and void as it had been passed without any application from the defendants to have it made final. The First Court decided in the plaintiff's favour, but on appeal this was reversed by the District Judge, Nagpur, who dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

The plaintiff makes this second appeal and raises two points.

(1) That an oral application to make the decree final is not allowed by law, and

(2) supposing it to be allowed there is no evidence whatever that any such oral application was made by the decree-holders.

Before dealing with these two points, I will consider the point raised by the learned Pleader for the respondents that the present suit to set aside a decree on a ground other than fraud is not maintainable.

The basis of the present suit is that the final decree is void for irregularity as it was made without any application from the decree-holders.

No question of jurisdiction arises in the present case, and there is no allegation of fraud.

The allegations at most amount to irregularity or illegality in the conduct of the proceedings.

The proper remedy in such a case is by way of appeal and not by separate suit. No appeal has been made against the decree sought to be set aside, and an application for review was rejected. The respondents rely on Pande Satdeo Narain v. Ramayan Tiwari (1), where it was held that although a suit does not lie to set aside an ex parte decree and a sale in execution of such decree on the ground that none of the processes in the suit or in execution were served upon the defendants, such a suit is maintainable if the allegations in the plaint amount to an attack not on the regularity or sufficiency of the service of summons or the proceedings, but on the whole suit in which the ex parte decree was obtained as being a fraud from beginning to end. At page 345* of the ruling the distinction between a void and a voidable judgment is pointed out, an irregular judgment being a voidable not a void judgment. When the Court has jurisdiction but in the exercise of the jurisdiction the Court has acted illegally or with material irregularity, the judgment is voidable and it can be vacated in an appropriate proceeding either by the Court which rendered it, or under the Code by the Appellate Court either in appeal or revision.

In the present case the Court had jurisdiction; no question of fraud arises. The contention of plaintiff is that it exercised its jurisdiction in an erroneous or irregular manner. In view of the above ruling I am of opinion that the plaintiff had a remedy by way of appeal or revision, but that a separate suit to set aside the decree will not lie.

The respondents further rely on Nanda Kumar Howladar v. Ram Jiban Howladar (2).

The present suit would further appear to be barred by limitation, being brought about six years after the date of the decree.

On the merits also the appellant has no case. The two local cases he relies on Chunnilal v. Tikamdas (3) and Vinayakrao Krishnarao v. Baijnath Saligram (4) only decide that an application for making a decree final under O. XXXIV, r. 5, C. P. C. is an application in the suit and not in execution.

The learned Pleader for the appellant has not shown by what law an application under O. XXXIV, r. 5, C. P. C., is required to be in writing, and as stated in Trimbak Bapuji v. Kashinath Vidyadhar (5), where the law does not require a writing an oral application satisfies its requirements, and where the order is such that the Court would not have made it without an application by the judgment-creditor, it may be presumed that due application had been made for it.

It is not at all probable that the Judge would have made the decree final without an application by the decree-holders' agent who was present.

It would further appear from the cases quoted by the District Judge that the matter is res judicata.

It is contended on behalf of the respondents that O. XXXIV, r. 5, does not apply to the decree in suit which was a consent decree, and that the form of a mortgage-decree was merely used for convenience. They rely on Hemendra Lal Singh Deo v. Fakir Chandra Datta (6) and on Sital Singh v. Baijnath Prasad (7). In view however of the fact that the parties accepted the decree as under O. XXXIV, r. 5, C. P. C., I do not think this position can be maintained.

In view of the findings in the previous part of this judgment that the suit will not lie, the question of res judicata is not of importance. No suit will lie to set aside the decree and no appeal has been preferred against it.

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

OUDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 29 OF 1924.

January 30, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Denials, J. C.

ABDUL GHAFOOR—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

RAM SEWAK AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Practice—Pleadings—Variance between pleadings and proof—Duty of Court.

As a general rule a Court ought not to set up on behalf of a party a new case which has not been pleaded by him. Where, however, neither party in his pleadings discloses the entire truth and the findings adduced disclose a set of facts which is either midway between, or, at any rate, different from the case which either party has set up in his pleadings, the Court is bound to take notice of the true state of facts as proved by the evidence and to give effect to the legal rights which arise on that state of facts. Appeal against a decree of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 3rd December 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, Sultanpur, dated the 20th May 1922.

Mr. Naim Ullah for Mr. Niamat Ullah, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Radha Krishan Srivastava for Mr. Haider Husain and Ali. Muhammad, for the Respondent No. 1.

Mr. S. M. Ahmad, for the Respondents Nos. 2 to 5.
